Nance takes good care of him, and when he recovers the farmer gives him a place as hired man. Things run smoothly, until Bill Watson, the village bully, resents the apparent friendship between Nance and Hal. He bullies Hal, who raising his arm to strike Watson, is suddenly confronted with a phantasmagorical scene in which he sees himself again strike down his brother-in-law. The vision renders Hal helpless. Bill, calling him a coward, kicks him. The bully's persecutions become more frequent and Nance herself is led to believe that Hal is a coward. On one occasion, however, Hal, despite the terrifying vision which floats before his eyes, recovers his manhood and puts Bill out of the way.

He knows then that the only thing for him to do is to go to the city and give himself up, so writing a note to this effect to Nance, whom he does not dare to see for fear he should weaken, he sets out. In the meantime, the blow which he has given Dick has, after all, proved not fatal, and Dick recovers. He pleads his wife's forgiveness, which she will not grant until Hal is found and cleared. Dora and Dick set out and after trailing Hal, arrive at Nance's home ,only to find out that the fugitive had gone the night before. Nance tells what she knows and Dora, realizing that the girl loves Hal, takes her along to the city. There they find Hal; his name is cleared. Dora and Dick become reunited and Nance and Hal come into their own.

THE HEART OF A VAGABOND (Santa Barbara—Two Parts).—Cold and weary, the vagabond peers into the brilliantly-lighted saloon. He hesitates a moment, and then slips in through the glass doors in search of warmth just as Dave Reilly, ward heeler, lifts a fat, diamond-covered hand and gulps a drink. The bartender, spying the vagabond, comes over and roughly puts him out in the street, while the ward heeler chuckles.

Again the vagabond finds himself roaming the wet, deserted pavements. He is seized with a fit of coughing and leans against a stone wall for support. Suddenly his eye catches the outline of a dark, deserted house behind the wall and the next moment he has vaulted the wall and let himself into a room through a window. A light suddenly flashes around the room and the vagabond finds himself facing a man, seated by a fire, his foot bandaged and resting on a stool in front of him, his hand holding an automatic gun. The vagabond pleads with his captor, assuring him his only intention was to secure a night's lodging. The man relents and the vagabond relates his early life, telling of a sister whom he has sought all over, who was placed in an orphan's asylum when a child and whom he is anxious to meet again before he dies. The man is moved by the vagabond's story and lets him go, giving him a roll of money.

Feeling weak, the vagabond again enters the saloon and buys, this time, the warmth that was denied him before. Seated in a corner he overhears Reilly and his lieutenant discuss a scheme whereby they expect a rich haul. Reilly shows the man a newspaper with a picture of a beautiful girl and an account of her arriving in town that night. The vagabond recollects having seen the same photo in the man's house, and plans to frustrate the plan. He follows the lieutenant to the depot, watches him meet the girl as she gets off the train, telling her that her father has been injured and that she was to go with him. The vagabond follows them from the station, and, although he is interrupted by a member of the gang, he gets away and catches up with them, just as the girl is being led into the rear of the saloon. He breaks in on them and is able to get a few words of explanation to the girl before it is too late. He pays for his interference with a mortal wound, but the girl is saved and the vagabond is taken to the man's home to spend his last few hours. There, the man offers to take up the vagabond's search for his sister, and the vagabond makes his last statement. The man, learning the name of the city and other details, finds that the girl is no other than his adopted daughter, whom the vagabond has rescued.

THE FRAME UP (Monty—Two Parts).—Everett Sanderson, governor of one of the richest states in the Union, is entering upon a campaign for a second term. He has been prominently identified in prosecuting the trusts and large interests with the result that a bill which would seriously cripple them has just passed the legislature and is up to the governor to sign or veto.

William Camden, representative of the money powers, calls upon the governor and offers to nor, will promise to veto the bill against the combines. The governor refuses, and Camden assumes a threatening attitude. Ralph Blake, the governor's secretary, overhears Camden's promise to ruin the governor just as he is about to enter the office. Camden, about to pass him on the way out, conceives the idea of having Ralph for a confederate and gives him a roll of money with the offer of more if he will call at his office and keep him acquainted with the governor's plans. Ralph pretends to agree and, from time to time, calls upon Camden, giving him erroneous information.

The crisis of the campaign is reached. Camden, fearing that after all he will be unable to defeat Sanderson, sends for Ralph and reveals a plot to compromise and expose the governor through the papers. He explains a plan whereby an accomplice (an adventuress) will call upon Sanderson and force herself into his arms, Camden, meanwhile having concealed a newspaper reporter with a flashlight camera in the hall adjoining. Ralph's part is to secure an entrance into the executive mansion first for the adventuress and then for Camden and the paper man. Again Ralph pretends to agree to Camden's plans, though secretly he worries over some way to frustrate them.

The day following Ralph receives a message from Dorothy, the governor's daughter, saying that she is leaving for the Capitol at once, but doesn't want her father to know it until she arrives and surprises him. That night Ralph meets the adventuress and has her abducted, reporting to Camden that she has failed to appear. Camden at first is furious, but Ralph assures him he can secure another girl to take the place of the adventuress. Ralph has just time to meet Dorothy's train and in a few words he explains the situation to her and gets her consent to aid him. Ralph takes Dorothy to Camden, where final instructions are given, then to the State house, where he conceals her in her father's office. Camden and the reporter arrive and are placed in the reception hall. Finally the governor arrives and takes his seat at his desk. At a given signal Dorothy emerges from her hiding place and, crossing over to her father, throws her arms around him and he, delighted to see his daughter, returns the embrace. The flashlight is taken, and Camden enters the office to confront the governor.

Sanderson is at first amazed at Camden's accusation, then a few words from Ralph and Dorothy remove the mystery. Camden retires in confusion in time to meet the waiting policemen in the hall. The governor, in appreciation of Ralph's services, gives his consent to his engagement to Dorothy.

A TALE OF THE HILLS (Paragon—Two Parts).—Ben Harding, mountaineer, moonshiner and head of the Harding faction, leads his men in a final battle against the Sterlings, a family feud having existed between the two clans for many years. Harding's daughter, Dot, sees Bob Sterling, now sole survivor of his clan, fall and drag himself into the bushes. She goes to him, bandages up his wounds and secretly brings him supplies until he finally is on the road to recovery.

Jim Stone, a newly-appointed revenue officer, arrives for the purpose of raiding the moonshiners. To gain their confidence, he warns the mountaineers of the impending attack, arranges a fake raid, and thus gains their gratitude and is made one of them. He studies their secret hiding places and methods of work and incidentally falls in love with Harding's daughter, Dot.

Bob finds a message in a stump of a tree near his retreat which Stone has placed there for his men. He reads it, and tells Dot about it, but she refuses to believe Stone guilty. Bob offers to take her to the tree and show her the note, but one of Stone's men has preceded them and when the two arrive the note is gone. Dot, thereupon, turns from Bob in scorn. She accepts Stone's attentions and Bob, following the two more or less through jealousy and suspicion, overhears them make an appointment to meet at the crossroads on the way to the village at ten o'clock.

After Dot leaves, Bob shadows Stone to the place where his officers await him and overhears Stone give instructions to raid the moonshiner's cabin at nine-thirty. Bob hurries to the moonshiner's home and confronts Harding with what he has heard. At first Harding is tempted to shoot Sterling as a member of the despised clan, but his men prevail on him to wait. Stone calls and Bob is introduced to him as a visitor.

At last the first shot of the revenue men is heard outside, and the next moment, Harding has fired another shot, killing Stone immediately. Together Bob and Harding fight off the revenue men, until by a desperate effort, they break through the door, get on their horses and gallop off into the darkness. At the crossroads Dot awaits Stone and only a few words to Dot are necessary to put matters straight. Bob swings her on to his saddle and over the ridge, silhouetted against the night sky, ride Harding, Dot and Bob to a new land.

THE KEEPER OF THE FLOCK (Two Parts—Santa Barbara). -Tom Sanford, law student, and William Barstow, student for the ministry, are inseparable chums. Tom has wealth and is rather wild. William, on the contrary, is working his way through college and is industrious and sober. Both are in love with Louise Wentworth, who admires and respects William but is fascinated by the reckless Tom. William, who is broken in health through overstudy, goes West to regain his health, and takes up sheep herding. He does not write his friends of his pinched circumstances and correspondence ceases.

After a quarrel with Louise, Tom goes West to visit a prosperous uncle who owns a ranch. The wild life of the cowboys appeals to him and he becomes a general favorite. During a sort of feud between the sheep owners and cattlemen, Tom, in a drunken spree, takes a shot at a lone sheep herder, intending only to frighten him. The shot tells, however, and Tom returns East to avoid trouble. He intends to confess his crime to Louise and break their engagement, but hasn't the courage and they are married. However, the thought of his crime continually torments Tom and he becomes morose and neglectful and again takes to liquor. At their son's christening, while gazing abstractedly at a stained glass window back of the altar showing "Christ, the Good Shepherd," the picture suddenly fades away to a vision of the actual Christ with a lamb in his arms and then fades slowly into a vision of his victim, and to his horror the face revealed is that of his old time chum, William Barstow. Conscience stricken, he rushes from the church to the consternation of all present and hastens back to the scene of his crime, where it is reported to him that William Barstow had only been wounded by the shot, has recovered and was now a pastor in a modest little church in the community. Tom searches for him and they become reconciled.

The terrible mental torture of the last few months proves too much for Tom's debauched vitality and he goes over the Divide in the house of his friend, requesting that he be laid to rest in the quiet church yard on the hill. William breaks the sad news to Tom s wife, but feeling that his life is consecrated to the people who nursed him back to health, he remains at the little pastorate in the Western village. A few years later, after steady correspondence, Louise consents to share his ministry and she and her little son join the "Shepherd."

SYD THE BUM DETECTIVE (Alhambra).—Syd is dolling up in his room preparatory to calling on his girl, to whom he intends popping the question. So confused is he that he picks up a mirror and tries to comb his hair with it, at the same time endeavoring to see himself in a comb. Then, trying to look as businesslike as possible, he places a cigar behind his ear and a pencil in his mouth; he tries to light the pencil, burns his fingers, and after a lot of raving finally gets started, hanging his cane from his coat pocket.

On the way to his sweetheart, he tips his hat to a telegraph pole, thinking it an acquaintance, and at last reaches the girl's house. The maid who answers the doorbell hands out a tray for his card and he gallantly places a coin on it, at which the girl laughs, taking the coin, and asks Syd whom he wishes to see. He replies he would like to see Miss Slocum, and the maid, taking Syd for a "nut," replies that Miss Slocum is engaged just now. Syd replies, "I'm what she's engaged to," and pushing the maid aside, walks into the parlor, seats himself. His collar being rather tight, he gasps and tries to loosen it. The maid passing by thinks he is choking and hastens in with a glass of water. Syd looks at it and, removing the flower from his coat, places it in the water. Finally, Miss Slocum enters the room and extends her hand to Syd, who promptly removes his hat and cane and hangs them on her hand, and Miss Slocum hands them to the maid, who retires.

Syd asks her to be seated, and she bashfully sits beside him. They are both confused and each looks in the opposite direction, but finally Syd plucks up enough courage to reach out for Miss Slocum's hand, but she having her legs crossed, he grabs her foot instead. She screams and faints and Syd, not knowing what to do, gets a cigar out of his pocket and pokes it in her face. This being ineffectual, he removes his flower from the glass and throws the water in her face. She revives slowly, and Syd gets on his knees and begs her to be his wife. She tells him first to read a column in the newspaper in which a reward is offered for the capture of a crook who has made six daring daylight robberies in a week and says she will only marry him if he is sucessful in finding this crook. Syd holds up his head and assures her he is a great sleuth, and before another day has passed she will consent to be his wife. As he goes out, he flicks the ashes from his cigar into the maid's extended hand and then struts out in search of the thief.

After walking a short distance, he comes on a doctor going out on a case and immediately comes to the conclusion that he is the thief. He stops him, telling him he is a great detective, but the busy doctor hits him over the head with his grip and gives poor Syd a kick that sends him flying down the street. Finally, after stumbling along, he looks carefully about him to see he is not being followed, then feeling somewhat overheated, he removes his hat and takes out his handkerchief, mops his forehead, places the handkerchief on his head and is about to put the hat in his pocket when he realizes his mistake, and changes them quickly, kicking himself in the shins for being so absentminded, and walks dejectedly off.

TRUE FEATURES.

THE GEMS OF FOSCARINA (Three Parts and a Prologue).—The story tells of the adventures of an Italian nobleman in the time of the Venetian republic. He was denounced as a traitor to the Council of Ten and had to flee for his life. He took the family treasure with him, burying it in an old well in the courtyard of a neighboring village.

The prologue, which tells of this adventure, is provided with titles in the old Venetian script harmonizing with the costumes and the buildings of the day. Centuries elapsed between the prologue and the story proper. The latter is laid in modern Venice.

A descendent of the Italian nobleman, a beautiful woman named Foscarina, comes back to the halls of her ancestors and quite by accident discovers the secret of the buried family jewels. A prowling band of outlaws hears about the existence of the jewels at the same time and by a series of clever maneuvres gets possession of the precious heirlooms. Foscarina thereupon engages the services of a world-famous detective named Argo to ferret out the Wildoers and to recover the property. A keen battle of the wits ensues, first the plotters gain an advantage and then the detective overmatches them, but the end finds justice triumphant. The gems are found and restored to the owner, while the schemers are turned over to the police.

"DON'T YOUR EYES HURT YOU?"

Is this expression often heard as the audience leaves your house? If it is, take warning. It may be your machines are not running smoothly; it is more than likely your patrons have been straining their eyes, trying to see clearly, dull and indistinct pictures, the whites of which were yellow or muddy and the actors hazy and blurred in their actions. Your patrons want the clear, clean cut, sharply defined pictures, easy to see on the

The Arc Controller

HAS MADE FRIENDS

Nicholas Power Co.
OF NEW YORK

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

5th December 1914.

Speed Controller Company, Inc.,
259 William Street,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

It gives us great pleasure to congratulate you upon the success of your Arc Controller.

We can vouch for its utility toward the improvement of projection, for we have seen it in practical operation in moving picture theatres, and are using one here for our own purposes, with absolute satisfaction.

We shall be glad to include it with sales of our projector whenever it is possible.

Yours very truly,
Nicholas Power

President.

MINA FILMS

Add these new comedies to your program. They are not imitations of another successful brand—they are original in conception, funny and clean and different.

Watch for the big things that are coming—pictures that will standardize a new style—a daring departure that will make MinA the most talked of films on earth. This is not an idle prophecy, but a promise you can bank on!

You Can Avoid Lens Troubles Very Easily

Every "movie" man knows that losses surely follow lens troubles. And every one who has installed this superior lens outfit knows they stop with the installation of

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

You get steady, distinct pictures without flicker or blur—the kind the public like and pay to see.

Wise operators and owners are giving more and more attention to lens outfits—and with every comparison the Bausch and Lomb objectives and condensers win a more firmly established reputation as the standard.

The Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly equipped with Bausch & Lomb Lenses

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

Thanhouser Tidings

Here are two Thanhouser photoplays that will appeal to your audiences, Mr. Exhibitor. They are released exclusively through the Mutual Film Corporation in the United States and Canada. Book these business-building attractions at the nearest Mutual Exchange.

"$1,000 REWARD"

One Reel

Released Friday, February 26th

A stirring drama featuring Marion and Madeline Fairbanks (the lovable Thanhouser Twins). Cast also includes Carey L. Hastings and Minnie Berlin. This fascinating production depicts the chain of thrilling events by which a brave girl "newsie" saves the home of her wealthy benefactors from robbery by one of her old under-world enemies, and gains comfortable independence for herself and her family.

"A Newspaper Nemesis"

One Reel

Released Sunday, February 28th

Everybody admires the girl reporter. This drama in which the wit and courage of Molly Sayre brings a murderer to justice and incidentally wins a scoop for the paper and a husband for herself, teems with new startling situations that will hold any audience breathless. Peggy Burke plays Molly Sayre, and Harris Gordon fills the role of Sergeant Grant, the police hero.

PRINCESS FILMS

Friday, February 26th, "ON ACCOUNT OF A DOG," with Reenie Farrington and Boyd Marshall; a comedy brimming with mirth and merriment.

Selig

Don't whisper like a gentle zephyr in your advertising. Announce Selig programs and create a roaring cyclone of interest.—SELIG SNAPSHOTS.

FOR MONDAY, MARCH 1, AN ABSORBING TWO-REEL WESTERN DRAMA

A CHILD OF THE PRAIRIE

A lively, snappy Pictureplay, written and directed by TOM MIX, whose thrilling "stunts" on horseback and other typical western portrayals are never lacking in interest. The story is of a treacherous gambler, who steals the wife and child of a young rancher (Tom Mix) and carries them away. In the escape from Tom's vengeance, the child is abandoned on the prairie. She grows into a beautiful young woman and becomes reunited with her father. In a spirited revolver duel, Tom kills the gambler and avenges his honor.

RELEASED EVERY MONDAY AND EVERY THURSDAY

For MONDAY, MARCH 1, No. 17 For THURSDAY, MARCH 4, No. 18

A SELIG WESTERN DRAMA

The Man from Texas

RELEASED TUESDAY, MARCH 2 ONE REEL

An unusually interesting picture, full of "punch" and typical of events in the far west when lawless conditions prevailed. TOM MIX and his spirited western riders give an exceptionally interesting portrayal of characters in a manner true to life. There is horseback riding, shooting, etc., with a love-story running through the picture.

A SELIG DRAMA

The Missing Ruby

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3 ONE REEL

BESSIE EYTON cleverly and prettily portrays the part of an alert woman detective. An uncut ruby, a wedding present, disappears in a mysterious manner, and everybody tries to find it. Bessie solves the mystery and confounds a host of other investigators. THOMAS SANTSCHI directed the production.

A SELIG FARCE COMEDY

The Kidnapped Lover

RELEASED FRIDAY, MARCH 5 ONE REEL

JOHN LANCASTER and ELSIE GREESON, supported by other members of the Selig Comedy Company create a lot of fun and enjoyment out of the story of a spoiled heiress who is disappointed unless every young man falls in love with her. Her father attempts to cure her and precipitates a wedding.

A SELIG JUNGLE-ZOO WILD ANIMAL COMEDY

The Guardian's Dilemma

RELEASED SATURDAY, MARCH 6 ONE REEL

One of the most enjoyable Jungle-Zoo productions, featuring a host of the justly celebrated Selig wild animal actors. An animal trainer falls in love with the ward of a gruff old fellow. The trainer turns loose his pets in the guardian's garden. They tree the old man, who capitulates in order to be released.

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 6

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

If we were to place our interest ahead of our exhibitors, we would play Robert Warwick in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" in picked theatres throughout the country, at admission prices of from 50c to $1.00, and skim the cream of the pulling power off the picture, before it was put on the World Film Program.

Robert Warwick in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" is one of the greatest plays that has ever been filmed and will be one of the biggest money makers that our exhibitors have ever shown.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine" is Paul Armstrong's greatest play and on the stage, all through the country, played to packed houses at $2.00 prices.

All the strength and reputation of the author of the play is behind the film and the film itself is greater than it was on the stage. It has also the pulling power of the name of Robert Warwick.

Remember the crowds that came to see Robert Warwick in "The Dollar Mark," Robert Warwick in "The Man of the Hour," and you will realize how much stronger this great play will be, with all these features to draw upon.

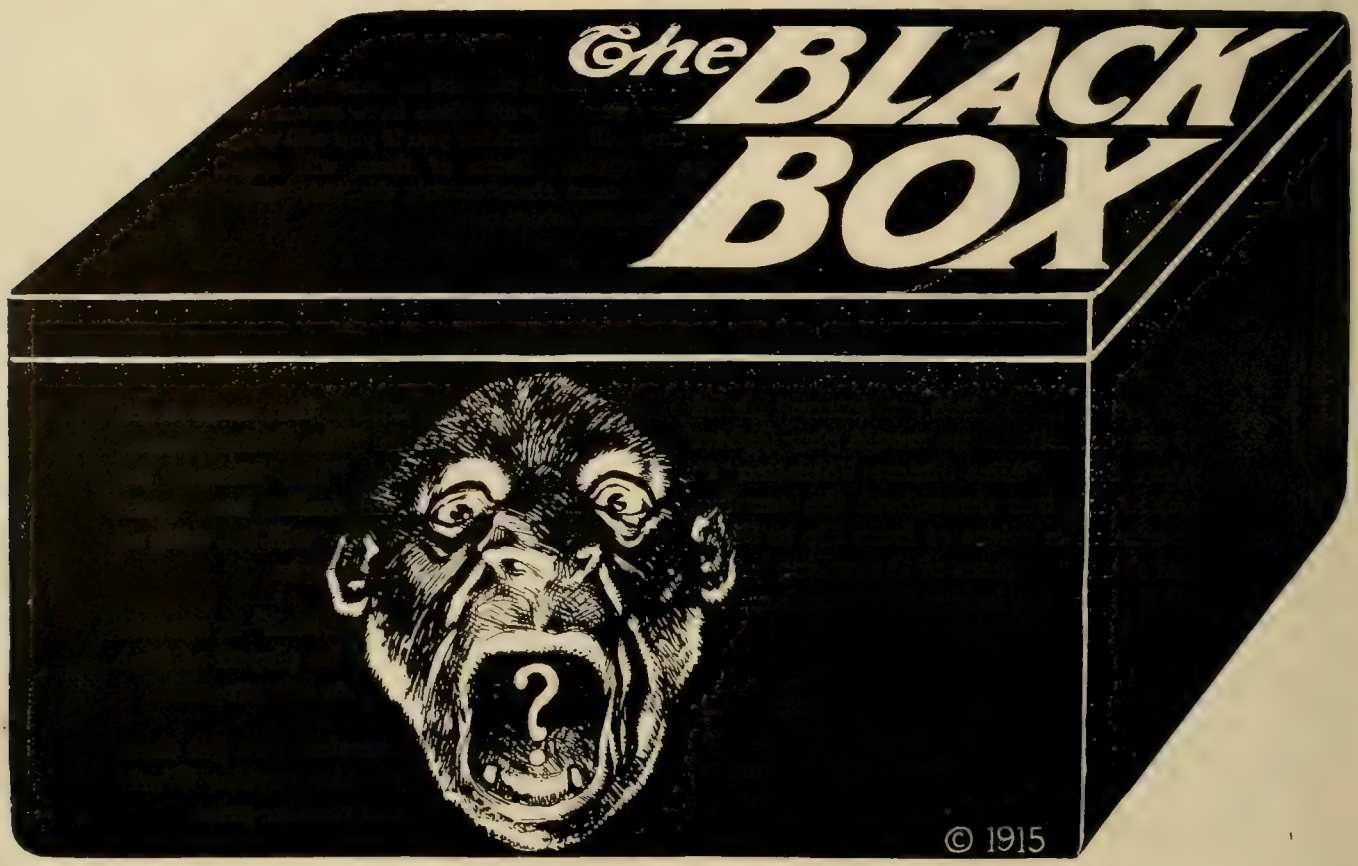
Lew Fields in "Old Dutch" is another great play that could be played at high prices before it went on our program.

Yet, in quick succession, you get these two great plays on the regular World Film program, at the regular price.

Nothing that we could do or say can prove to you more clearly the advantage of the exhibitor who has a yearly contract with the World Film and who gets the greatest plays that can be produced, at the same price every week.

Our list of coming releases is proof of my statement that World Film offers to exhibitors a greater percentage of successful plays than any other film concern.

The Whole Country is talking about



Millions of People will see it!

It's the most remarkable serial in all the history of the Film Business

Thousands of Exhibitors are going to reap a harvest with this stupendous serial of 15 weeks by

and over 5000 newspapers will run the story

BOOK IT NOW

You've never had such a smashing opportunity in all your history as an Exhibitor to CLEAN UP as you have right now if you BOOK THE BLACK BOX. You've never seen such advertising—such general publicity—such remarkable helps for the Exhibitor as prepared for THE BLACK BOX. We promise that this stupendous serial will thrill your audiences as they have never been thrilled before—will entertain them as never known in the history of serial photo-plays. Thousands of newspapers all over America will publish the entire story of the BLACK BOX. You can arrange with your Editor right now to get the story from Otis F. Woods, 17 West 38th Street, New York City. You can get the advantages of the greatest campaign of ads ever known in the film business. There are more possibilities—greater possibilities and positively the most colossal opportunity to GET THE MONEY with the Black Box than any Exhibitor has ever dreamed of. The Exhibitor who cries—"Why didn't I get in on the Black Box"—after this serial is over NEEDN'T cry about "Not getting in" if he BOOKS THE BLACK BOX RIGHT NOW.

Here's a serial that stands absolutely supreme in every detail. Written by the highest salaried mystery writer in the entire world, Mr. E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM. Produced in the world's greatest studios at Universal City, Cal. Directed by the "Daddy" of all motion picture directors, Mr. Otis Turner. Backed by the mightiest organization in the business, The Universal Film Mfg. Co. Millions of people in all parts of the world will see this wonderful serial. Millions of people will be enthralled with its immensity, its strangeness, its thrills, its wonders. If you had gold dollars handed you on a silver platter, you couldn't, you wouldn't find it any more difficult to pick them off than you'll find it easy to pick off the coin with THE BLACK BOX. If you haven't booked the Black Box, don't waste ten seconds' time. Race to your nearest Telegraph office and WIRE your Exchange for booking. Release date March 8th. If you are situated so that you can call your Exchange on long distance—CALL THEM and tell them that YOU want the Black Box for your House. The supreme opportunity awaits you. It's up to you.

Speed and Suspense in Edison Weekly Feature

Second of the Feature Films

"On the Stroke of Twelve"

Featuring

Gertrude McCoy, Richard Tucker and Bigelow Cooper

(Released in Regular Service Friday, March 12—3000 feet)

Carlton King as Mr. Foo

Young romance entangled with damning evidence in a midnight murder mystery wraps this super-suspense drama into a class of detective plays too seldom seen. The playwright—the same one who wrote that bristling, speedy, "What Could She Do?" outdoes herself in building a plot with a mastery of thrilling suspense and mystifying endings—craved by the most blase of audiences. It keeps up the pace and high power of the first feature, "In Spite of All," that has tuned up the Edison program with a will and a thrill.

Carlton King's Masterful Portrayal in

"The Mission of Mr. Foo"

Into this drama of high Chinese intrigue has been breathed an oriental atmosphere of color that heightens the suspense as we follow the wily, cunning Chinese nobleman inveigle a beautiful pure American girl. The plot worms its way through high Washington official life in its underground uncanny setting to the close, strong and dramatically truthful.

Herbert Prior and Bessie Learn in

"The Family Bible"

(Released March 13—1000 feet)

One of those wholesome, highly absorbing dramas of parent devotion, tragic fate and family honor revolving around the providential part the family's Sacred Book takes in it. Bessie Learn wins heartfelt sympathy as the sweet, trusting daughter.

All Edison Films are passed upon by the National Board of Censorship and released through the General Film Co.'s Program.

The New Edison Slap Stick Tickles

Laughable "Waddy and Arty"

(Seriously, Wadsworth and Housman)

In "Rooney, the Bride"

(Released March 8—1000 feet)

Inimitable, changeful-face "Waddy" grins out of his bridal attire with irresistible rib-tickling designs as "Rooney, the Bride," while "Arty" Housman's never-say-die determination to marry him and get the coin provide a rich situation and a splendid excuse for letting these comedians loose. A whole dozen of these new and funny "Waddy and Arty" comedies are now on tap. Book 'em and cash in on this team.

Herbert Prior and Jessie Stevens

In a richly funny Mark Swan Comedy

"A PIPE DREAM"

(Released March 10—1000 feet)

A pipingly full bowl of fun this "Pipe Dream" smokes up when those originally funny two, Jessie Stevens and Herbert Prior, get to pulling the laughs out of it.

As a bachelor gone mad and marrying a quarter-ton wife with relatives who greet him with open arms and empty stomachs, this comedy strikes the funny spot with bull's-eye accuracy.

Herbert Prior in "The Pipe Dream"

Walter E. Perkins, ridiculously droll in his original role, is seen in the three-part, "My Friend from India," the comedy-drama that tickled bored old Broadway to guffaws of appreciation. "Fantasma," Hanlon Brothers' famous fantasy, will do the business for you as it did fortwenty-seven years for the Hanlon Brothers. In 5 parts. "Fantasma" needs no heavy advertising. It is as well known as the circus, greeted as warmly and as eternal in drawing power. Both films now ready and had through the special masterpiece service of the General Film Company.

Facts and Comments

ONE of the most specious arguments advanced by the advocates of "State" censorship is the claim that "it does away with local censorship." An argument of this sort proceeds from a peculiarly dense ignorance of the political structure and organization of our states. The state may assume exclusive jurisdiction of any matter within the limits of the police power, but unless the statute expressly and in terms divests the individual units composing the state of jurisdiction the smallest self-governing community in the state may regulate the subject matter in any way it sees fit provided it does not clash with the state law on the same subject. State censorship in Ohio has not abolished local censorship in any of the communities with a home rule charter. The men behind the present law tried to have exclusive jurisdiction vested in the state, but they failed utterly. Nothing more is needed than a "wave of agitation" in any of the larger cities and they may enact ordinances even more drastic than the state law. They cannot make the state law more lenient, but they can make it harder if they feel so inclined. Just as a state constabulary may exist with local police and just as state licenses may exist with local licenses even so local censorship may exist with state censorship. If exclusive state censorship could be obtained it would at best be a lesser evil, but it has so far not been obtained anywhere. Any man who has been in a state legislature either as a member or a newspaper correspondent must know that attempts to centralize authority of any kind in the state is always sure to encounter the most vigorous opposition whether the legislature is Democratic or Republican.

A METHODIST Preachers' Meeting recently held in this city made two tremendous discoveries, and the press has duly announced them. The clergymen found out "firstly" that Mayor Mitchel dances the tango and "secondly" that we must have federal censorship for motion pictures. One of the reverend gentlemen who participated in this remarkable achievement in the cause of religion gave utterance to the following statement: "I am convinced from the extraordinary number of drinking and smoking scenes in the photoplays that the tobacco and liquor interests are paying the producers of the films to insert such things into their photoplay." We beg to inform the reverend speaker that an approach of the tobacco interests was sharply rebuffed by the exhibitors of the country, though it was accompanied by alluring inducements to promote the sale of cigarettes. Everybody knows that the motion picture has been the most powerful antagonist of the saloon and has led to wholesale closing of them in many sections of the country. We would advise this pessimistic person to give his imagination a vigorous shampoo.

OKLAHOMA has a reputation for what is known as "radical legislation," which might be called by a harsher name. The lower house of the legislature of this infant state has passed a pretty thoroughgoing bill against certain kinds of motion pictures. It is not a censorship law, for it does not attempt to impose any restraint previous to releasing. It prohibits the showing of pictures which portray any violation of any law whatsoever. Thus to show a man on the screen in the act of taking out an unlicensed dog for an airing would be an offense in Oklahoma and subject the exhibitor to arrest and prosecution. We rather think that there is a little politics in this proposed legislation. A former trainrobber and convict in Oklahoma came very near becoming the governor of that interesting commonwealth, and his political opponents are now in power. It seems to us that we remember a picturization of the interesting career of this reformed citizen. Evidently the political enemies of the man object to his being further advertised in his home state.

TO AID in the fight against censorship THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will send the text for a dozen effective anti-censorship slides to any reader upon request and without charge. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will send slides with the texts to any reader upon request and at flat cost. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will send free to any reader a short catechism of censorship. The text of this catechism is well condensed and easily read. It is suitable for distribution among your audience. If you feel as we do, that censorship in any form or under any pretense is wrong, and is bound to hurt the motion picture industry, here is your chance to do some valuable missionary work with no expense to you.

Thought and Emotion

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

A GREAT journalist, whose career has just ended, once served nobly on our Civil Service Commission. He resigned because he could not carry out his ideals of efficient service, and he left for his successor a few verses by Sir Henry Wotton:

"How happy is he born and taught
Who serveth not another's will;
Whose armor is his honest thought
And simple truth his utmost skill.
That man is freed from servile bonds
Of hope to rise or fear to fall,
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all."

There is a splendid theme. There is crystallized an ideal for which many are striving, one in accord with Americanism and with President Wilson's New Freedom. There is the thought on which one might build a splendid characterization. I am using the verses to illustrate how some great thought may be injected into screen visualizations otherwise spineless, for thought is the backbone of every story, no matter how simple, how sweet, how amusing, how tragic—it braces the entire structure.

One of the purposes of a story, whether it be told in print, on the screen or on the stage, is to happily combine what involves the interest of man through the emotions and at the same time stimulates the finer qualities of his mind. In rather poor illustration is an appetizer that quickens feeling and food that completely satisfies the aroused desire. Deep in every manly man's character lies resentment of wrong, injustice, oppression. He rebels against abuse of power, against the rule of force, against all that tends to repress his honest purpose and that simple truth of expression which constitutes his utmost skill. It is the underlying thought that rouses his emotion.

This new art of expression with which we are dealing has sprung from the womb of our evolution and has progressed by strides and leaps until its capabilities are simply limited by our own. It is already picturing our abstract love of life, our desire to live happily. It is depicting our varied methods of existence, sensing our instincts of danger, portraying tragic and humorous phases of our universal experience. It is bound to survive while there is action and movement on earth, and it is just as sure to be a social agent in determining civilization. As the expression of ourselves, as a mirror of our complex struggle, it must probe deep into human motive and become at once our reflex and our inspiration.

Throwing light on every strata of society, portraying every phase of existence, the art of screen representation must soon feel the throes of tremendous change in human affairs. It must become part of what is going on and play a role in social reconstruction. Strong photodramas most naturally kindle emotion, but they are sure to reach the mind through the heart or the heart through the mind, so closely interwoven are emotional sensibility and the mental state. It is the sensation we feel that develops an ideational change. Our feelings may be stirred by external sensation or by internal ideas that have the power of exciting them, but it is the unified appeal that reaches profound depths of human nature.

The absence of idea in screen plays has more than a dull, negative effect. An expectant audience, given an appetizer of preparation with no food for thought to follow, is bound to experience disappointment verging on resentment. We all know that we can be mentally hurt quite as well as physically wounded. We sit in a darkened auditorium watching the bright screen portrayal with close attention—all our mental faculties alert, our hearts beating with generous hope, only to be shown a lot of old dramatic material that is worn out so far as modern people of intelligence are concerned.

We are not even given the pleasure of contemplating a noble characterization, such as that of the man who is "freed from servile bonds of hope to rise or fear to fall," who dares be himself uncorrupted by the temptations of "easy money," unterrified by the slave-driving methods of low caste employers. Amateurish desire to portray action, action which starts from nothing in particular and leads to nothing of moment, does not unveil motive, depict character, nor illuminate our minds in any way. It stirs neither feeling nor thought, and it does not therefore realize the drama of our ideals.

The finest material for a dramatist is of ourselves and of the age in which we live, not in old stories that contain nothing vital to present-day interest. "Yet Hath All" as the title of a powerful photodrama might easily depict a type purely American, the man who works hard for small consideration and earns a degree of happiness in spite of farcical laws, corrupt politicians, and unfair social treatment, through being Lord of Himself, the most superb creature on earth.

That we have few good plays is less due to scarcity of capable authors than to bad methods and poor quality of selection at the studios. Our screen literature is less a question of poor authorship than of incapable choice. Any one of the dozen men who have written successful photoplays will affirm that it is easier to market the mediocre that the superior class of product, and no distinction is made that provides higher remuneration to authors for what meets with the universal approval of press and public, than for the worst releases shown.

This is partly due to forced methods of distribution and to the exactions of calendar releases, but back of it all is non-recognition of our intelligence and progressive spirit as a people. The public suffers and through them the exhibitor. The people may be led by poster promises over and over again to the muddy waters of theatrical inanity, but they will sicken of it all and turn to where they may get some pure draught of refreshing entertainment, before another year has passed. Progressive producers, men who are alive to the necessity of change, will devise new methods of distribution for screen presentations that are really worth seeing. Keep this in mind.

The greatest purpose of any art is to reach after truth that it may be made known to all and not remain the exclusive possession of a few enlightened beings. It is absurd that we should be separated from one another by false ideas, such as those which are driving millions of brave and honest men to slaughter and misery in Europe. We know they are clashing with their own best interests and that their vaunted principles cause more harm than good. Relief can only be made permanent through the dissemination of knowledge, through the elimination of false and narrow ideas which keep so many millions in subjection to a few self-elected individuals. Their minds are not empty. They are all thinking and are all under strain of high emotion, but they are reasoning from a limited quantity and poor quality of knowledge and their conclusions are practically useless as guides to action. Through that humble medium, "the movies," may truth prevail.

Are We Outlaws?

By W. Stephen Bush.

AT THIS time when the legislatures of most states are in session it is raining bills affecting motion picture interests. To judge by the raft of measures proposed for the regulation and control of motion picture theatres and motion picture producers it would seem that our whole industry is viewed with suspicion by the lawmakers in every state. We are looked upon as a class of people especially in need of close supervision. The legislative rosters fairly bristle with "reforms" and "restraints" intended for our special benefit. In the great commonwealth of Massachusetts, for example, there are at this moment no less than fifty measures directly and solely affecting the motion picture theatre and the motion picture men. Most of this and similar proposed legislation relates to censorship, but censorship is by no means the only form of legislative hostility. Impossible building codes are proposed. Attempts are made to regulate by the letter of the law every movement of the operator while he is running his machine. One man wants aisles three and four and five feet in width. Another solon wants the exhibitor to be acquainted with the parents and guardians of every minor who wants to get past the ticket office.

One state wants to impose higher license fees. Another state puts forth a law which would bar every portrayal of human events from the moving picture screen. Everywhere in the legislatures there seems to be a presumption against the motion picture and a presumption in favor of restraint and repression. While the hue and cry in the press has largely subsided and is growing fainter all the time, the lawmakers still consider the motion picture man as their best target.

How much of all this proposed legislation is inspired by honest motives we have no means of knowing. It is fair to assume that a certain percentage of all these bills are so-called "strike-bills," pure and simple. Many others have been introduced to satisfy some fanatical constituents of weak-kneed statesmen. Whatever the motives may be, we cannot afford to ignore the menace to the industry. We cannot afford to let any of these measures be enacted into laws by default. We must strike back. We must with all the means at our disposal oppose this legislation and fight the vicious spirit which lurks in it. We must refuse to be singled out as an "easy mark" or as a "tainted class." We are not only engaged in a most legitimate profession, but in a most useful one. The motion picture has become a medium for good second to none. The motion picture reaches more people and impresses them more deeply than either the press, the pulpit, the school or the library.

In point of intelligence and integrity the men in the motion picture industry compare well with the men who constitute the average quality of any profession or any commercial pursuit. The ethics of the motion picture and of the men connected with the motion picture average well; we stand on a much higher plane than we did eight or nine years ago. The leading producers have a keen sense of their responsibility to the public. This fact is attested daily on the screen. We do not claim that there is no room for improvement, but this much we do claim emphatically: An industry which has in spite of all difficulties and inherent handicaps advanced as rapidly as ours in the morale of its pictures and the morale of its men may be trusted to take care of itself in the future without any aid or interference from reformers in and out of the legislature.

Public opinion is no longer against us. There is not a community anywhere in the United States where the people have not gained confidence in the picture and in the men behind the picture. I believe in a campaign on the screen, but I believe likewise in a campaign of example. The greater confidence of the public has come as a result of the conduct and the example of exhibitors in every part of the country.

The mass of hostile legislation and the lawmaker's assumption that we must be regulated has its source in the old bigoted spirit of the British law, which looked upon the actor as a vagrant and upon the theatre as an unlawful institution which might be licensed like a saloon or a dance hall, but which could never be made quite respectable. In the eyes of the British law Shakespeare was a vagrant. The great bard took his revenge upon Puritan hypocrisy and tyranny when he wrote "Measure for Measure"; but the Puritan spirit lived after he was dead and it still lives. All things considered, it is stronger today on our side of the water than in England. The Puritan notion that we must regulate the personal conduct of our neighbor and bring it into conformity with ours as a sacred duty to God is still prevalent in New England and it crops out occasionally in other parts of the country. The Puritan delight in pains and penalties and in punishing the sins of others is abroad even at this day. We are all affected by it, more or less, whether we descend from colonial or revolutionary ancestors or whether we are just plain ordinary Americans.

Until we succeed in emancipating ourselves from these antiquated and narrow prejudices the theatre as well as the motion picture will always suffer from attempts at special legislation and from too much attention at the hands of long-haired men and short-haired women. We must all work together to modernize the spirit of the law. The spirit of the present laws toward amusements of all kinds lags behind the great change that has come over public opinion generally. Intelligent men and women, indeed the best elements in every community, regard amusements not only as legitimate but as useful and necessary. In the case of the motion picture the educational value rises up as a great argument in favor of broad, liberal and modern treatment. There is nothing "vagrant" about the men who make, distribute and exhibit pictures. Statistics vouched for by the Federal Government proclaim the motion picture industry as the fourth in magnitude.

The motion picture is entitled to the favor and friendship of a sound and enlightened statesmanship by reason of the fact that it is the amusement of the masses, or to use a better and a more American term, of the plain people. In substance and in form ours is a democratic form of government, whose chief concern ought to be the welfare of the plain people. To interfere with a form of entertainment which is as democratic as the motion picture is a very bungling sort of statesmanship.

I cannot conclude these lines without warning exhibitors everywhere against following the example of Ohio, where the men engaged in the exhibiting business, or at least a majority of their organization, went on record as feeling the need of censorship. If we ourselves proclaim the industry as "unclean" and in need of a bill of health from the state, we have no right to protest against intolerant and confiscatory legislation.

That man is freed from servile bonds
Of hope to rise or fear to fall,
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all."

There is a splendid theme. There is crystallized an ideal for which many are striving, one in accord with Americanism and with President Wilson's New Freedom. There is the thought on which one might build a splendid characterization. I am using the verses to illustrate how some great thought may be injected into screen visualizations otherwise spineless, for thought is the backbone of every story, no matter how simple, how sweet, how amusing, how tragic—it braces the entire structure.

One of the purposes of a story, whether it be told in print, on the screen or on the stage, is to happily combine what involves the interest of man through the emotions and at the same time stimulates the finer qualities of his mind. In rather poor illustration is an appetizer that quickens feeling and food that completely satisfies the aroused desire. Deep in every manly man's character lies resentment of wrong, injustice, oppression. He rebels against abuse of power, against the rule of force, against all that tends to repress his honest purpose and that simple truth of expression which constitutes his utmost skill. It is the underlying thought that rouses his emotion.

This new art of expression with which we are dealing has sprung from the womb of our evolution and has progressed by strides and leaps until its capabilities are simply limited by our own. It is already picturing our abstract love of life, our desire to live happily. It is depicting our varied methods of existence, sensing our instincts of danger, portraying tragic and humorous phases of our universal experience. It is bound to survive while there is action and movement on earth, and it is just as sure to be a social agent in determining civilization. As the expression of ourselves, as a mirror of our complex struggle, it must probe deep into human motive and become at once our reflex and our inspiration.

Throwing light on every strata of society, portraying every phase of existence, the art of screen representation must soon feel the throes of tremendous change in human affairs. It must become part of what is going on and play a role in social reconstruction. Strong photodramas most naturally kindle emotion, but they are sure to reach the mind through the heart or the heart through the mind, so closely interwoven are emotional sensibility and the mental state. It is the sensation we feel that develops an ideational change. Our feelings may be stirred by external sensation or by internal ideas that have the power of exciting them, but it is the unified appeal that reaches profound depths of human nature.

The absence of idea in screen plays has more than a dull, negative effect. An expectant audience, given an appetizer of preparation with no food for thought to follow, is bound to experience disappointment verging on resentment. We all know that we can be mentally hurt quite as well as physically wounded. We sit in a darkened auditorium watching the bright screen portrayal with close attention—all our mental faculties alert, our hearts beating with generous hope, only to be shown a lot of old dramatic material that is worn out so far as modern people of intelligence are concerned.

We are not even given the pleasure of contemplating a noble characterization, such as that of the man who is "freed from servile bonds of hope to rise or fear to fall," who dares be himself uncorrupted by the temptations of "easy money," unterrified by the slave-driving methods of low caste employers. Amateurish desire to portray action, action which starts from nothing in particular and leads to nothing of moment, does not unveil motive, depict character, nor illuminate our minds in any way. It stirs neither feeling nor thought, and it does not therefore realize the drama of our ideals.

The finest material for a dramatist is of ourselves and of the age in which we live, not in old stories that contain nothing vital to present-day interest. "Yet Hath All" as the title of a powerful photodrama might easily depict a type purely American, the man who works hard for small consideration and earns a degree of happiness in spite of farcical laws, corrupt politicians, and unfair social treatment, through being Lord of Himself, the most superb creature on earth.

That we have few good plays is less due to scarcity of capable authors than to bad methods and poor quality of selection at the studios. Our screen literature is less a question of poor authorship than of incapable choice. Any one of the dozen men who have written successful photoplays will affirm that it is easier to market the mediocre that the superior class of product, and no distinction is made that provides higher remuneration to authors for what meets with the universal approval of press and public, than for the worst releases shown.

This is partly due to forced methods of distribution and to the exactions of calendar releases, but back of it all is non-recognition of our intelligence and progressive spirit as a people. The public suffers and through them the exhibitor. The people may be led by poster promises over and over again to the muddy waters of theatrical inanity, but they will sicken of it all and turn to where they may get some pure draught of refreshing entertainment, before another year has passed. Progressive producers, men who are alive to the necessity of change, will devise new methods of distribution for screen presentations that are really worth seeing. Keep this in mind.

The greatest purpose of any art is to reach after truth that it may be made known to all and not remain the exclusive possession of a few enlightened beings. It is absurd that we should be separated from one another by false ideas, such as those which are driving millions of brave and honest men to slaughter and misery in Europe. We know they are clashing with their own best interests and that their vaunted principles cause more harm than good. Relief can only be made permanent through the dissemination of knowledge, through the elimination of false and narrow ideas which keep so many millions in subjection to a few self-elected individuals. Their minds are not empty. They are all thinking and are all under strain of high emotion, but they are reasoning from a limited quantity and poor quality of knowledge and their conclusions are practically useless as guides to action. Through that humble medium, "the movies," may truth prevail.

Are We Outlaws?

By W. Stephen Bush.

AT THIS time when the legislatures of most states are in session it is raining bills affecting motion picture interests. To judge by the raft of measures proposed for the regulation and control of motion picture theatres and motion picture producers it would seem that our whole industry is viewed with suspicion by the lawmakers in every state. We are looked upon as a class of people especially in need of close supervision. The legislative rosters fairly bristle with "reforms" and "restraints" intended for our special benefit. In the great commonwealth of Massachusetts, for example, there are at this moment no less than fifty measures directly and solely affecting the motion picture theatre and the motion picture men. Most of this and similar proposed legislation relates to censorship, but censorship is by no means the only form of legislative hostility. Impossible building codes are proposed. Attempts are made to regulate by the letter of the law every movement of the operator while he is running his machine. One man wants aisles three and four and five feet in width. Another solon wants the exhibitor to be acquainted with the parents and guardians of every minor who wants to get past the ticket office.

One state wants to impose higher license fees. Another state puts forth a law which would bar every portrayal of human events from the moving picture screen. Everywhere in the legislatures there seems to be a presumption against the motion picture and a presumption in favor of restraint and repression. While the hue and cry in the press has largely subsided and is growing fainter all the time, the lawmakers still consider the motion picture man as their best target.

How much of all this proposed legislation is inspired by honest motives we have no means of knowing. It is fair to assume that a certain percentage of all these bills are so-called "strike-bills," pure and simple. Many others have been introduced to satisfy some fanatical constituents of weak-kneed statesmen. Whatever the motives may be, we cannot afford to ignore the menace to the industry. We cannot afford to let any of these measures be enacted into laws by default. We must strike back. We must with all the means at our disposal oppose this legislation and fight the vicious spirit which lurks in it. We must refuse to be singled out as an "easy mark" or as a "tainted class." We are not only engaged in a most legitimate profession, but in a most useful one. The motion picture has become a medium for good second to none. The motion picture reaches more people and impresses them more deeply than either the press, the pulpit, the school or the library.

In point of intelligence and integrity the men in the motion picture industry compare well with the men who constitute the average quality of any profession or any commercial pursuit. The ethics of the motion picture and of the men connected with the motion picture average well; we stand on a much higher plane than we did eight or nine years ago. The leading producers have a keen sense of their responsibility to the public. This fact is attested daily on the screen. We do not claim that there is no room for improvement, but this much we do claim emphatically: An industry which has in spite of all difficulties and inherent handicaps advanced as rapidly as ours in the morale of its pictures and the morale of its men may be trusted to take care of itself in the future without any aid or interference from reformers in and out of the legislature.

Public opinion is no longer against us. There is not a community anywhere in the United States where the people have not gained confidence in the picture and in the men behind the picture. I believe in a campaign on the screen, but I believe likewise in a campaign of example. The greater confidence of the public has come as a result of the conduct and the example of exhibitors in every part of the country.

The mass of hostile legislation and the lawmaker's assumption that we must be regulated has its source in the old bigoted spirit of the British law, which looked upon the actor as a vagrant and upon the theatre as an unlawful institution which might be licensed like a saloon or a dance hall, but which could never be made quite respectable. In the eyes of the British law Shakespeare was a vagrant. The great bard took his revenge upon Puritan hypocrisy and tyranny when he wrote "Measure for Measure"; but the Puritan spirit lived after he was dead and it still lives. All things considered, it is stronger today on our side of the water than in England. The Puritan notion that we must regulate the personal conduct of our neighbor and bring it into conformity with ours as a sacred duty to God is still prevalent in New England and it crops out occasionally in other parts of the country. The Puritan delight in pains and penalties and in punishing the sins of others is abroad even at this day. We are all affected by it, more or less, whether we descend from colonial or revolutionary ancestors or whether we are just plain ordinary Americans.

Until we succeed in emancipating ourselves from these antiquated and narrow prejudices the theatre as well as the motion picture will always suffer from attempts at special legislation and from too much attention at the hands of long-haired men and short-haired women. We must all work together to modernize the spirit of the law. The spirit of the present laws toward amusements of all kinds lags behind the great change that has come over public opinion generally. Intelligent men and women, indeed the best elements in every community, regard amusements not only as legitimate but as useful and necessary. In the case of the motion picture the educational value rises up as a great argument in favor of broad, liberal and modern treatment. There is nothing "vagrant" about the men who make, distribute and exhibit pictures. Statistics vouched for by the Federal Government proclaim the motion picture industry as the fourth in magnitude.

The motion picture is entitled to the favor and friendship of a sound and enlightened statesmanship by reason of the fact that it is the amusement of the masses, or to use a better and a more American term, of the plain people. In substance and in form ours is a democratic form of government, whose chief concern ought to be the welfare of the plain people. To interfere with a form of entertainment which is as democratic as the motion picture is a very bungling sort of statesmanship.

I cannot conclude these lines without warning exhibitors everywhere against following the example of Ohio, where the men engaged in the exhibiting business, or at least a majority of their organization, went on record as feeling the need of censorship. If we ourselves proclaim the industry as "unclean" and in need of a bill of health from the state, we have no right to protest against intolerant and confiscatory legislation.

ship before exhibition as it does by the act under review. We cannot regard this as beyond the power of government.

"It does not militate against the strength of these considerations that motion pictures may be used and instruct in other places than theaters—in churches, for instance, and in Sunday schools and public schools—nor are we called upon to say on this record whether such exceptions would be within the provisions of the statute, nor to anticipate that it will be so declared by the State courts or so enforced by the State officers.

"The next contention of complainant is that the Ohio statute is a delegation of legislative power and effect for that, if not for the other reasons charged against it which we have discussed, still, administration and legislation are quite distinct powers, the line which separates exactly their exercise is not easy to define in words. It is best recognized in illustrations. Undoubtedly, the legislature must declare the policy of the law and fix the legal principles which are to control in given cases, but the administrative body may be invested with the power to ascertain the fact and conditions to which the policy and principles apply. If this could not be done there would be infinite confusion in the laws and in an effort to detail and to particularize them would lose efficiency both in provision and execution.

"The objection to the statute is that it furnishes no standard of what is educational, normal, amusing or harmless, and hence leaves decision to arbitrary judgment and human caprice, or, aside from these extremes, leaving it to the different views which may be entertained of the effect of the pictures, permitting the 'personal equation' to enter, resulting 'in unjust discrimination against some propogandist film while others might be approved without question. But the statute, by its provisions, guards against such variant judgments and its terms, while other general terms * * * become certain and useful guides in reasoning and conduct. The exact specification of the instances of their application would be as impossible as the attempt would be futile. Upon such sense and experience the law properly relies.

"Section 5 of the statute, which provides for the censor congress of the censor board and the boards of other States, is referred to in emphasis of complainant's objection that the statute delegates legislative power, but, as complainant says, such congress is 'at present non-existent and nebulous,' and we are, therefore, not called upon to anticipate its action or pass upon the validity of section 5.

"We may close this topic with a quotation of the very apt comment of the district court upon the statute. After remarking that the language of the statute 'might have been extended by discussion and illustrative words,' but doubting that it would have been the more intelligible and that probably by being more restrictive might be more easily thwarted, the court said, 'in view of the range of subjects which complainant claims to have composed, not to speak of the new development that will ensue, it would be next to impossible to devise language which would be at once comprehensive and automatic.'

"In conclusion, we may observe that the Ohio statute gives a review by the courts of the decision of the board of censors. Decree affirmed."

The case of the Mutual Film Company, submitted for argument with the above, is covered by the above decision.

In the case of the Mutual Film Corporation of Missouri vs. George H. Hodges, governor; Charles H. Sessions, secretary of state; John S. Dawson, attorney general, and M. D. Ross, superintendent of public instruction of the State of Kansas, Justice McKenna, after quoting the provisions of the law, declared for the court that the opinion rendered in the Ohio case becomes applicable here, the two cases having been argued jointly and submitted on the same provisions. "It is unnecessary to repeat, therefore, the reasoning which establishes that both statutes exercise the police power of the State and are not amenable to the objection urged against them—that is, do not interfere with interstate commerce nor abridge the liberty of opinion; nor are they delegations of legislative power to administrative officers."

DIRECTOR RIDGELY BACK.

Director Ridgely is back again on the job at the Edison studio from his several weeks' vacation in Florida. He is several pounds heavier and is putting his usual intensity into a photoplay version of "Fate and the Pomegranate," a story by Mary Imlay Taylor, in which Bessie Learn and Edward Earle will be featured. Director Ridgely brought back for Viola Dana a unique ring, set in link formation, of three large stones, a ruby, a berryl and a pale amethyst.

Film Manufacturers to Fight Censorship

Through the United Managers Heads of Film Concerns Decide to Inaugurate Active Campaign.

FOR the first time in the history of the motion picture industry manufacturers of film, irrespective of business associations, have got together on a question of concern, of vital concern, to all. They came together as business men, each one intent on doing whatever possible to dam the flood of proposed antagonistic legislation threatening the welfare of all. Present and represented were the heads of the General Film, the Paramount group, the Universal, the Mutual, the United, the Kriterion, the Word Film, and many allied or unattached manufacturers.

Among these were J. J. Kennedy, president of the General Film Company and the Biograph; Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph; W. N. Seligsberg, representing President H. E. Aitken of the Mutual; Jacob Schechter, representing President Carl Laemmle of the Universal; P. A. Powers, United; Lewis J. Selznick, of the World Film; C. J. Verhalen, of Kriterion; P. A. Parsons and C. A. Conlon, of Pathe Freres; William Maxwell and L. W. McChesney, of the Edison Company; Jesse J. Goldburg, of Life Photo Film; Samuel Long, of Kalem; Harry R. Raver, All Star; A. S. Friend, Lasky; E. J. McGovern, New York Motion Picture Corporation; Sid Olcott, International Productions, and E. D. Horkheimer, Balboa. Others represented were George Kleine, Siegmund Lubin, William N. Selig, Famous Players and the American Film Manufacturing Company.

The meeting was held on February 18 in the offices of the United Managers' Protective Association, in the New York Theater Building, with which organization all of the film firms named are affiliated. Ligon Johnson, general counsel of the association, presided.

The question uppermost in the minds of those in attendance was censorship. Mr. Johnson announced that censorship bills were pending in Congress and in the states of Massachusetts, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Tennessee, Oklahoma, New York, Missouri, Delaware and Michigan. In Ohio and Pennsylvania fights were on for the repeal of existing censorship laws. He said the situation confronting the manufacturers was one requiring active and concerted effort. After a general discussion it was decided to secure the co-operation of the manufacturers not as yet affiliated with the United Managers, and then to appoint a committee or five to conduct a stiff campaign in all states where there is pending or proposed censorship or other legislation antagonistic to the interests of the film industry. The united Managers, it is understood, are assured of the militant support of the great trade organizations affected by legislation against theatrical interests, and of others who on general principles are opposed to censorship.

"The real answer to censorship is clear and concise," said Mr. Johnson after the meeting, in conversation with a World man. "When that answer is brought home to the average legislator he begins to think. Thought is expressed in three ways—by word of mouth, by written words, by action portraying an idea. In the case of a play it is by mummers on the stage or in pictures by action shown on a screen. In the last analysis motion pictures are identical with spoken or written words in the expression of an idea.

"Now, we'll argue that we have a right to censor a newspaper, a magazine or a book, and that the book may be a novel or a drama. The words in that book express the creator's ideas; a motion picture based on that novel or drama is also but the expression of the creator's ideas. If you legally can censor books, newspapers, you can censor speech; it logically follows. As a secondary proposition, is there any more necessity for censoring plays than there is for books or speech? Here in New York and throughout the country if a man publicly exhibits an obscene book he is arrested—the law covers the situation. Exactly the same laws apply to motion pictures. Every motion picture is just as subject to these laws as are books. There is no question of the ability of the police to stop one as quickly as they do the other. Censorship, on the other hand, merely means subjecting a man's business to the whims of particular persons or groups of persons usually opposed to this particular industry.

"As to the action taken at our meeting you may say it was the sense of the men attending that a committee of five should be designated by the chairman to outline a uniform course of action and to prepare for a general campaign of education both for legislators and the public on the question of censorship."

Censorship Plans at Albany

Hearing on Mitchell Bill Postponed—Why the Bill Was Introduced—Interview With the Author—Main Provisions of the Proposed Measure.

A FORMIDABLE delegation appeared on Tuesday, February 23, before the Codes Committee of the Assembly at Albany to protest against the passage of the censorship bill introduced by Harold C. Mitchell of New York. Among the opponents of the measure were Messrs. Seligsberg and Schechter, representing the Mutual and Universal; Walter Irwin, representing the Vitagraph Company; Ligon Johnson, representing various theatrical interests; Jacob W. Binder, of the Board of National Censors; Charles C. Shay, international president of Theatrical Stage Employees of the United States and Canada; John J. Henley, chairman of the legislative committee, New York State Federation of Labor, and W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World.

The members of the Committee on Codes, to which the bill has been referred, are: John Knight of Wyoming county, chairman; Jacob R. Buecheler of Onondaga, George R. Brennan of Kings, Henry R. De Witt of Ulster, August C. Flamman of Kings, W. W. Chase of Columbia, Edward A. Everett of St. Lawrence, Alan V. Parker of Niagara, Harold C. Mitchell of New York, Martin Bourke of New York, Frank Aranow of Kings, Joseph M. Callahan of the Bronx and William A. Bacher of Kings. Nobody appeared in favor of the bill.

After consultation with the chairman of the committee, Mr. Mitchell announced that the hearing had not been sufficiently advertised, and with the consent of the committee and most of the opponents the hearing was adjourned to March 4.

A representative of The Moving Picture World interviewed the author of the bill. Mr. Mitchell is probably one of the youngest members in the Legislature, although a giant in stature. He looks and talks like a man with strong convictions, but dominated by a sense of fairness. The World man asked him whether he introduced the bill merely as a formality and "by request," or whether he had drafted the bill himself and meant to work for it.

"I will tell you that quickly enough," replied Mr. Mitchell. "I am behind this bill. It has, I know, the support of good people, but I am the prime mover. I have lived in New York for fifteen years and I have seen too much of this white slave business on the screen. In my neighborhood on St. Nicholas avenue and in other adjacent sections they showed the most sickening of white slave pictures and advertised them in a most offensive manner. Why, one man had red lights burning in front of his theatre while these white slave films were being shown inside. This sort of thing has got to be stopped."

Mr. Mitchell was reminded that censorship of motion pictures would have no effect whatever on the display of posters and advertising devices outside the theatre.

"Well," replied Mr. Mitchell, "my bill is going to reach out after the lurid posters. I think that sort of advertising can be stopped by law and I am going to try."

By this time the three lawyers in the group of protestants took part in the informal discussion between The World man and Mr. Mitchell and the latter found himself hard pressed. He took it all very good-humoredly and in reply to the question of whether his mind was still open he said with a smile:

"Yes, but I have given the subject a good deal of thought." He was told of the great mass of literature on the subject and expressed himself as willing to receive and read it. He said he would be especially glad to get copies of The Moving Picture world.

Mr. Mitchell lives at 321 St. Nicholas avenue, is a Republican in politics and a lawyer by profession, with offices at 60 Wall street.

The chief provisions of Mr. Mitchell's bill are as follows: Three censors are to be appointed, the term of office to be three years; they are to be appointed by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. The board shall at all times have at least one woman in its membership. It "shall examine all moving picture films or reels and stereopticon views and approve such as shall be moral and withhold approval from such as shall tend to debase or corrupt the morals." Penalties for exhibiting unapproved films consist of a fine of not less than fifty dollars for the first offence nor more than one hundred dollars for each subsequent offense. The salaries of the censors are three thousand dollars for the chief censor and two thousand dollars for each of the two others. The board may appoint an attorney, whose salary shall be three thousand dollars per year. The fee for censoring is two dollars and fifty cents for each reel, payments to be made monthly. The law seems to make no distinction between originals and duplicates. It vests the board with sweeping powers of supervision and regulation. The last section of the law provides that this "act shall not apply to any exhibition or use of moving pictures and stereopticon views given purely for educational, charitable, fraternal or religious purposes by any religious association, fraternal society, library, museum, public or private school or any institution of learning."

RAISING FUNDS FOR CENSOR FIGHT.

The following resolution was recently sent from Philadelphia to James Delves, of Pittsburgh, secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania:

"Resolved, that in order to fight the new censorship bill, about to be introduced by the censor in the State Legislature, as well as to obtain the repeal of all censorship and other repressive legislation bearing on the industry, the State League be invited to consider asking every motion picture exhibitor in Pennsylvania, to contribute one dollar towards a fund to be used for that purpose."

The above was indorsed by the Philadelphia Local at a meeting held February 5, 1915, and ordered the same forwarded to the State League.

It has also been indorsed by the Pittsburgh Local, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Blackton, Manager

Puts Over the Most Delightful Entertainment Ever Given at the Vitagraph Theater—Raises $1,000 for Save-a-Home Fund.

THE most delightful entertainment ever given at the Vitagraph theater, Broadway and 44th Street, New York, or any other picture house, occurred on the evening of Thursday, February 18, when Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton took the house over for the benefit of the Save-a-Home Fund, a very practical charity which is engaging the attention of many kindly disposed persons in New York this winter, and is being promoted by the New York Evening Mail.

Among the pictures shown were "The New Stenographer," "The Wood Violet" and "The Island of Regeneration." As everybody knows these pictures in themselves are very interesting, but Mrs. Manager Blackton introduced a little variation in the way of pantomime that greatly enhanced the entertainment value of two of them. In "The Wood Violet" Anita Stewart and Earl Williams appear at their best on the screen, but Mrs. Blackton was not satisfied with that "best," for she presented the players themselves in an extension of the same theme, which was one of the most charming bits of dramatic artistry we have seen in many a day.

Again, in "The Island of Regeneration" the last scene of the picture was done in pantomime by the players in person, Edith Story, S. Rankin Drew and Bobby Connelly.

Mrs. Blackton made a few remarks, explaining the purpose of the "Save-a-Home" Fund and urged the audience to help bring the receipts up to the thousand-dollar mark. The appeal was successful. Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady was also introduced and told the audience how he came to write the story, "The Island of Regeneration," and why.

There was a reception committee of Vitagraph players which included the followed named: Dorothy Kelley, Naomi Childers, Norma Talmadge, Jane Morrow, Kate Price, Flora Finch, Cissy Fitzgerald, Lillian Walker, Estelle Mardo, Nita Frazer, Lillian Burns, Leah Baird, Lillian Herbert, Ethel Lloyd, Betty Gray, Ethel Corcoran, Mary Anderson and Adele De Garde.

THOMAS WALSH IMPROVING.

Thomas Walsh, of the 101 Bison Company, is gradually improving from the terrible burns he received while preparing a cloud effect for the production of "The Blood of the Children." Last week Dr. Lloyd Mace, of Universal City Hospital, thought it would be necessary to graft skin to save Mr. Walsh's life. Miss Madison volunteered to give six square inches of skin from her shoulder. The operation will not be necessary.

NOTED DANCERS IN EDISON FILM.

Director Richard Ridgeley imparts a touch of color in the dance scene in an Edison screen version of Mary Imlay Taylor's story, "Fate and the Pomegranate," by the introduction of the famous Argentine dancers, Arturo Arboz and Aida Arboz, who were especially engaged for this picture. The dancers come from the New York Roof Garden and were secured by special permission of William Morris.

Kalem Offers New Idea

Proposes to Issue Series of Three-Part Features for Release on Regular General Film Program.

"BROADWAY FAVORITES" is the name under which the Kalem Company will presently issue a series of three-reel features to be released on the regular program of the General Film Company. The idea as outlined by Frank J. Marion, of the Kalem Company, is a distinct departure from the policy of that concern as followed since its organization and is, also, somewhat of an innovation in motion picture production.

"It is our intention," said Mr. Marion, "to feature some prominent Broadway star in each of the 'Broadway Favorites' productions. A play especially suited to the peculiarities of each star engaged will be selected and every effort will be made to present the leading player to the best advantage. There will be but one star in each production and he or she will be supported by the best players now in the Kalem stock. Kenean Buell will direct all these productions. In case the star is a woman Guy Coombs will play opposite; if a man, Miss Anna Nilsson will be the principal support.

"This is the first time the Kalem has departed from the stock company plan which it originated when it started business, some years ago," continued Mr. Marion. "But we realize that there is a strong demand for stars—individual players, who have a reputation on Broadway. It is generally known that there are many legitimate players who never leave New York; it is this class that we expect to draw from.

"Our first production in this series will feature Katherine La Salle. The title of the play selected for her is 'Innocent Sinner,' of which Lawrence Marston is the author. Miss La Salle first gained prominence in the 'Yellow Ticket.' She appeared more recently with John Mason in 'Big Jim Garrity' and was with Edmund Breese in 'The Master Mind.' Work on this production is now well under way at the Kalem studio at Jacksonville, Fla.

"The name, 'Broadway Favorites' is a registered trade name and may not be used by any other maker of motion pictures. We expect to have the first of the series ready for release in April and will issue them at least one each month, possibly oftener. No extra price for these pictures will be charged."

Regarding the general activities of the Kalem Company Mr. Marion said that work would be commenced this week on a new studio structure at Cliffside, N. J., after original designs prepared by Storm V. Boyd, Jr. In many respects this studio will be a departure from the usual plan of studio-construction. In the first place there will be no glass sides or top. "This is not surprising," said Mr. Marion, "when one takes into consideration the great improvement in artificial lighting that has been made in the past year or so. With these improvements the glass studio has become obsolete; in fact, I have seen interiors of glass studios completely blanketed with black cloth shades. Methods of lighting have changed completely. We must have the lights and shades where we want them; the new lighting devices have enabled us to do this. Solar light is not so easily controlled, hence the abandoning of the glass studio.

"There are some other original ideas in studio-construction which we have tried out at Jacksonville and while will be incorporated in the new Cliffside studio; but as these ideas are peculiarly our own we prefer to withhold them from publication at this time."

To Make Comedies

World Comedy Stars Corporation Formed to Release One Comedy a Week.

"Good comedies!" Ask any exhibitor the pictures he most likes to have; the pictures the public want most; the pictures that pay best, and he will reply: "Good comedies." And it is the aspiration of every manufacturer to supply this need, for he knows that it is a quick way to make money. Laugh-makers are always popular and usually prosperous in real life. Same thing applies to the screen.

Phil Gleichman knows all this. He has gone out to meet the demand for good, clean comedies week by week all the year round. Mr. Gleichman is experienced in the film business; he knows the needs of exhibitors and the public. With ample capital at command he has formed the World Comedy Stars Film Corporation. The program of the new factor in the film business is: "One-reel feature comedies."

Mr. Gleichman has organized possibly the finest corps of scenario writers that could be gotten together, scholars, humorists, stage technicians, men with long lists of successes to their names, to-wit: Roy McCardell, Paul Arlington, Herbert Hall Winslow, Mark Swan and Robert Broderick.

These gentlemen have been specially selected to fit Mr. Gleichman's stars and companies with suitable vehicles.

Lew Fields is to appear as World comedy star at an early date. Mr. Fields' success in "Old Dutch" is so fresh in every one's recollection that it is almost superfluous to mention it.

Richard Carle, now co-starring with Marie Cahill in "90 in the Shade," at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, has been engaged; so has Tom Wise, a gentleman from Mississippi, now appearing in "The Song of Songs" at the Eltinge; so has Jefferson de Angelis, the star of "Fantana" and the "Beauty Spot."

Female stars of the brightest radiance will shine in Mr. Gleichman's program. They include Katherine Osterman, late of "A Persian Garden" and "Piff, Paff, Puff"; Lulu Glaser ("Dolly Varden," "The Madcap Duchess"), and Florence Tempest of Tempest and Sunshine, and Paula Tempest ("Winsome Winnie").

"Pictures of Shoe-Making"

Many Astonishing Things in Picture of Big Shoe Factory, Inside and Out—Wonderful Machinery.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

AN exceedingly interesting and instructive picture in one reel has just been completed by the Motion Picture Specialty Corporation of New York. It deals with the shoe-making plant of the George E. Keith Company at Campobello, Mass., and shows the whole process that goes on in it down to the smallest detail of the work. It is short (1,000 feet) for its quality, and not a bit of it but is filled with a lively personal interest for every intelligent spectator. How can it help engaging our attention and sympathy—the background is a big factory where thousands of people work, making the shoes that are on our feet. The factory is one in which human ingenuity has triumphed with some of the most wonderful machinery that can be conceived of. Take one of these, the "pulling over" machine, that pulls over the sewed upper at the toe till it fits the prepared welt and winds a wire to hold it in place while another machine sews the two together. The George E. Keith Company, it is said, expended a million dollars in perfecting this machine alone. There are many other views of marvelous machinery, and there even seems to be something of magic in the ease with which buttonholes are sewed in button shoes or eyelets are run down the ankle of a pair of lace shoes. The close-up views of the operatives and their work and the perfect, life-like photography make the picture vivid.

It is purely an industrial picture; there is no attempt to tell a story—the scenes are so real that they invite the imaginative spectator to supply his own made-up story. We see first the outside, a panoramic view of the Walk-Over plant at Campobello. It is immense. Next comes a glimpse of the leather inspection. Then comes making the uppers and fitting them with linings, some fine close-up pictures. Making tops and fitting lining and tops and vamping and "pulling over" are shown in detail. All the processes of making the soles and heels, cutting, laying, rounding and sticking to the welt before sewing are made clear together with such other things as button-holing or eyeletting and the polishing of the finished soles. Great care has been taken in everything. For example, the camera man has taken care to get his wheels going in the picture as they really rotate so that the whole will be natural.

BROADWAY THEATER OPENS TO BIG CROWD.

The Broadway Theater, under the direction of the Stanley Company, opened Saturday, February 20, and during the few days it has been running it has been demonstrated that this undertaking will probably succeed.

Stanley V. Mastbaum, the head of the Stanley Company, was in charge on Saturday and a magnificent floral horseshoe of red and white roses with the word "Success" across the center occupied one side of the lobby. There were several other attractive floral offerings and altogether Mr. Mastbaum had occasion to know that his friends were wishing him well.

The Broadway has for music the Broadway Symphony Orchestra consisting of 16 pieces with piano, and a magnificent pipe organ, and altogether it is intended that the music shall be in keeping with the picture attractions offered by Paramount Program.

The bill will be changed twice weekly—Sundays and Thursdays. The regular Thursday Paramount release will always be used, followed by the Monday release which has been shown several weeks previously at the Strand Theater.

BUSY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

State League to Hold Meeting March 3—Legislative Matters Considered.

A MEETING of the members of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is scheduled to be held in Rathbone Hall, at No. 694 Washington Street, Boston, on Wednesday afternoon, March 3, at 4 o'clock. Circulars have been mailed to all members urging them to be present as much important business will be considered.

The League will endeavor to amend the bylaws so that their annual meeting shall be held on the first Monday of January in the city of Boston, instead of the second Tuesday in February in the City of Lynn.

Directors for the current year will also be chosen. At the annual meeting of the association, which was held a few weeks ago, seven directors were chosen instead of three as provided for by the By-Laws. This election has been declared illegal. The by-law, which provides for the three directors, will undoubtedly be amended to read that the Board shall consist of not less than five and not more than fifteen directors, as the company shall determine at each annual meeting.

The members will consider the necessity of calling in all outstanding stock and issuing new stock with restrictions upon its transfer.

Circular letters have been sent to all exhibitors throughout the state by President Ernest H. Horstmann urging them to write to their Congressman regarding the inadvisability of the passage of the Smith-Hughes Federal Censorship Bill, which has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Education.

Many of the exhibitors have already taken action on this bill. The Olympia Theaters Company of Lynn has received three replies to letters, which have been sent to Washington.

Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, senior senator from the Bay State, replies that, in his opinion, censorship is a matter to be undertaken by state and municipal authorities rather than by the national government. He gives his assurance that he will give the bill careful attention when it comes up in the Senate.

Congressman Michael F. Phelan of Lynn, who is a member of the committee on banking and currency, has answered that he will give the matter the utmost study and consideration.

Congressman Ernest W. Roberts, a member of the committee on Naval Affairs, has responded that the measure will receive every consideration from him when it comes up in the House of Representatives.

No exhibitor in this state should hesitate to write to his congressman regarding this bill. The sooner it is done, the more advantageous it will be to those who are fighting against its passage.

LEAGUE ACTIVE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Convention Scheduled at Reading—Organizer Herrington Busy—New Local at York.

BEN H. ZERR, of Reading, President of the Pennsylvania Branch, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, returned from a trip to Philadelphia and New York, after making preliminary arrangements for the convention to be held in his home own, June 7 to 9. The Reading Local recently elected Mr. Zerr convention manager. He will have full charge of the exhibit and conventions and will announce his staff of co-workers in a few days.

All the Reading exhibitors have signified their intentions of co-operating with Mr. Zerr to make the next convention one long to be remembered. As Mr. Zerr says, "It will put Reading on the map."

At the present time Mr. Zerr is lending his efforts to G. W. Sahner, Pittsburgh, who is chairman of the legislative committee. At a session of this committee, recently held at Harrisburg, arrangements were made for presenting a bill to repeal the State Censorship law. The bill has been drafted and in the meantime a pubicity campaign will be waged.

Every exhibitor in the State is asked to co-operate with the league in making an effort to abolish this obnoxious law. Slides will be sent to every motion picture house to be used on the screen. This will arouse public discussion of the bill and there is no doubt but that considerable weight will be brought to bear on the question before the legislators.

State Organizer Fred J. Herrington, Mt. Oliver, Pa., has been active since the recent sessions at the state capital, and in the next three months, a number of locals will be organized.

At the conclusion of the Harrisburg convention, Frank A. Gould, of Reading, who was elected publicity representative of the state body, enjoyed a pleasure trip to York, Pa. While there he mentioned the doings of the league to several exhibitors, and as a result a local was formed at that place last week. These temporary officers were elected:

President, M. E. Miller, Alhambra Theater; Vice-President, David J. Small, Wizard; Secretary, Arthur H. Geesey, Scenic; Treasurer, Harry W. Musser, Mystic Star; Advisory Board, Frank H. Hartley, Centennial Hall; Edward Gentzler, Lyric; Frank E. Barry, Jackson. The York body will no doubt make immediate application to the State organization for membership.

INDIANA REORGANIZES.

Threatened State Censorship Compels Exhibitors to Get Together—Officers Elected.

THE introduction of two moving picture censor bills in the Indiana legislature was the cause of the meeting of the Indiana moving picture exhibitors in Indianapolis, recently. The Cleary bill favoring a national board of censors, which was drafted by Thomas F. Whallon, of Indianapolis, for the exhibitors, was postponed indefinitely by the legislature. The Judkins bill, advocating a state board of censors, which the moving picture men are against, may come up for a rehearing in the house of representatives. The exhibitors are not in favor of any kind of censorship, believing that the public is capable of judging for itself, but should it be necessary to appoint a board of censors, they favor the national board in preference to the state board. The exhibitors believe that a board of censors would be useless as they do not think that three persons composing a board, which is required by the Judkins bill, could agree within themselves as to whether a film was fit to be shown or not. The exhibitors claim that it is absolutely necessary to show the distasteful side of life in order to make the moral lesson taught, by the pictures, stronger.

The Indiana moving picture exhibitors had a very strong organization up until the national meeting in New York in 1912. There has been but little interest in the organization since then until the present time. Realizing that quick action was necessary, if they intended fighting the censorship bills, they immediately got down to business and elected the following officers: President, L. H. O'Donnell, Washington; vice-president, W. E. Keating, Terre Haute; secretary, Dr. J. M. Rhodes, Indianapolis; treasurer, Joseph Gavin, Indianapolis. A legislative committee composed of Ed. Sourbier, Indianapolis; Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville; Thomas Whallon, Indianapolis, and Dr. J. M. Rhodes, was appointed. The officers with A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis; Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville; William Lipps, Alexandria, and Frank Radenbauch, Dunkirk, form the board of directors.

It was decided to call the organization The Motion Picture League of Indiana. The question as to which national organization the league will affiliate with was not taken up, as business in Indiana needs the immediate attention of the members.

As there was no money in the treasury it was decided that each member should pay five dollars when the meeting adjourned. This money is not an initiation fee, but will be given back to the members in the form of dues when the amount of dues to be paid is settled. The film men accepted the invitation to join the league as their interests are in common with the exhibitors.

Members of the new league registering from Indianapolis are: Henry Meyer, A. C. Zaring, J. M. Rhodes, M. M. Miller,

Jos. H. Gavin, E. W. Mouser, H. T. Harrell, J. B. Hubert, J. A. Victor, F. E. Therian, A. A. Fraul, Ed. G. Sourbier, L. H. Shreve, S. S. Bragg, F. W. Noble, Henry Winkler, F. W. Sanders, John Servaas, D. F. Henry and Royal Wilke. Those operating picture theaters outside of Indianapolis who joined the organization are: W. H. Lipps, Alexandria; W. E. Keating, Terre Haute; Sam Dreyfuss and B. Van Borssum, Terre Haute; F. J. Rembush, Shelbyville; J. E. Whitley, Kokomo; Ed. Caldwell, Danville; W. M. Wells, Scottsburg; L. H. O'Donnell, Washington; T. O. Ballard, Franklin; F. W. Houston, Mooresville; B. A. Radabaugh, Dunkirk; The film men who joined are: Jay G. Lytle, Cincinnati, Pathe; R. L. Schrader, Chicago, Box Office Attractions Co.; J. G. Connor, $20,000,000 Mine Mystery; H. A. Bandy, Indianapolis, Mutual Film Corporation; Robert Leiber, Indianapolis, General Film Corporation; I. Beitman, American Feature Film Manufacturing Company; O. J. Blake, C. & E. Film Co.; Fred Reichert, Cabiria Film Renting Co.; Robt. Hasseldenz, Atlas Ausement Co., and E. H. Bingham, of the Bingham-Crose Feature Film Exchange.

SUSTAINS NATIONAL BOARD.

Massachusetts League Holds Up Chaplin Picture Which Had Not Been Approved.

THROUGH the efforts of President Ernest H. Horstmann of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the Essanay production, "His Night Out," featuring Charles Chaplin will not be exhibited in the state.

The film has not received the approval of the National Board of Censorship. In Massachusetts, the exhibitors do not care to offer any film that has not been passed by the national board. Although Chaplin's popularity is exceedingly great in this state, it would be an unwise move for the exhibitors to offer any unapproved film to their patrons on account of a strict censorship bill that the Legislature is now considering.

At the run-off at the General Film Company, last week, President Horstmann learned that exhibitors in Fall River and Springfield had received prints of this film from the Greater New York Film Rental Company. He immediately communicated with William Fox over the long distance telephone and after explaining the censorship situation, which was facing the Massachusetts exhibitors, he requested that they withdraw their prints from the territory. This request was most willingly complied with and the officials of the film rental corporation stated that they did not desire to imperil the exhibitors of the state.

When the World correspondent asked Manager Edward J. Farrell of the New England office of the General Film Company regarding the situation, he was referred to President Horstmann, who stated that the General Film Company was willing to abide with the request of the league that none of the Chaplin prints be booked.

The manager of the theaters in Fall River and Springfield, who were running this feature, were also willing that the prints should be withdrawn. President Horstmann desires to express the appreciation of the league to them for their attitude on the matter. They were Manager Benson of the Savoy theater, Fall River; Louis Boas of the Academy of Music, Fall River, and D. S. Denault of the Plaza theater, Fall River, and Goldstein Brothers ,of Springfield.

BOOMING CLEVELAND LOCAL.

At the last meeting of the Cleveland local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, a resolution was passed for the appointment of an organizer and inauguration of a membership campaign which, it is hoped, will make the Cleveland local one of the strongest in the country. E. C. Downs, manager of the Knickerbocker theater, was appointed chairman of a committee to investigate the possibility of obtaining suitable rooms for permanent headquarters of the league. There are nearly two hundred picture theaters in Cleveland and the league hopes to make every exhibitor a member. The advantages of permanent headquarters and club rooms, a place for social and business gatherings and a center of activities in the film business locally, are offered as incentives for membership. It is planned to install a projecting machine and run off such films as the exhibitors wish to inspect before presenting them in their theaters.

TEXAS VITAGRAPHERS AT FORT CLARK.

The Texas Vitagraph Company arrived in Fort Clark a few days ago and have started work in earnest. The first picture will be "His Bunkie," a stirring one-reel play written by Col. Jasper Ewing Brady.

NEW YORK CITY EXHIBITORS UNITE.

Hold a Mass Meeting for the Purpose of Reorganizing Under Banner of Exhibitors' League of America.

AS the result of a discussion between the officers of the Cinema Club, Borough of Bronx, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Local No. 1, a mass meeting was held in the Candler Theater on Thursday, February 25. At the preliminary meeting, which was held in Room 403, World Tower Building, the headquarters of the Greater New York Association, it was declared that the president of Local No. 1 was willing to place the charter of his organization at the disposal of the body, and that he had authority for his action. The resolution adopted by the representatives of the three associations declare "that we now consider ourselves such members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and that each local shall become branches thereof, within the limits of the Greater City of New York." This was signed by John J. Wittman, Maurice L. Fleischman, Ed Valensi, A. B. Samuelson, Robert C. Whitten, C. R. Martineau, Adolph Weiss, Sam H. Trigger, Charles A. Goldreyer, Lee A. Ochs and M. Oestreicher.

It was following the adoption of the resolutions that those present decided to call the combined mass meeting at the Candler Theater, the use of which was tendered the body through the courtesy of George Kleine. In the printed announcement it was stated that the business before the gathering of February 25 would be the ratification of the work of the officers of the three associations and the reelection of officers for the whole body.

On Tuesday, February 23, a general meeting of the Cinema Club ratified the action of its officers. On the day following the Greater New York Association took similar action.

THURSDAY'S RATIFICATION MEETING.

A mass meeting of New York exhibitors was held at the Candler theater Thursday morning, February 25, for the purpose of ratifying the action of the executive committees of the Bronx Cinema Club and the New York City Association. J. J. Witman of the Cinema Club was temporary chairman and called the meeting to order. There was a fair representation of New York Exhibitors present.

When the action of the executive committees of the two organizations had been approved permanent officers were elected as follows: President, Lee A. Ochs; vice-president, M. Ostrander; treasurer, Phillip Rosenson; secretary, Adolph Weiss.

The following were elected as a finance committee: J. J. Witman, Nathan Hirsch, and William Hollender. A Committee of way and means was appointed to devise methods of financing the organization.

President Marion S. Pearce of the National League was present and addressed the meeting upon the necessity of harmony.

SCREENERS HOLD ENJOYABLE BEEFSTEAK DINNER.

Joe Baker and his violin were the outstanding features of the entertainment following the Third Rewinder's beefsteak of the Screen Club, held at the clubhouse on the evening of Saturday, February 20. Mr. Baker's musicianly work came as a surprise to those of his brother members who did not know that he is a concert violinist as well as a screen player. There were other factors of the impromptu entertainment that held the closest attention and drew forth generous applause. There was Dan Mason, with his corking stories in German dialect; there was Walter Macnamara with his inimitable tales of the real Irishman; there was Glen White, who sang in fine voice; William H. Tooker, who with dramatic force gave an original recitation; Anders Randolf, who gave a recitation; Augustus Phillips, who told a story of Southern darkies; Second Vice-President "Doc" Willat, who as the ranking officer present, made a short talk; Joe Dailey, who responded to demands for a speech, and made one; and there were several finely executed selections on Edison Diamond Disc records, among the more notable of which was that of a male quartet in "Alone in the Deep."

Dr. Wilbert Shallenberger, president of the Thanhouser company, was present as the guest of Arthur Ashley. Dr. Shallenberger, when called on by the Rewinder expressed his pleasure at being present at the monthly gathering of the Screeners. Phil Lang, scenario editor of Kalem, also was present as the guest of William Wadsworth.

Reel Fellows' Club Ball

A Brilliant Affair With Over 1,000 Guests on the Floor. Grand March Led by Mayor and Mrs. Harrison.

By James S. McQuade.

THE first annual ball of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, opened in the Louis XVI. room of the Hotel Sherman, Monday evening, at 9.30 P. M. The mezzanine floor of the hotel, immediately beneath, was also at the disposal of guests, and the occasion was altogether marked by a distinction and display that promises better things for the club as a permanent institution. There has been much in its history heretofore, that forbade recognition of a legitimate character; but the officers and board of governors have done so well in this instance that the past has been redeemed, and it looks as if Chicago, henceforth, will have a Reel Fellows' Club that will be worthy of the city's eminence as a great center of the film industry.

The Louis XVI. room was becomingly and artistically decorated in honor of America's first great president, and the comfort of the thousand guests and over was insured by the ample accomodations offered in adjoining parlors and excellently ventilated corridors. I have viewed many festive gatherings, of varied character, set in the midst of surroundings that appealed both to the artistic eye and good taste, and am happy to state frankly that the Reel Fellows of Chicago did not suffer in comparison by the lack of anything that was worth notice.

The personnel of the assemblage reflected both refinement and subdued good taste in the costuming of the ladies present, as well as of the men, and the air of demeanor and social decorum was in harmonious conformity. The aspect to an observant outsider, who had never before been in close contact with representatives of the film industry, could not fail to convince that the "picture business" is worthy of being ranked with the hitherto big, acknowledged legitimate business enterprises of this country. With this creditable and honorable showing the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago has submerged former commonplace, and some ignoble, meetings, and promises worthy accomplishments for the future. And this is "a consummation devoutly to be wished."

The entertainment and arrangement committee deserves praiseworthy mention for the happy conduct of the affair. Warren A. Patrick, Chairman, R. R. Nehls and Capt. L. A. Boening are to be congratulated. The dancing numbers were nicely varied by singing acts, some of them octet numbers, vaudeville and other divertisements. One of the latter that afforded both surprise and much applause was the unveiling of "Our Presidents." When the big American flag that decorated the back of the platform was pulled aside it revealed George Washington. The next pull revealed R. R. Nehls, the first, and present president of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, and the applause and merriment were catching.

The committee also arranged for the moving picture taking of the grand march, led by Mayor and Mrs. Carter H. Harrison, which took place about 11 o'clock P. M. These pictures were taken by our old friend, Daniel Webster McKinney, and will be shown in a coming Universal Weekly.

Ballroom Scene at Reel Fellows' Club Ball, Chicago.

President R. R. Nehls and Mrs. Nehls were the second in line after the Mayor and his wife.

About midnight, Mayor Harrison, before retiring, made a brief speech, in which he complimented the representatives of the trade present on the imposing spectacle before him, and referred to the growing importance of the moving picture industry and its future.

Dancing was then resumed until 3 o'clock, A. M., by special permit, 1 o'clock being Chicago's regular hour for the cessation of such meetings.

It was given out that the following members of the legitimate stage, now in Chicago, were present for the occasion: Maclyn Arbuckle, Joseph Brennan, Julian Eltinge, Miss Joyce Fair, Henry Kolker, Charles Meakins, Thomas Meighan, Miss Kairilyn Miller, Geo. Monroe, Thos. K. Ross, James Spottiswoode, Mabel Taliaferro, Ernest Truex, Gus Weinburg, Fred Dent and Mr. and Mrs. Karl Witt.

The list of Essanay people present was as follows: A. V. Steis, superintendent of the plant; Richard Travers, Rapley Holmes, Bryant Washburn, Francis X. Bushman, Joe Roach, producers Jos. Bryan, Totten, Richard Baker and Wright, Freeman Owens, Wallace Beery, Miss Ruth Stonehouse and Mrs. Rapley Holmes.

Harry Meyers and Miss Rosemary Theby, of Universal, made a long trip to be present, and Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, accompanied by Joe Brandt, beamed smiles as he was welcomed by hundreds on the floor.

Pop Lubin, the old veteran from Philadelphia, was one of the spryest men present. This was the only stay made by him in Chicago since the Columbia Exposition in 1893. George Kleine also graced the assemblage by his presence. Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Hough and Mr. and Mrs. J. Clarkson Miller represented the George Kleine forces.

It was stated by officials of the club that 3,500 tickets had been sold for the ball, at one dollar each, and that there were over 1,000 guests on the floor.

General Denial of Fox Complaint

Motion Picture Patents Company and Allied Concerns Sued by Fox Say Claims Are Baseless.

A GENERAL denial of the charge of participating in a conspiracy in restraint of interestae commerce in the moving picture industry to build a monopoly in the business is the answer made by more than a score of corporate and individual defendants to the suit brought in the United States District Court by the Greater New York Film Rental Company to recover triple damages of $1,800,000 under the Sherman Law.

Prior to 1908 when the Motion Picture Patents Company came into existence and acquired the Edison, Latham, Armat, Pross and Smith patents on projecting machines and other devices utilized in the industry, chaos prevailed and there was no such thing as the lawful conduct of the business the defendants aver and since that time the only lawful conduct of the moving picture business has been under the licensed agreements granted to the so-called licensed manufacturers by the Motion Picture Patents Company.

Instead of engaging in a conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce in motion pictures the defendants assert licenses were freely offered to all producrs who sought them and the plaintiff company was granted a license and has obtained and is still obtaining a complete and adequate supply of films it is alleged.

At the time the Motion Picture Patents Company was organized the defendants allege the industry was hampered by a mass of litigation involving infringement of the patents above mentioned and in order to eliminate as far as possible the court actions the plan was conceived of organizing a single corporation to control the patents and issue licenses to producers granting them privileges to use the projecting machines on a royalty basis.

The inventors mentioned created the moving picture art the defendants allege, and they have been receiving substantial royalties from the Motion Picture Patents Company on their patented inventions since its organization.

"In the summer of 1908 every manufacturer of projecting machines was making and selling them in infringement of one or more of the projecting machine patents referred to," assert the defendants. "The invention embodies in each of these projecting machine patents were essential to a successful projecting machine and the owners of any of them was in a position to prevent the manufacture of any projecting machine."

Before the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company the patents mentioned were controlled by the Edison Manufacturing Company, the Vitagraph Company, the Armat Moving Picture Company and others, it is alleged.

Practically all of the defendants named in the suit have filed answers including the General Film Company, the Motion Picture Patents Company, the Vitagraph Company, the Edison Manufacturing Company, the Biograph Company, the Kalem Company, the Selig Polyscope Company, the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company and the Lubin Manufacturing Company, together with the following individual defendants: William T. Rock, Percival L. Waters, Harry N. Marvin, Jeremiah J. Kennedy, William Pelzer, Frank L. Dyer, Samuel Long, Jacques A. Berst, Albert E. Smith, George K. Spoor, George Kleine, William Selig and Siegmund Lubin.

Other defendants who have not answered are Pathe Freres, the Armat Moving Picture Company and Gaston Melies.

Kriterion Cartoons Making Good

Harry Palmer Doing Good Work in His Amusing Treatment of Topics Under Public Discussion.

ONE of the novelties on the Kriterion program is the series of cartoons drawn by Harry Palmer and released under the Pyramid brand. Mr. Palmer's first subject was shown to the public on February 12. It is entitled Kriterion Komic Kartoon and consists of five divisions. These are "Bryan Hunting Rabbits in Virginia," "Taft Plays Golf," "The New Veil," "Wheat Goes Soaring" and "Darnin' Sox for Soldiers." It will be noted that Mr. Palmer, in selecting subjects for his pencil, has chosen those of timely interest. The release for the week of February 15 is a bit of a departure from this rule. "Adventures of Professor Dabbler" is an amusing burlesque. Many things happen to the professor. There is a lot of action in this picture, the kind of action that requires time to put over. Mr. Palmer admits that getting out 500 feet a week of drawings of this description gives him plenty to do.

The subjects touched upon in the release of February 26 are "The Hotel De Gink," a satire on the widely advertised "municipal" institution for sheltering the homeless; "Panama Canal" "Bundle Day" and "Becoming President of Mexico." For March 5 there will be "Industrial Investigation," "Wilson Goes Fishing" and "Baseball Training North and South." On March 19 "Citizen Soldiery" and "Hoop Skirts" are the subjects.

Mr. Palmer brings to his work a fund of humor as well as of patience. His portrayal of the adventures of Brakebeam Bertram and his fanciful description of the interior of the Hotel De Gink will amuse picture patrons far from the metropolis which boasts this unique hostelry. In "Bundle Day" he shows what happened to one man whose open-hearted wife disposed of her husband's sole pair of trousers. "Wilson Goes Fishing" treats of the declaration of the President in regard to the election of 1916, and shows many others fishing through the ice trying to land the same denomination of fish or the same nomination. In "Hoop Skirts" Mr. Palmer shows what will happen in subway trains if the suggested revival of ample female wear becomes an actuality.

In a conversation with a World man who with him had been looking at the subjects mentioned in the foregoing Mr. Palmer said he appreciated that what the public most desired in cartoons was action and that he was endeavoring to meet this demand. He said that in the considerable amount of drawings he had done for the motion picture camera since last summer he had learned much, that as each picture appears on the screen the artist is bound to see many opportunities for doing better and more effective work on the next one. In the subjects mentioned here Mr. Palmer has done much good work, work that gives promise of even better to come, and there would seem to be no question that it will be popular with Kriterion patrons.

PICTURES ON PERCENTAGE BASIS IN ENGLAND.

Advices from London reveal that new methods of handling pictures have been adopted by the renting agencies in that city. Agencies are refusing to buy subjects, but are demanding that they be supplied with prints free, which they handle on a percentage basis. To meet this condition it is reported that the Mutual and Universal Companies have established booking offices and are handling their own subjects.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM "EXCLUSIVE" IN FILMDOM

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, New York, is in receipt of a telegram to the effect that the Panama-Pacific International Exposition has accepted the Universal Program for exclusive exhibition during the fair in the Filmdome. From this we gather that the Universal has landed some important concession.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Denver Exhibitors Fear Heavy Taxation.

I HAVE just learned that exhibitors of Denver are in imminent danger of being outrageously taxed by the municipal government. Producing companies and other interests will also feel the weight of the ordinance powers of the city fathers. The following extracts from a Denver paper gives full particulars:

A series of amendments to the theatrical and amusement license ordinance of the city were introduced by Commissioner Clair J. Pitcher in the city council. In their entirely, the amendments amount to a complete reorganization of the amusement license system of the city.

New features of the series of amendments are the placing of license requirements upon the production and sale of moving picture films, and upon theatrical schools where the art of acting for moving pictures is taught and also fixing the standard of license fees for moving picture theaters upon the seating capacity of the houses, in place of the entrance fee, as heretofore.

The amendments place large discretionary power to grant or refuse licenses in the hands of the commissioner of finance and impose stricter requirements on the amusement vendors and establishments as to order, sanitation and precautions for the safety of patrons.

If passed as introduced, the license amendments would add greatly to the revenue of the city from this source. Picture houses now pay $100 a year for 5-cent shows and $200 for 10-cent shows. Under the proposed amendment, they would have to pay three cents a month for each seat of their entire seating capacity. This change, it is estimated, would produce as much revenue from the smaller houses as they are now paying and would require the larger houses to pay, in some instances, five times what they now pay. One house on Curtis with 2,000 seating capacity now pays $100 yearly. Under the amendment, it would pay $60 monthly, or $720 yearly.

The amendment requiring studios and schools teaching moving picture acting to pay $1,000 annual license and give $2,500 bonds is intended to protect students who pay their money for the purpose of receiving training in such work. Its introduction grew out of the recent alleged actions of Bert V. Brookhart, a moving picture company promoter, who is alleged to have collected money from many students and failed to give the training agreed.

Other features of the proposed amended ordinances are:

License for production and sale of one brand of moving pictures, $400 a year, payable quarterly; for additional brands by the same firm, $200 additional yearly.

For sale of second-hand films, $100 for three months; for films under six months old, $200 for three months

For circuses with 1,500 seating capacity, $300 daily; for menageries, $200 daily.

There are many other requirements of the amended ordinances which are not radically different from those in the present ordinances. The penalty for violations of the amended ordinances are fines ranging from $10 to $300 for each offense.

The Brookhart referred to above was formery general manager of the St. Francis Photoplay Co., which maintained a studio in Denver for the training of amateur film actors. Brookhart vanished and all efforts of the police to locate him, thus far, have been futile. They learned, however, that he had formerly been the manager of a dancer with a street carnival company, also manager of a moving picture school of acting at Jacksonville, Fla., in 1913, and later at Reading, Pa.

According to the alleged police disclosures, Brookhart gave contracts to his Jacksonville students entitling them to positions with the Lubin Fim Manufacturing Company. When students presented the contracts, it is asserted, they found the positions were not available. Shortly after this the Jacksonville school disbanded.

In New York, it is said, Brookhart organized the Reading school by engaging several professionals to form the nucleus of his company, at salaries of from $3 to $10 a day. Money was not forthcoming and he was compelled, it is alleged, to pay their railroad fares back to Manhattan.

Denver exhibitors are now facing a difficulty that could be met successfully by a well knit organization. It is not yet too late to get together. Combined they can exert a great force in the election of municipal officers and in preventing the passage of inimical laws—either state or municipal. This has been proved again and again in states where exhibitors are enrolled under the banner of the M. P. E. L. of America.

One thing is certain; if exhibitors are fighting among themselves, they invite onslaught by politicians and become the prey of those in power.

Exhibitors Take Notice!

The following letter was received at the Chicago office from Felix F. Feist, president and general manager of the Celebrated Players Film Company, bearing the date of Feb. 20:

It has come to our notice that some persons by the names of Doctor Dorsey and Chas. Lyons have been offering and renting our production entitled "Sealed Orders," the exclusive rights of which belong to us in the states of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Nebraska, and we would appreciate it very much if you would kindly mention in your columns the fact that unless this picture is offered on a Celebrated Players Film Company contract blank, or that any films that are to be delivered from any other source than from our company and offices, are being offered by an impostor, and we will gladly compensate any exhibitor who will wire us at our expense should this picture be offered to them by any other than a direct Celebrated Players Film Company representative.

"Sue" Contest Will End March 4th.

The competition last week in the "Sue" contest was something tremendous, but Miss Dorothy Warshauer, of the North Side, has got so far ahead that it now seems impossible for her closest competitors to reach her.

This week the girls enter the home stretch of the race to determine who will take the leading role in the Essanay photoplay, "Sue." The contest will end with the March 4th issue of the Chicago Herald. Votes will be accepted at the Herald office up until 6:00 o'clock p. m., on March 5th. All coupons clipped from the Herald of March 4th must be in the hands of the photoplay editor by 6:00 o'clock p. m. on March 5th, so as to be counted in the final summing up.

The votes of the five highest contestants at the last count stood as follows: Dorothy Warshauer, 968,740; Florence Tighe, 594,800; Gladys Swain, 402,665; Myrtle Johnson, 350,975, and Beatrice Brown, 285,950.

Maximilian A. Hoffmann, a well known Chicago sculptor, has become interested in the girls who are striving to win honors in this contest, and as a result the winner will be given an opportunity to pose for him. Mr. Hoffmann has announced, after looking over the photographs of the contestants, that the majority are perfect types of the American girl, and that he will feel honored to make a portrait of the winner. The winner will, therefore, be presented by the Chicago Herald with a portrait of herself done by Mr. Hoffmann.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Co., Edwin Porter, technical director of that company, and Samuel Goldfish, secretary of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., stopped over in Chicago on their way from California to New York, Feb. 20th. They have been engaged, for the past two weeks, in directing feature pictures in their Western studios. Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, this city, joined the party on their trip to New York from Chicago, on Saturday, Feb. 20th.

Roy C. Honeck, for many years proprietor of the Chicago Song Slide Exchange, and now secretary and treasurer of the Treble-Cleff Musical Movie Co. of Illinois, Inc., was seized a few days ago with a severe attack of pneumonia. His condition became serious on Thursday, Feb. 18th, but on Monday, Feb. 22nd, it was much improved. Roy's many friends will be very glad and thankful to learn of his complete recovery in the near future.

George J. Gilmore, owner and manager of the Ideal Theater, 1622-26 Larrabee street, this city, was encountered in Pathe's booking office by me one day last week. George has been so busy of late that he quite forgot to renew his subscription for the Moving Picture World, but had the grace to acknowledge that he was quite lost without it. He gave up three "bones" very gracefully for another year's subscription. Mr. Gilmore informed me that business at the Ideal is very fair, considering the backward times. He is offering programs of five reels in the afternoons, and four, or four and one-half reels, at night, for an admission of five cents. The afternoon program, in my estimation, is rather a liberal one, seeing that the Ideal offers Mutual features and regular releases of Pathe. Mr. Gilmore spoke enthusiastically of the merits of the Mutual features used by him.

Ed. Weigle and Donald Thompson, the two famous war photographers who left recently for Europe to take moving pictures of the European war for the Chicago Tribune, gave an informal banquet on the eve of their departure to the officers and employees of the Industrial Moving Picture Co. One of the features of the evening, in addition to interesting addresses by Mr. Weigle and Mr. Thompson, was the screening of the war pictures secured for the Chicago Tribune by Mr. Weigle in Belgium and in Mexico, and also the war pictures secured by Mr. Thompson and recently brought from Germany. Max Annenberg, circulation manager of the Chicago Tribune, was the toastmaster of the evening. Mr. Weigle went to Germany, where he will operate with the official sanction of the government, while Mr. Thompson will take moving pictures of the Russian army.

S. B. Sampson, assistant to Manager John Hardin, of Pathe's Chicago office, was seen one day last week. He spoke quite glowingly of the increase of Pathe's business in Chicago and throughout the Middle West. He asserted that within the last 30 days an increase of 30 per cent. has been shown on the whole output. He attributes this largely to the new selling plan put in force Jan. 1st, when the name of Eclectic was dropped and Pathe, Incorporated, substituted. The new serial, "The Exploits of Elaine," is doing very big business throughout the Middle West, and exhibitors generally, who book it, are reporting an increased business for every succeeding episode. The Pathe News is also enjoying popularity, Mr. Sampson stated. John Hardin, manager, was out on a trip in the interests of the Company, taking in Grand Rapids, Mich., and Fort Wayne and other points in Indiaa, when I called. A. W. Goff, district manager of the Middle West for Pathe, Incorporated, has been in Chicago for the past week. Mr. Goff is also very much enthused over the Pathe's new selling plan, the chief feature of which is the establishments of agents in local centers, with about 100 theaters to each center. Pathe has now fifteen local agencies in the Middle West. This plan is based on the plan adopted by Pathe in Europe.

Walter R. Meyer, of this city, was sentenced to one year in the House of Correction and fined seven dollars and costs in the Hyde Park Court, Wednesday, Feb. 17th, on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. He admitted getting $12 from seven business men and women in the Woodlawn police district for displaying an advertising slide of the busness of each, in a theater nearby their places of business.

The following letter, dated Feb. 17th, was recently received by the Chicago Tribune from the Belgian minister, E. Havenith, in Washington, D. C.: "I am in possession of a letter from my government stating that the draft for $10,000 which you have sent to me in behalf of the Belgian Red Cross, and which represents the second contribution of same amount donated by the Chicago Tribune as a part of the proceeds of the 'war pictures,' has been duly received. I have been instructed to express to you the very sincere thanks of the Belgian government for the valuable efforts of the Chicago Tribune to help my unfortunate countrymen."

The big suffrage photoplay, "Your Girl and Mine," has played a part in the primary campaign for the fusion candidate in this city for mayor. Women supporting the fusion candidate declared that the selection of the suffrage photoplay would be a big vote-getter for him. A large number of tickets were purchased for admittance to the Revelry Theater for Friday afternoon's exhibition, on Feb. 19th. The house was crowded and Robert R. Levy, proprietor, had all his energies taxed to prevent infringement of the ordinance. It is needless to state that the fusion candidate got great applause.

Six hundred officers and troopers of the First Cavalry, Illinois National Guard, attended the Ziegfeld Theater, Thursday and Friday nights, Feb. 18th and 19th, to see the exhibition of the Herald War Pictures. Colonel Foreman, of the regiment, announced that "good war moving pictures offer the nearest approach to a realization of the facts of modern warfare that can be obtained without an actual journey to the front." The Ziegfeld, beginning Sunday, Feb. 21st, is offering the Herald War Pictures and "David Harum." This fine feature in five reels has been produced by the Famous Players Film Co., and in it William H. Crane, the well known actor, made his first appearance in moving pictures, in his characterization of the title role.

"Uncle Sam at Work," a big nine-reel educational feature, based on Frederick J. Haskin's book, "The American Government," and produced by Henry W. Savage, entered on a two weeks' run at the Auditorium Theater, Sunday, Feb 21st. The night prices are 25, 35 and 50 cents; matinees, 25 cents. The nine reels take the spectator through all the activities carried on in government administration, including a view of the senate in session, the first instance in which moving pictures have ever been taken in the senatorial chamber during an actual business session. The pictures also show how the army and navy are drilled, how the post office is conducted, how money is manufactured, and how deserts are turned into rich, bearing sections. An instrument is shown in the pictures, so delicate that it registers the heat of a candle 53 miles away, and a powerful machine is shown which exerts a pressure of 2,300,000 pounds and twists gigantic steel girders as if they were made of strands of flax. Twenty-seven of the principal activities of the Government are shown with a realism that holds one spellbound, as the story is told on the screen and elucidated by the lecturer.

I overlooked to state in last week's brevities that I had met in Columbus at the Ohio convention O. J. Sybert, C. A Frantz and T. C. Weber, members of the Cambridge and Marietta Amusement Co. This company is successor to the Marietta Hippodrome Co., and is now building a moving picture theater costing $30,000 in Cambridge, O., which lies 20 miles east of Zanesville. Fred C. Elliot, of Columbus, is the architect, and this theater will be the forty-third in the state built by him. The house will be thoroughly modern throughout, including the latest ventilating and fire-proof systems. It will be christened the Strand, and it is expected will be ready for opening early in June. The C. and M. Company is now operating the Hippodrome in Marietta, which offers straight picture programs of Paramount service. Business was very fair the owners said.

Williams With World Film

As Head of the Special Attractions Departments He Will Take Charge of Exports.

J. D. WILLIAMS, a well known moving picture man, is now with the World Film Corporation. He assumed charge of the special attractions department and will install an export department with this company.

Mr. Williams has extensive experience in moving pictures in Canada, Australia and United States. He opened the first moving picture show in Vancouver, B. C., in 1905, which was one of the first moving picture houses to be opened on the Pacific Coast. He had five shows in Vancouver at the end of his first year's operations there. He was afterward engaged in the business in Spokane, Washington, where he conducted a film exchange in conjunction with theaters prior to his leaving for Australia.

In 1909 he opened the first continuous show in Australia on a big scale. He was managing director of the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company, with a capital of one million dollars, operating film exchanges and motion picture theaters throughout Australia. He was also managing director of the J. D. Williams New Zealand Company and Luna Park Company of Melbourne. Both of these companies with a combined capital of a half million dollars.

Since returning from Australia Mr. Williams has been associated with the Bosworth Company of Los Angeles, and W. W. Hodkinson of San Francisco. He resigned his position with these companies to go abroad to look over the foreign field for some large interests. On account of the war these plans have been dropped for the present. During Mr Williams' career he has made four tours of Europe as well as a trip to the Orient investigating conditions in moving picture houses.

The prospects for American productions abroad are greater than ever. In his opinion no American manufacturers have the proper export department which will enable their productions to be marketed properly in all corners of the globe.

EDISON STARS AT ELKS' BALL.

As Edison representatives Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt were the especially invited guests at a brilliant ball given by the Elks in the Auditorium at Springfield, Mass., February 18, when 3,000 enthusiastic guests accorded them a royal welcome. Both Miss Nesbitt and Mr. MacDermott some time ago played in Springfield. The local papers, with one mind, agree that it was a most brilliant social function, and the Edison stars warmly agree with it. Miss Nesbitt and Mr. MacDermott, safely ensconced in a dark box, instead of being introduced in the conventional way, had a spot light unexpectedly flashed upon them. The gathering, highly amused at the situation, and recognizing them at once, sent up a rousing cheer for the two film favorites so often seen paired in the pictures. The dancing lasted until 5 o'clock in the morning, but this did not deter William V. Hart, of the General Film Company, from showing the invited stars around the town in his car.

Doings at Los Angeles

SKIDDING rapidly on the wet pavement, Lillian Peacocke, leading woman with the Joker players, in endeavoring to avoid hitting an old woman who was about to board a street car, crashed her automobile into the car, wrecking it and injuring herself and the occupants of the machine. The most seriously injured was Harry Carter, who played the heavy in "The Master Key," who was cut on head and shoulders. Ella Hall, the heroine of the same company, escaped without a scratch, and her mother was only bruised and shaken up. Miss Peacocke is suffering from a badly dislocated shoulder and will be unable to work for several weeks. The party was rushed to the Children's hospital and later to the institution in Universal City, where they were cared for over-night and the next day. Their escape from death is said to have been nothing short of miraculous.

Laid up for ten days with writer's cramp is the record made by Editor Del Ruth of the Keystone outfit, whose stenographer wrote so fast and furiously for a week that he lost control of his short hand. No wonder Keystone buys no scenarios!

Rumor, sometimes tricky, and again true, but startling, now has it that Henry B. Walthall, formerly with the Mutual, and lately joined Balboa, has closed with his old company and will return to work there in a short time. This comes from good authority says the rumor, but time must tell.

The tide of big men is still ebbing and flowing here. Manager Samuel Goldfish, of the Lasky firm, has departed for New York, and will beat this letter. Mr. Adolph Zukor, of the F. P., also has returned home. Mr. Louis J. Selznick, of the World Films, after spending a week here, has gone to Salt Lake. B. A. Rolfe, of the firm which bears his name, arrived here on the 18th from the East.

G. P. Hamilton, of the Albuquerque, left for the East on the same day to re-arrange releases on account of new program changes in the East. He will be gone three weeks. Production at that studio has ceased until he returns. Carl Laemmle should be here shortly after the first of March, for his new city will be opened on the 15th.

Los Angeles is not only the production center, but the exhibition hub as well, for this week the theater ads in local papers are given over almost exclusively to moving pictures. W. H. Clune, magnate of filmplays in Southern California, is seeing the highest tide of attendance in the existence of moving picture theaters in this part of the country. When Griffith made the "Clansman" he did something. If he had not put over a picture which had the goods, the people would not wear out the pavement in front of the house, trying to secure seats. From opening to closing of box office, a continuous line-up, half a block in length, is to be seen waiting, and at times it even reaches around the corner. This big film is to start its third week, and the outlook is for a record that will stand.

Hardly running second is the record of Stanley H. Twist and the famous Williamson submarine pictures at Trinity auditorium, managed by L. E. Behymer. Mr. Twist, who took the California state contracts for this wonderful and startling lecture-picture, says that he is really surprised at the phenomenal attendance. Rain has no effect on the picture-mad, for the line actually extended out into the storm one day this week. These films are startlingly realistic, and the local press has given much space to them. At the theater the following was overheard, spoken probably by a man who knows something about pictures: "They have put everyone on the screen but the cameraman—who TOOK those pictures down there under the water?" The question deserves some comment certainly, for how must the light have been way down there?

The birth of an iceberg, dangerous even to the tensely watching spectator, followed by the splash and wash of monster seas, is the feature of the "Lure of Alaska" films by Dr. Leonard S. Sugden, now running to record crowds at the Mozart theater. Leaping salmon, and other animated pictures, crowned by the doctor's daring run down the rapids, are all gripping and intensely exciting scenes in this big film lecture. The photography is surprisingly free from static, and the framing is well done. One strip of film showing the voyage of a river steamer is actually pasted in upside down, for the ripples on the water are discovered in the sky. It is one of those mirror-like river scenes, where land is reflected in water. About two thousand educators were entertained with the lecture this week.

The "Griffith Rangers," the western photoplay army, are mobilizing here for coming raids on the picture fans throughout the land. Recruiting is going on speedily and re-enlistments are expected momentarily. F. J. Grandon, who deserted Seligs, has been enticed by this company and is signed up. He put on "The Adventures of Kathlyn," the pattern picture series which has since been made so many times. He will shortly "don" his puttees and start out with a "crisp" new scenario. What!

Bosworth has competed "Help Wanted" and will probably go on a short vacation. Fritzi Scheff may be seen in "Mlle. Modiste" if she can be retained at the Morosco studio for a few weeks more.

The Black Box players with Herbert Rawlinson and Anna Little have gone via boat to San Diego for a twenty-four hour work day. They took scenes on the dock before the boat sailed. During the voyage they shot water stuff and at night under the glare of Cooper-Hewitts they did cabin and saloon scenes. This took all night and the next day they worked on the dock at the exposition city, returning that afternoon without having taken in the big Panama show. That is record work indeed. Soft? Oh, yes!—

Picture millionaires may be tacked to the players of the Crown City Co., in Pasadena, for they all are buying automobiles, and Pasadena is a well known millionaire's city. The latest to buy a naphtha cart is Allan Fralick, leading comedian with that company. He recently created much excitement in a fashionable hotel when he ran pell mell out of the lobby, made up as a woman tourist, while doing a long shot scene. Several millionaires nearly fainted when the "lady" picked up her skirts and ran.

It is said that the Williamson brothers may come west to take undersea pictures along the south coast. The marine gardens here are perfectly gorgeous and thousands of tourists have visited Catalina island where the rocky formation affords wonderful sights. The water is as clear as the air, almost, and photography should be excellent.

At last water has been piped to the Glendale Kalem studio and the players are thankful. Formerly they had to go to the well for water. James Horne is finishing "The Tattooed Hand," the fifteenth of the detective serial. Arthur Shirley, of Australia, is the latest addition to this company.

Cead Mille Failthe, said by Douglas Gerrard to mean in United States talk, ten thousand welcomes. Anyway, that was the sign over the toastmaster's chair at the club this week when he presided. It might as well have meant a million hellos, for everyone enjoyed Mr. Gerrard's entertainment. The dinner was a record breaker, lasting from seven until aften ten. Members of the Athletic club were present and the "Mayor of Rowansburg" with his cabinet, superior court judge and a scientist sat next to each other while bankers and wealthy men also enjoyed the dinner. Gerrard comes from Dublin, and the national colors were used extensively in decorating. Orpheum stars and cafe entertainers helped make the evening one of merriment.

Smuggling uncut diamonds in the hollow handle of an umbrella and trying to get away on board ship is the fun germ in a comedy being staged by Ed Dillon and a cast of Mutual players including Fay Tincher and Chet Withey. The title is "Caught by the Handle" and is by Withey who plays Schly, a sleuth.

"The Devil" and "On the Night Stage" are two multiple reel features which are being held in reserve for the new brand which Messrs. Kessel and Baumann are about to announce, according to Thomas H. Ince, producer for the New York firm. In the former, Edward Connelly and Bessie Barriscale have done wonderful work. The stage story features W. S. Hart, Robert Edeson and Rhea Mitchell. Soon all Ince features are to be released under a special brand, and these will probably be the first to come out. The Satanic picture is wonderful, and the stars are supported, or kept company, by others, including Arthur Maude, J. Barney Sherry, Clara Williams, and Rhea Mitchell.

Eighty-five thousand gallons of water will be turned into the big concrete tank which was built in the yard at the Keystone plant. No, it is not for sailing, it is a bath tub for Fatty Roscoe. There was no bath tub in Los Angeles large enough to accommodate Arbuckle, so Mack Sennett built this tub for him. Roscoe bathes in a shower most of the year, but this winter it was pretty cold. Other improvements at this lively studio are a new stage, which, added to the already large space, will allow fifteen companies to work at one time. Seventy-five dressing rooms will be included in the player's building, a two story structure which is in course of construction. Shower baths and lounging rooms will also be made in this big building. Keystone Koncrete lake will measure twenty by forty feet.

Superintendent J. H. Francis has recommended to the Board of Education that the work of the public schools be shown at the 1915 exposition in moving pictures, the estimated cost to be $3,000. No action was taken, but the offer is said to be quite attractive and their action may be favorable.

Another education film project is the following told in the local paper of to-day, which says:

Cree T. Work, principal of the Venice high school and vice-president of the Visual Education Association of California, announces that the county supervisors view favorably the request of the association to establish a free moving picture service as an arm of the county library system. The association has asked for an initial appropriation of $5,000 to start the service.

In general the plan is to furnish schools, churches and individuals with picture films of educational character.

The city council chamber was the other day transformed into the stage for a regular picture, and scenes were made supposed to be in the U. S. Senate. A battery of powerful arcs played and sizzled while the senators sat in the city council chamber. Interiors outside are becoming quite common here and there is a wealth of locations.

"Waffles, Art and Coffee" might be used as a title for a comedy to be filmed by Eddie Dillon, Mutual's fun producing director, for every noon he mounts a stool in the Mutual cafe and envelopes a plate of steamers and a pot of "jav." Waffles ought to be used by him for a comedy theme.

"There will be a hot time in the old town to-night"—Tum ditty um um—pah pah!! Beating time, cowboy rhyme. Whoop-ee!! March seventh is to be Inspection Day at Carl Laemmle's Universal City, the only moving picture municipality in the world. The whole day is to be spent in merry-making, fun and amusement. A Rodeo, cowboy carnival, dance, inspection, and sort of housewarming of the new white city will take place. Prizes, punch, and presents will be the order of the day and night and a colossal time is promised all who attend. Jane Bernoudy, the champion horsewoman, will be the main attraction of the Rodeo. All people are invited, whether they be from near or far, and a crowd is expected.

When Mr. Rolfe returned he told some interesting plans for the coming season. Closely following him is Miss Valli Valli who will be seen in "The Highroad" to be put on by John W. Noble, who by the way has just completed "Satan Sanderson" with Orrin Johnson who will be in coming Rolfe pictures. Also on the way west is Miss Emily Stevens who will be featured in "Cora," under the direction of Edwin F. Carewe who has just put the finishing touches to "The Cowboy and the Lady," with S. Miller Kent and Helen Case. The studio is being overhauled and slightly enlarged. Possibly another stake may be laid. The carpenter shop is being enlarged. Electric lights have been installed to forestall the cloud days when it does not rain.

Harold Stone who drove the racing car in the recent Corona races for "The Boob's Racing Career," a popping two-cylinder comedy by the Crown City Co., was formerly a real racing driver, having piloted some of the fastest cars in this country. He was in the first Santa Monica road race and but for a broken magneto shaft would have undoubtedly made good. He was very near death when he went over a bridge at a race in the east several years ago.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Wintry Seas Calm For "Runaway June"

Wireless Advices Tell of a Cessation of Father Neptune's Antics for Picture Actors.

WORD comes from Bermuda by wireless that Old Ocean had been badly misbehaving right up to the time when the "Runaway June" Company embarked, horse, foot and dragoons, or rather principals, accessory actors and mechanical force, on the Quebec Liner Bermudian, which the Reliance company chartered to take the Runaways to beautiful Bermuda, where the remaining scenes of the George Randolph Chester serial are being staged. But when the Juners dared to rest upon his heaving bosom, grim Father Neptune smiled and immediately subsided into an imperturbable equanimity. And so he continued until the merry party disembarked at Hamilton, which so enraged the hoary ruler of the deep that he raised aloft his barbed fork and invoked the aid of Jupiter Pluvius, who straightway stirred up the seething waters in a howling hurricane. And so it has continued ever since. No boat has been able to leave Hamilton since the Bermudian returned the next day after landing the actors.

On the steamer, in addition to the entire "Runaway June" company, were several relatives and friends of its members. These included Miss Mildred Holland, a well known theatrical star, the sister of Frank Holland, one of the June company; Mrs. Adey, the mother of Miss Grace Adey, another moving picture player; Mrs. J. W. Johnston, wife of the actor who plays Ned, the husband of "Runaway June;" Mrs. Levering, wife of the sporting news illustrator, and Clarence M. Lewis of the law firm of Seligsberg & Lewis of 55 Liberty Street, New York.

It was indeed a busy voyage for the cranks of three moving picture cameras were turning all the while, and two still photographers were equally busy with their kodaks. The entire tenth episode of two reels was taken on the boat and there was no little excitement on the part of the officers and crew who had their first experience as participants in a famous photoplay. The remaining episodes are now being taken in the beautiful environment of nature's fairyland, where thrilling pirate plots, shipwrecks and wonderful submarine scenes will be included in the action of the drama. It is easy to understand now why so few moving pictures are laid in these superb surroundings, as the dangers and uncertainty of the sea makes it a perilous and sometimes a very costly undertaking.

UNIVERSAL CITY REFUSES TO GO DRY.

Universal City has been deluged again. The river which flows through the town roared over its banks and carried out the rustic bridges along its course. For a block on each side of it rubbish floating down from the San Fernando mountains backed up against the barbed wire fences crossing the city's outskirts and every two or three hours a shack on the mountainside, its foundations undermined by the flood, collapsed and came tumbling down stream.

The fourteenth installment of "The Master Key" was filmed only by shooting the streets from the rear end and cutting off the upper stories of the buildings. An entire street had to be transferred into the studio when the flood again threatened the set which was reconstructed after the first great storm of two weeks ago.

And according to latest reports the Los Angeles weather prophet has predicted twenty-one days more of rain. For the past ten days the rain has fallen without even as much as an hour's intermission. Work in the making of pictures has practically been suspended and if it were not for the great new interior studio at Universal City the directors of the Big U would be most decidedly up in the air. Director Leonard has made good use of the new banks of artificial lights which have been installed in the studio and is working far into the early hours of the morning in order to finish up the last installment of "The Master Key" on time. Some of the companies have worked night and day in shifts in an effort to turn out the required negative.

Extra forces of laborers have been employed to repair the damage done during the recent big storms that have swept the countryside. Other workmen are doing their best to rebuild the concrete bridge near the entrance to the city, several spans of which have been carried off.

TORONTO SUFFRAGETTE BOOSTING "YOUR GIRL AND MINE."

The Toronto Canada Suffragettes are boosting "Your Girl and Mine," and have arranged to give part of the proceeds from the exhibitions to the Canadian Patriotic funds to provide for soldiers' families.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

A SUBSTANTIAL prize should be offered to the person who can suggest and put in operation some scheme that will arouse the motion picture exhibitors to a sense of duty to themselves. Taking advantage of their inertness, the ever-present enemy of the motion picture business has again launched a campaign that is as dangerous to the interests of the exhibitors of this city and state as any heretofore waged against them, and yet the exhibitors are practically unorganized for their protection. Were it not for a comparatively few men who have always gone to the front in a crisis, there would not be any organization at all. These men, of course, are endeavoring to protect themselves; but as their interests are identical with those of all other exhibitors and the protection sought would be of equal advantage to all, it is inconceivable that the work should be left to a few. Is it not a deplorable state of affairs that of the nine hundred exhibitors in Greater New York less than thirteen per cent. of them are active in the organization that is spending time and money for their protection?

If the exhibitors of this state hope to continue business they must make up their minds at once to devote some of their time and funds in co-operation with the more active of their fraternity. It is as essential that they do this as it is to spend time and money on their places of business. They must fight the proposed ordinance which places upon them the burden of proof as to whether adults accompanying children under sixteen years of age to picture shows are the parents, guardians or authorized companions of the children. This is one of the most unreasonable measures ever contrived against the exhibitors of this city. At Albany the conspirators have a bill against the exhibition of motion pictures on Sundays and another providing for state censorship. This activity on the part of the anti-picture house conspirators should arouse every exhibitor in the state to give all he can to his organization.

Some people who are interested in the many movements against the picture business protest when they are referred to as conspirators. They claim there is no conspiracy, but simply ordinary efforts to secure the enactment of laws designed for the best interests of the people. The applying of the term "conspirators" to those raising the objection is due, no doubt, to the fact that, while the measures taken are not conceived and urged by any known national organization, there is a striking similarity in the movements and framing of the proposed laws in all parts of the country. Take, as an instance, the censorship bill presented to the New York legislature. The text is identical with that of the Ohio law. It may be a coincidence, but taking it with other developments there is justification for the belief that there is a persistent and powerful underground campaign against the motion picture business. The source is well known. There is on record a declaration by certain interests that they would never become reconciled to motion pictures. The difference between the time when that declaration was made and the present is that those who placed themselves on record are now working under cover. These are the interests the exhibitors have, and aiways will have, against them. They must help their organization to fight these interests that are carrying on their work in trenches and tunnels. They have given up fighting in the open because public sentiment is with the pictures.

The anti-picture people have expressed jubilation over the action of the exhibitors' convention in Columbus, O., in supporting the state censorship law. There is no objection to letting them make all they can of it. It carries little weight. Some of those Ohio exhibitors must be funny people! The main question before them was, or should have been, whether or not the convention considered official censorship constitutional. They dodged the issue and voted upon whether local or state censorship was the most desirable. Few will dispute that if either is constitutional a state body is preferable to a multiplicity of local boards. The Ohio state board probably has rendered good and satisfactory service, but no reflection would have been cast had the convention taken the bull by the horns and declared unwas the original intention when steps were taken to have the law repealed.

With all due respect to the Ohio convention, it is the sense of the exhibitors in the East that the verdict of the convention does not represent the sentiment of the Ohio exhibitors. In the first place, there was but a meagre representation, for which the exhibitors alone are responsible. If they will not give time to their organization they must put up with the consequences. Their indifference is another warning to the New York exhibitors to get together and get busy. What was lost in Ohio is being used against them in New York. It was a lost opportunity. Think of it! The whole state was represented by sixty-three exhibitors. The total number of cities and towns represented was twenty-three. With every hamlet in the country having a picture house this does not appear to be much of a showing. The vote on the censorship question was thirty-nine in favor of the state board and twenty-one against. Three delegates did not vote. This is significant. Possibly they refrained from voting because the question was not presented in the form originally intended. An analysis of the vote shows that, metaphorically speaking, the tail wagged the dog, instead of the dog waggging the tail. In the city where the exhibitors' organization is the strongest the vote was but one short of being unanimous against the state board. Cleveland cast seventeen votes against and one for it. Cincinnati and Columbus cast seven and nine votes, respectively for the board. Their votes were unanimous and their sixteen votes with the one vote from Cleveland tied the vote of the latter city and left the decision to the smaller cities and towns, which cast twenty-two votes for and four against the state board.

This analysis sounds a warning to the moving picture exhibitors' association in the state of New York. They must organize and educate the exhibitors of the entire state, and not depend upon the strength and prestige of Greater New York alone. If good work is to be done at Albany and they are to get the protection sought, the influence in the state "above the Harlem" must be as carefully looked after as it is in a regular political campaign. The enemy is not depending upon the greater city. Scattering support from there will satisfy them if they can work the "country vote." That is where most of their strength comes from. The New York people must remember Cleveland with its seventeen to one.

Sam Bullock, a veteran among the veterans of the motion picture exhibiting field, has many friends in New York. He made a gallant fight with his Cleveland delegation, and one of the most gratifying results of the convention to his friends in the East is that there has been no indication of a disruption of the organization, although the debates on the censorship question were heated and prolonged. Ohio must remain organized to help strengthen the national body, which has great and important work before it in addition to the censorship problem. While the latter is of vital importance to all in the motion picture business, it should not be allowed to create any splits in the exhibitors' association. Any dissatisfaction created by local or state rulings regarding censorship will eventually be definitely settled in another quarter. When the United States Supreme Court hands down a decision in the Ohio case now in its hands there will be an end to the discussion. Conservative people have repeatedly urged suspension of censorship movements pending this decision, but the desire of the enemy to annoy and impatience of politicians to create political berths for friends have overruled better judgment. The duty of the exhibitors now is to keep together and get others together so as to be prepared for storms that are to come.

TYRONE POWER AS MAVERICK BRANDER.

Tyrone Power assumes the leading role of Maverick Brander in "A Texas Steer," a five reel film version by the Selig Polyscope Company of Charles Hoyt's laughable comedy of American life. Mr. Power brings to the character all the sympathy and refined comedy that the role requires. "A Texas Steer" will be released in the near future.

DE ROSELLI IN "THE BLOOD OF THE CHILDREN."

Rex de Rosselli, the handsome character actor of the Bison-Universal Company, in California, is playing in "The Blood of the Children," a thrilling tale of the west. In this picture play Tom Walsh, one of the property men, was terribly burned by a powder explosion.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

SUCCESSFUL MOVING PICTURE WORK IN A LEADING HIGH SCHOOL.

While from time to time we are able to record the growth of the uses of the moving picture along broad educational lines, it has not been our privilege to record a more systematic and thorough work than that accomplished in Lincoln, Nebraska. Believing that many of our readers will be interested in the course followed in this special instance, we publish parts of the letter of Principal Vernon G. Mays, A. M., giving the details of the plans pursued and followed.

The high school Patrons' Association has an equipment committee consisting of five members of our association and the principal of the high school. At its first meeting of the year 1914-15, the principal reported that one of the things which might prove of much value to the school and the community would be a moving picture machine. The careful tabulation of the attendance upon moving pictures had been made the previous year by a committee of grade principals. This investigation showed that in the

Fourth	grade, average age	10.7	years,	86.6%	go
Fifth	" " "	11.8	"	91.8%	"
Sixth	" " "	12.8	"	89.1%	"
Seventh	" " "	13.6	"	84.9%	"
Eighth	" " "	14.4	"	87.5%	"

A total of about 6,800 children attend the picture shows every week. Many items of interest were investigated by this committee. A study of each sex was made by it, and the full table showing an analysis of the questionaire is quite extensive. The point of value in this connection, however, is that a very large percentage of our pupils attend moving picture shows more or less regularly. There are six regular moving picture theaters on our main streets. Besides these there are two other theaters which offer moving pictures from time to time through the warmer months of the year. We have also an airdome and a Capital Beach moving picture theater. While these, as a whole, offer some very pleasing pictures, there are from time to time films shown which are objectionable in their effect upon young people. To overcome this objection, and in a degree to satisfy the young people, the Patrons' Association undertook to purchase and use a motion picture machine in the high school auditorium. Through the courtesy of Dr. Condra of the University of Nebraska, two lectures, illustrated by moving pictures of the industries of Nebraska, were given by him. The proceeds of these lectures were used toward the purchase of a standard machine. We bought a Powers 6A. This was installed December 11. In the evening of that day our Patrons' Association held its regular meeting. The program was under the auspices of the equipment committee.

Three members of the high school faculty reported the needs of the high school for equipment besides that which had been furnished by the Board of Education. A member of the committee read a paper on the educational value of moving pictures. Following this, the moving picture machine was used to project stereopticon slides, which showed the work of the West Technical High School, of Cleveland, Ohio; also slides showing the floor plans of the new high school of our own city. Then the moving picture device was brought into use, and a film showing the working of the Cushman Motor factory, of Lincoln, was exhibited; also a feature film which had been rented from one of the exchanges. The following week a matinee and two evening exhibitions were given of the "John Barleycorn" film. For this, admission was charged, and the proceeds were also used to pay for the machine.

Now, with reference to our future plans. The work which was given above illustrates the two lines along which we shall plan our use of the machine. Such material as Professor Condra used showing the resources of the state of Nebraska, and the one which the principal used showing a local factory, and some since from Europe illustrate the use which will be made of the machine for instruction in Commercial Geography, Agriculture, Science, and such other departments as it may be possible to find films to illustrate. The use of the "John Barleycorn" film is a sample of what we shall undertake to do in providing wholesome entertainment. We shall use the motion pictures within the school day for making more vivid the subjects studied in the class room. During the evening and on Saturdays, we shall use it to offer programs that may be helpfully entertaining.

We cannot do more than most highly commend the efforts in the Lincoln school and congratulate all concerned for the wise and thorough courses taken with a definite object in view; under such conditions success is commanded. We shall be glad to hear of the future further progress of this work and are sure that its publication here will be an incentive to many others; the plans also are worthy of repetition by any who desire profitable results.

Through the courtesy of Phil. P. Benedict, an entertainment was provided for the orphans of the Institution of Mercy, on Lincoln's Birthday. More than five hundred children enjoyed a motion picture exhibition, "The Life of St. Patrick, from the Cradle to the Grave." Many of the clergy who were present commended the picture as a highly instructive and edifying entertainment.

ITEMS FROM EVERYWHERE.

In Atlanta, Georgia, Dr. Atkinson, Dean of Phillips' Cathedral, is going to use the Savoy Picture Theatre on Sunday evenings. Dr. C. K. Nelson, Bishop of Georgia, will conduct the first service. Popular Sunday evening services is the object in view.

The Congregational Church in Muscatine, Iowa, is going to use religious pictures at the Sunday evening services, the pastor, Rev. A. G. Graves believes that services of this kind will prove helpful and solve the problem of Sunday pictures and church attendance on Sunday evenings.

Colorado is going to use moving pictures to advertise the roads of the State under the auspices of the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway Association. This route from New York passes through Colorado Springs, Glenwood Springs, Rifle and Meeker to Pikes Peak. A committee representing each county has been chosen.

An experiment in moving picture education is being tried in Cleveland, the various subjects are to be taught only by the aid of films. Pencils and paper will only be used for examination purposes and pupils will be graded as in an ordinary school. Mr. C. G. Thompson, manager of a film service, is conducting the plan, backed by representative business men.

The Parent-Teachers' Association of Louisville, Kentucky, are planning to have moving picture machines installed in the schools. Like similar associations in many towns, they are able to secure the help of pictures in the schools while the too methodical and slow-moving educational are still "thinking about them."

A solitary Cleveland clergyman is still so far in arrears of his day that to him moving pictures are still "cheap and dangerous." As is usual under such circumstances, newspapers are calling him to account and showing that not only have the pictures come to stay, but that they are proving a mighty force for good. Again a little opposition is a big help.

In Minneapolis the Central High School Technical Club has organized a department to give moving picture exhibitions several times a week. The proceeds are to help their club work. It is reported that this school is the only one in Minneapolis to own and operate a moving picture plant; doubtless others will now follow.

The University of Kansas has started a moving picture film exchange which will operate free of charge for the benefit of the smaller schools of the state. So far the results have been very satisfactory, many school principals using the films in the local theaters, where the school has no apparatus. Clergymen, too, are availing themselves of this opportunity.

In East Lansing, Mich., farming is being taught by moving pictures. This agricultural moving picture enterprise is under the direction of Mr. C. E. Lindeman, a state authority, and will be conducted in various parts of the state. The pictures will portray various operations in tilling the soil and raising the crops in such a way that boys and girls in the "Potato and Corn Growers' Clubs" may receive much helpful instruction.

In harmony with the purpose of the above use of moving pictures, in Detroit the children of institutions for afflicted children are being taught by moving pictures with a facility previously found impossible by the ordinary school methods. The Civic League is taking the matter in charge and is looking for "a wonderful advantage in this special form of educational work." Upwards of 2,500 afflicted children are now being benefited by this endeavor.

Among the little difficulties that militate against the adaptation of moving pictures in many schools is the question of insurance rates and increased risks.

This difficulty should not be enlarged to an unusual degree. It can be minimized by closely following all provisions made by moving picture apparatus manufacturers, together with cooperation with wise local fire authorities as has been proved in many places in New York State.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, has become the pioneer in that part of the world for moving pictures in public schools. After overcoming hindrances caused by local by-laws and fire precautions, Prof. Wallace was able to introduce "Famous Buildings of the World," "The Romance of Precious Stones" and other interesting educational films.

In Lafayette, Ind., a clergyman, the Rev. G. W. Watson, is delivering special addresses on the merits of the moving pictures. A photo-drama which was written by a minister is the basis of his commendations. The reverend gentleman believes "that such pictures should receive encouragement from the pulpit." Special society meetings favored these addresses and much favorable criticism evoked.

Perhaps the greatest novelty in school moving pictures is that in Battle Creek, Mich., where the children in the anti-tuberculosis open air school are being taught by their aid.

SOME MAKEUP.

Edward Earle has just discovered that he and Jessie Stevens, his Edison fellow player, were in the same cast of "The Dairy Farm," a stage play, about fifteen years ago. These two players have been in daily association for nearly two years and never recognized each other as previous associates.

LOTTIE BRISCOE IN "HER MARTYRDOM."

In the Lubin Special Release of February 18, "Her Martyrdom," Lottie Briscoe, the Lubin star, has a part which seems to rival her success in the "Parasite." "Her Martyrdom," is a three-reel special, and is released through the General Film. As Miss Briscoe and Mr. Johnson have now finished their series of comedies, they have been designated by the Lubin firm to produce all the "big stuff" for the firm from now on.

VITAGRAPHERS IN ADIRONDACKS.

Wally Van, Vitagraph director and comedian, left New York Friday, January 29, with a company for Saranac Lake, N. Y., to make "Love, Snow and Ice," a three-reel comedy written by himself. He will incorporate in his backgrounds the large ice carnival and many other features of interest. The company expected to be away for several weeks. The novel local conditions at this season of the year undoubtedly will contribute to the making of one of the funniest and most interesting of comedies. Thousands of visitors from abroad

Harold Lockwood Joins "Flying A"

A NEW star will shortly make his debut in a series of four-reel photoplays under the banner of the American Film Mfg. Company. This was the news contained in a telegram received in New York last week. The new star is Harold Lockwood, who scored a tremendous success in the Famous Players' productions of "Tess of the Storm Country" and "Hearts Adrift," in which plays he supported Mary Pickford in the leading role.

Since Mr. Lockwood's first appearance with the Famous Players, he has gained thousands of admirers throughout the country, especially in the South, where the exhibitors often featured him on the billing in their theaters. He recently declined, on account of pressing business, an invitation to attend a public reception given in his honor by the Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, Tenn.

Harold Lockwood.

Mr. Lockwood's rise in the picture world has been rapid—in fact, almost phenomenal—as it is only four years since he made his first appearance in pictures with the Selig Company. After a year with that concern, he joined the Nestor (Universal) Company, and was appearing with the Bison 101 Ranch when Edwin Porter, director general of the Famous Players, arrived on the Coast with Mary Pickford to film "Such a Little Queen." Mr. Porter engaged Mr. Lockwood to appear in this picture, and was so pleased with his artistic work that he immediately contracted with him to support Little Mary in all of her future productions. Since then, Mr. Lockwood has supported such famous stars as Marguerite Clark in "Wildflower" and "The Crucible," John Barrymore in "Are You a Mason?", William H. Crane in "David Harum," John Emerson in "The Conspiracy," Henrietta Crosman in "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch," John Mason in "Jim the Penman" and Maclyn Arbuckle in "The County Chairman."

Mr. Lockwood's friends generally will be pleased to hear of his good fortune and will wish him success in his new connection.

JOHN A. KENT WITH GREAT NORTHERN.

There are few men in the film business today who are not pioneers who are as well and as favorably known as John A. Kent. He is not an "old timer," but being wide awake and always on the alert, has acquired a thorough knowledge of the "game."

During his affiliation with the General Film Company Mr. Kent gained the confidence of all exhibitors by his unfailing courtesy and reliability. When he continued his activities with the World Film Corporation his abilities were acknowledged there also.

Mr. Kent has established an excellent reputation for himself among state-right buyers throughout the country. He is the latest addition to the forces of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, occupying the position of publicity and sales manager, and should be of valuable assistance to General Manager Oes.

WORLD FILM PHOTOPLAY SHOWN FOR CHILD WELFARE IN DETROIT.

The Child Welfare Committee of the Twentieth Century Club of Detroit held a benefit matinee at the Garden theater, last week. The picture selected was the World Film-California Motion Picture Corporation production of Beatriz Michelena in "Mignon." This is the first time the committee asked the Detroit public for assistance towards furthering its work and a capacity house greeted their efforts. Part of the proceeds go to the National Child Welfare Association, while the balance will be used for work in Detroit.

Invests Over $1,000,000 in Nine Years

Kunsky Once Small Exhibitor, By Skillful Financial Strategy, Becomes Film Captain.

MUCH as some of the leading men of Detroit a few years ago realized the possibilities of the automobile industry and planned and financed its development and expansion, so did another Detroiter, John H. Kunsky, forsee the great possibilities of the moving picture. To-day, operating as John H. Kunsky, Incorporated, he must be counted among the film captains of the country, with his chain of eight theatres, two others about to be built, accessory plants of all kinds, and a total investment in excess of $1,000,000.

It might be said in truth that Mr. Kunsky saw the future of the moving picture as a form of entertainment when the industry was but a flicker. At that time he was engaged in manufacturing, and although counted among the successful business men he was not a man of large capital. What he did have, however, he staked on his faith that eventually the silent drama of the screen would make him a wealthy man. And that is what it has done.

John H. Kunsky.

The original capital invested by Mr. Kunsky in the moving picture industry amounted to about $6,000. He built a small theatre at 28 Monroe avenue, Detroit, March 3, 1906. It was called the Casino and was operated in a building which had been remodeled to suit the needs of the film theatre. This house he still operates and it is one of the most successful on his list, although not so pretentious nor so large as some he has acquired or built since.

Those who have followed the industry will support the statement that any one who entered the business in 1906 can consistently be called a pioneer. The Casino theatre at once caught and held the attention of the people, widened its appeal as the appeal of the picture drama itself widened, and added to its patronage to such extent that Mr. Kunsky decided that his first venture warranted further investment. He bought, built, remodeled—increased his number of theatres as fast as he could—and organized and equipped such subsidiary plants as were necessary to make him independent, almost, of outside concerns on which he had been depending. His present string of theatres comprises, in addition to the original Casino, the following: Alhambra, Empress, Royal, Washington, Columbus, Liberty and the Garden.

To indicate how widely Mr. Kunsky has branched out beyond the mere proprietorship of a single theatre, or even of a group of theatres, the fact may be cited that he and his associates, in addition to their seven theatres here also operate the Casino Feature Film Company, furnishing Paramount, Alliance and other well known film services to more than 135 theatres in Michigan, for which they have exclusive rights; conduct a carpentry shop of their own, have an electric shop for furnishing wiring, etc.; build their incandescent signs in a plant of their own, and have their individual cleaning department. Such features of the business have been looked upon in the past, at least by some, as part of the overhead, operating, that is practically at a loss. Quite the contrary has been the result with the Kunsky organization. These plants are not liabilities, but are counted as a part of the assets and do their share to feed the stream of dividends that flows from the Kunsky theatres. They do not only all the work in their various lines for Mr. Kunsky's theatres, but accommodate other theatres in the city as well.

Perhaps no other man—at least no other man in Michigan—has been copied in this part of the country more than Mr. Kunsky in the matter of business methods as they pertain to the moving picture theatre. It is no doubt true that the training and experience gained by him in his career as a manufacurer stood him in good stead on various occasions when vexatious problems confronted him as to buildings, equipment, etc. One attribute which even his business rivals here must concede is this: He has been willing to spend the money when he saw that by so doing it meant a higher plane for the moving picture, a better form of general entertainment, added comfort to patrons and an increasing list of people who would make it a point to become steady lovers of the screen play. Whether it was a case of spending $10 or $10,000, Mr. Kunsky has been ready to put up the money—and has done so repeatedly. Several small fortunes have gone into permanent exile or drydock because of this laudable trait, but not until they have accomplished a purpose by revealing to Mr. Kunsky and his associates the point of weakness which they were trying to determine and remedy.

Quite another characteristic seen in Detroit's film captain is the eagerness and patience which he shows when some one in his employ has a suggestion to make for the possible betterment of the business. Suggestions are not only received, but are sought and welcomed, and employees are urged to present them.

"Get in touch with your patronage in your various localities." Such would be the advice to managers which Mr. Kunsky would give were he asked the secret for the successful conduct of a moving picture theatre. He follows this out himself, and makes it a point to visit one or more of his theatres each afternoon and evening every week. By this method he learns the tastes of his clientele, hears suggestions from them, discovers their favorite form of film entertainment and their favorite actresses and actors.

All of the Kunsky theatres are growing. There is not a money-loser in the list. Even the Liberty, which was thought by some to be rather a hazardous project financially, has weathered the difficulty of being off the beaten path of downtown Detroit and has become one of the leaders of the Kunsky group. Formerly it was a church, abandoned when two societies amalgamated. Mr. Kunsky bought it, remodeled it at a large expense, outside and in, brought its architecture up to date and in spite of the fact that it is on a "side street" made it a profitable investment.

George W. Trendle.

Nor is Mr. Kunsky selfishly claiming all the honors for his success. He points to his business associate, George W. Trendle, as being worthy of no small credit for the great strides the Kunsky incorporation has made, the strong business foundation it possesses and the hold it has upon a huge following here of moving picture devotees. Mr. Trendle, now engaged in the practice of the law, was also at one time a manufacturer, before engaging in the legal profession, and his ripe judgment in the matter of leases, contracts and such things, which need the attention and direction of a lawyer, has been at all times relied upon fully by Mr. Kunsky. Mr. Trendle is financially interested in all the Kunsky enterprises.

In process of building at present are two more Kunsky film palaces. One at Grand River avenue and Fourteenth street will cost $125,000. The other will be a downtown house costing $250,000.

There is a great deal of co-operation manifest around the Kunsky theatres, plants and shops. A house organ, the Weekly Film News, gives the programs at all the Kunsky houses, presents interesting facts concerning the moving picture business as a whole, affords patrons an opportunity to learn something about the people of the screen plays and furnishes other facts that appeal to the Kunsky clientele. This house organ is mailed direct each week to the thousands of the Kunsky houses.

The general offices of the John H. Kunsky, Inc., and the Casino Feature Film Company, are located at 2206-2212 Dime Bank Building, Detroit. These enterprises, with the theatres and various departments outside, employ approximately 200 persons.

Alhambra a Beautiful Theater

Brooklyn's Newest Picture House Reflects Credit on Glynne & Ward, Its Builders and Owners.

By George Blaisdell.

FOUR years or so ago the writer used to attend the picture shows given at the Mardi Gras Theater, in Nostrand avenue, near Clarkson street, Brooklyn. At that time he was struck by the progressiveness of Glynne & Ward, its proprietors—by their keenness in catering to their patrons in their 299-seat house.. The two members of the firm were young men, but they seemed to possess the business wisdom of men older in years. A few days ago we received an invitation to call at the Alhambra, at the corner of Knickerbocker avenue and Halsey street, Brooklyn, being assured that we would there find the fulfillment of a promise casually passed last summer during convention week by Mr. Ward.

On Sunday afternoon a visit was made to the Alhambra. This newest Brooklyn picture house—it was opened the first of the year—is not only a beautiful structure; it represents the best these two exhibitors can design as the result of their years of experience. No practical appliance that will conduce to the comfort of patrons or contribute to the quality of the entertainment would seem to have been overlooked. The Alhambra is an up-to-date picture theater in the best sense of the word, and what adds interest to the statement is the fact that it is a community house, being a considerable distance from a business section.

The Alhambra is a solid looking structure, erected on a plot 120 by 100 feet. The cost of the building was $75,000 and of the land $15,000. The auditorium is about 110 by 90. The only balcony is that devoted to the office, the projection room—not booth—and men's smoking room. Mr. Glynne, who showed the World man over the house, can reach out from his desk, open a window in the wall, and have under his eye the whole house, the 1,100 seats and the screen. To the writer it made a view as interesting as it was unusual.

Outside the theater there are four lamp posts, each carrying five large white-globed lamps. A marquise extension over the entrance, which is at the corner, carries 145 lights. A large electric sign contains 600. The high-ceilinged lobby is finished in marble, bronze and caenstone. Lights concealed behind amber-colored glass in the wall add to the charm of this part of the house. The lobby is warmed by indirect heating or concealed radiators. As a matter of fact, this system prevails also in the auditorium.

Tickets are passed to purchasers by the latest electrically operated automatic ticket selling and cash register device. Three sets of five keys provide from one to five tickets at either 5, 10 or 15 cents.

The operator's room is 20 feet long, 10 feet wide and 11 feet high. It is in charge of Frank McLoughlin, who has been with Messrs. Glynne & Ward for five years. There are two Power 6A cameragraphs, a double dissolver and a spotlight. A house telephone service connects with all departments—operator, musicians, box office, stage, manager, etc. Four six-foot Typhoon fans either take in or eject air. There is a Ward & Leonard dimmer for dissolving the house lights. All of the switches controlling these are in the projection room. A Wotton Rexolux, installed by the Electric Products Company, changes alternating to direct current. It is the first of these machines to be installed in Brooklyn, by the way, and Mr. Glynne says he is getting from it excellent results. With it, it is possible to alter the amperage to any point. The Alhambra uses about 45. The distance from projection room to screen is 100 feet. The screen is 16 feet wide.

Alhambra Theater, Brooklyn, New York.

Through a thermostat arrangement installed by Baker, Smith & Co. it is possible to maintain the temperature of the house at any desired point. A woman's parlor is on the main floor. During the evening a maid is in charge. There is a medicine chest for emergencies. Under each seat is a mushroom, through which filtered air is carried into the house at about 70 degrees. There is a capacity of 80,000 cubic feet a minute. In the summer the operation is reversed and the air is drawn out.

The music is provided by an orchestra of nine most competent musicians, together with a Mason & Hamlin concert organ. On the side of the stage are small balconies, reached by a stairway from the rear, which are used by singers. Licensed service is the base of the picture entertainment. This is amplified by selected features on Tuesday and Friday and Broadway Star Features on Thursdays. The Alhambra also is showing "The Exploits of Elaine" and "Runaway June." Seven reels of pictures are shown as a minimum. On Saturday and Sunday refined vaudeville is added to the bill. On a recent Monday the regular bill, for instance, was increased by the appearance of Miss Adele Bronte, singer, and by the showing of 800 feet of film covering the ceremonies of the laying of the cornerstone of St.

Martin's Church, in the immediate neighborhood of the theater. This picture was shown for three days. The picture was taken by an experienced photographer, a member of the staff of a big feature producer.

In the building of the Alhambra Glynne & Ward did not employ a general contractor, but had the various installations made by specialists. They had the benefit of the advice of men they knew to be experts in their line. As an illustration, John F. Skerrett and Mr. Atwater of the Nicholas Power Company, both old friends of the firm, materially aided them. Glynne & Ward, besides owning the Alhambra and controlling the Mardi Gras, are building a 2,200-seat house in Bay Ridge and intend erecting a 900-seat theater in Flatbush. They have other locations in view. They believe the best future of the exhibition of pictures is in large houses and are preparing to meet conditions.

On the opening day of the Alhambra the house issued a twelve-page program, with the front cover in colors. Seven pages were devoted to advertisements. One page was devoted to a salutory. Another page described the house. The following page gave the program. Emile Cordora leads the orchestra and Albert Reeves Norton is organist. Saturdays, Sundays and holidays the entertainment is continuous from 2 o'clock until 11, and the prices of admission are 5 and 10 cents in the afternoon and 10 and 15 cents in the evening. Other days the hours are from 2:30 to 5:30 at 5 and 10 cents and evenings from 7 to 11 at 10 and 15 cents.

In speaking of his efforts to bring the merits of his house to the attention of the residents of his neighborhood Mr. Glynne said he had sent out many invitations to visit the theater. These he had keyed, and as the tickets were taken up the fact was duly entered in a register kept for the purpose. Consequently he knows the identity of those who have not yet visited his house. The Alhambra also issues a couple of days in advance 10,000 throwaways, 3½ by 5½, printed on cardboard and containing on each side a day's program. The firm has also circulated a smaller card containing a general announcement to the number of 25,000.

The Alhambra did over $800 business in its first week and over $1,000 in its second. It would seem to have established itself in the regard of its neighborhood. Certainly if intelligent management, the excellent projection of first-run pictures and good all-round entertainment can continue this situation Glynne & Ward will do it.

JEFF DAVIS IN PICTURES.

Jeff Davis, "The King of the Hoboes," manager of the Hotel de Gink, New York City, is the latest recruit for pictures. Davis is president of the International Itinerant Workers' Union of Hoboes of America, and represents 400,000 globe trotters. He has established in New York, with the aid of Mayor Mitchel and the Unemployed Committee, a unique institution known as "The Hotel de Gink." The hotel, an old factory building on Centre street, has been leased to the hoboes. It is not a charity. No charity in any form is desired. Every hobo who registers at the Hotel de Gink wants work.

Jeff Davis has been a hobo for sixteen years for the purpose of studying the hobo conditions and devising a practical means of help for the fraternity. He has hoboed twice around the world, and three times around the United States. Davis defines the word "hobo" as follows: "Hobo—a man who goes about, from place to place, seeking an opportunity to make good."

The Broadway Film Company will present Jeff Davis in "The Bridge of Sighs," a drama of the under-world, in three parts, depicting social conditions today in this country. The story centers around "The King of the Hoboes," and portrays faithfully the trials and tribulations of the man who is down on his luck. "The Bridge of Sighs" will be released on or about the first of March.

"THE COMMANDING OFFICER," BY FAMOUS PLAYERS.

Miss Alice Dovey, one of the most captivating and brilliant ingenues in this country or England, in both of which she has won signal honors, and who was featured in the two recent theatrical successes, "Papa's Darling" and "The Girl on the Film," is now on her way to the Pacific Coast studios of the Famous Players Film Co., where she will assume the feminine lead in that concern's forthcoming film production of Theodore Burt Sayre's noted military romance, "The Commanding Officer." So well and favorably known is this play as not to require detailed description. There are many striking and novel situations in the story.

Fan Bourke, Thanhouser Favorite

FAN BOURKE is that ideal rarity in the theatrical and motion picture circles, a good comedienne who can play heavy emotional parts as well. She is both Irish and American, and is gifted with the whimsical and the tragic majesty that mark children of the Emerald Isle.

Miss Bourke was born in Brooklyn.

With her departure for a Canadian convent, the wanderlust that was to lead her around the world was born in the young girl's mind.

The school Miss Bourke attended had housed Margaret Anglin and Bernice Golden. There lingered in the old classrooms the stage traditions naturally lent by their successes. But while in school, Miss Bourke's aptitude seemed to run to literature rather than acting. She was encouraged in this work by the good sisters and became editor of the school paper.

Fan Bourke.

But once she had graduated, the wanderlust really gripped her. Because she wanted to travel, but did not have the private income wherewith to gratify the desire, she hit upon the stage as a happy solution of her problem.

"And so it began," she says. "I wasn't really stage-struck. I just wanted to see this little old world, the odd and even corners of it. But the atmosphere of the footlights does one of two things to the girl novitiate; it frightens and repels her—or it gets into her blood like a drug."

Fan Bourke's first theatrical engagement was with Fritzi Scheff. The next season she was with Nance O'Neill and McKee Rankin. Miss O'Neill took an interest in Miss Bourke's work, coached her, praised her a bit, and laid a sound theatrical foundation for that elusive Bourke temperament.

Miss Bourke had joined the Scheff and the O'Neill companies because both were booked to go to the Pacific Coast. Neither reached there. When they were ordered back to New York, their route list changed to take in middle west cities that had been skipped on the westward journey, everyone in the company wept with joy—everybody but Miss Bourke. She wept with disappointment.

There's a bit of a will behind those Irish brown eyes. Miss Bourke still yearned to travel; she had gone on the stage to travel; ergo travel was what she would have. She realized her ambition by joining Lasky's vaudeville operetta "The Pianophiends," which toured the country for two years. Then, after an illness in San Francisco that necessitated her leaving the Lasky company, Miss Bourke and another girl toured the South in an act of their own "The Brinkley Girls at the Piano."

In this southern tour Miss Bourke met Marguerite Snow and James Cruze, who were destined shortly to go to the Thanhouser Company, from which they sent for Miss Bourke. But she was out in Augustus Thomas' "Mere Man" and, for a time, travel still appealed to her more than the studio.

Once she had taken the plunge into pictures, however, all the call to adventure and excitement in her veins was answered. After a few weeks in the Thanhouser studios she settled down. The wanderlust left her, expelled by this newer and greater interest.

At first the directors cast her only for comedy parts. But recently her native and acquired emotional ability won recognition. Her handling of heavy roles put her in a new light. And now, only a year after entering the picture field. Fan Bourke is balancing herself on the twin pedestals of Comedy and Tragedy with a skill that has made her famous.

LOCKWOOD IN "THE LURE OF THE MASK."

Harold Lockwood has started work with director Thomas Ricketts at the American studios and is taking the lead in "The Lure of the Mask" which has been adapted by Mary O'Connor and which will be done in four reels.

New Home Projector

By F. H. Richardson.

BY INVITATION of the Cameoscope Corporation, 110-112 West 40th street, New York City, I have recently witnessed the demonstration of a new projector, designed for home, educational, mercantile and private entertainment uses.

This machine is to be known as the Cameoscope. Its general appearance is shown in Fig. 1.

New Home Projector, Fig. 1.

The mechanism is entirely enclosed, and there are two pressed aluminum magazines, designed to accommodate ordinary 10-inch reels. The machine takes standard reels and films.

In figure 2 we have a view of the operating side of the mechanism, with the door open. The film comes down out of the upper magazine, passes under sprocket C, forms a loop and goes on down under the tension springs, as in any ordinary projector, passing under roller L, which revolves on an eccentric and froms what is, in fact, a somewhat modified form of beater movement, on over roller K, under roller L, on around sprocket J and into the lower magazine. The method of inserting the film being very simple.

The gearing of the mechanism is contained in the left-hand compartment, shown at Fig. 3. This is advantageous, by reason of the fact that no oil can reach the film, a thing which will be appreciated particularly by those who own their own films. The outside shutter cuts a trifle more than 50 per cent. of the light.

The machine when running at just a little above normal speed, I should say about 65 r. p. m., has no perceptible flicker.

This of course is partly due to the fact that the illumination comes from an incandescent lamp of special type which, together with the motor, uses a trifle less than three amperes. The light on a semi-reflecting 6½-foot screen, shows up very well indeed. The figure cannot, of course, be called brilliant in the sense that we use that term in theatrical work, but the definition of the picture is good, and the light is fully ample for all educational, commercial and home purposes.

The lamp, as will be seen in figure 3, is mounted in an especially designed cooling chamber, and this chamber in turn is mounted on a door or gate; and when this is opened it removes the ray of light from the film and leaves the whole mechanism open, so that there is ample room for threading, as is seen in Fig. 2. In Fig. 2 is shown the condensing lenses in the square opening, the lamp being immediately back of these. Current may be taken from any ordinary light socket, either alternating or direct; but the lamp must fit the voltage, the standard in New York being 110 volts; any specified voltage will be furnished.

The machine is driven by a 1-100-H.P. motor, the same being attached to a bracket which may be moved up and down on one of the legs, so that the tension of the driving belt may be easily varied. This motor is seen in Fig. 1. The tension of the take-up is taken care of very nicely by means of a spring-wire belt. The rewinding being done perfectly.

Another feature of the machine is the fact that the wiring is so arranged that the closing of one switch starts the motor and the light, and the opening of the same switch cuts out both light and motor, and thus rendering it impossible to leave the machine standing still with the light on the film.

The machine as equipped, seems to be very thoroughly fireproof, and considering the cameoscope as a whole I can recommend it to those who wish to secure a machine for home, church, education and commercial purposes.

FINE PICTURE HOUSE FOR DAVENPORT.

Sam E. Greenebaum and A. H. Blank, two energetic and enterprising young men of Davenport, Ia., who have been successfully conducting the Casino Theater in that city for the past year or so, have taken a long term lease on the Sickles & Preston Building in Third street, between Brady and Main, which structure they will convert into an up-to-date motion picture theater. Construction work will be started immediately, and over $50,000 will probably be expended in the renovation of the building. It is expected that the new picture theater will be ready for opening on July 1, and although no definite estimate on the seating capacity of the house has been announced it is believed that there will be accommodations for one thousand persons. The name of the new photoplay house will be the New Garden.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

All Het Up.

EVIDENTLY the recent paragraph about the showing of the life of all het up. They come back at us with a lot of fine scorn and Mrs. Thaw at the American, Salt Lake City, got the management the certificate of the Chief of Police that even the children could see it "with propriety." Either they have a strange sort of Chief of Police or a lot of darned funny children in the Mormon capital, and we think the kiddies are all right. The house entirely overlooks the fact that even if the picture was as pure as the driven snow the advertising suggested (and promised) the most lurid and revolting scenes.

There is no use talking to managements that find satisfaction in digging up the filth of dead years. If it pays them and they want the money and the Chief of Police is pleased, nothing can be done, but at least they should not rub it in with that promise that only the best stuff will be run. They even repeat that they saw the picture before it was booked and found nothing to object to.

But the point we want to make is this: We would rather be nice than nasty, and if we point out errors a majority of the readers of this department appreciate the fact that we do it not in a spirit of superiority, but through a desire to help—and when it is taken in that mood it does help. But there are a few complacent persons who regard anything that is not fulsome praise as a direct attack and they foam at the mouth. Emulating the humble but useful soap does not get them anywhere. It merely serves to confirm them in their cocksureness and increases their helplessness. If it amuses them to get back at us it is all right, because we're used to it and it doesn't bother us in the least. But think things over. Get as sore as you want, and froth a whole cakefull, but afterward do a Carl Laemmle. Most exhibitors have been helped very materialy by this department, not because we write it but because they help and receive help in return. We think that if the American management will stop to think they'll find that the Thaw picture has not helped them, no matter what may have been the business on the day.

Must Be a Misprint.

Real Reels says that the Hippodrome in Denver announces FIFTY general admission tickets FOR FIFTY CENTS. George Editor Carpenter says he refrains from commenting because he is afraid of the strain on his typewriter. We don't believe that any management would advertise tickets for one cent each, even though the general admission may require a five or ten cent reserved check to be worth even a cent. If this is being done, it would seem to be the worst on record.

"Throwing away" general admission tickets and making good with the "exchanges" to reserved seats is a theatrical trick so old that it needs no comment. One chain of theaters right here in town used to maintain a library where seats to the non-sucesses could be had for half price. The seat coupons were sold with bill board tickets, but everyone knew all about it who knew anything at all, and it hurt the houses, but even they kept up the pretense that the tickets were worth something. They did not sell them for a cent apiece.

Sometimes it does seem as though the Salt Lake and Denver managers were hell-bent on putting the photoplay business into the discard as soon as possible. This should do it. Even the newspaper coupon presupposes some small value. This is the limit this far. It even beats the "friend pass."

Will Help Some.

And George Editor Carpenter announces an "extra" of Real Reels that will help some. Now that the sheet is an every-other-week the weeks in between are lonesome. But Carpenter is doing more than advertising the Paramount program. He seems to be getting the exhibitors in his section to put personality into their advertising, even if the American did slip and make it personalities. The paper is stamped by his own individuality and he sets a pace the houses try to follow. And even in the big towns it is the personality that counts, your own and that of your house. Possibly you never thought of the personality of your house. If you never did, get over to the nearest big city (your own town will not do) and go into a dozen houses. Some houses seem to make you welcome. Others seem almost to kick you out. What does your house say to incoming patrons? Does it say "Welcome" or "Watch your hat and coat."

Clips.

John J. Funk, of Atlanta, who is not an exhibitor, but who seems to like this department since he frequently favors us with helpful clippings, sends in two editorial paragraphs from the Constitution, one of the most solid papers of the South. One on Censorship is much to the point for those who have their local flurries. The other is more generally available. Mr. Funk adds that they are working for Sunday shows instead of a silver collection, the latter now being used. These are the items:

> Another factor that counts and that is curious is that people have formed the amusement habit and they will not be denied it under any circumstances. They count the money invested in a "movie" or a "legitimate" show or a vaudeville attraction as a good investment against the gloom that sometimes infests a community. The same habit drives people to more injurious practices, such as drinking or gambling. When we consider the incomparably more harmless influence of the recreations outlined in the foregoing paragraphs, the progress we have made in the past fifty years is noticeable.
> Reviewing these conditions, one wonders how the theater could have been made the subject of denunciation, as it was by church and state, in centuries gone by.

CENSORING MOVIES.

> A bill has been introduced in the house of representatives providing for federal censorship of moving pictures. The measure follows, of course, the growing tendency to have the federal government or some one of its boards scrutinize about every human activity open to imagination, and some that tax imagination.
> The need for the present bill seems to be superfluous. There is a national board of censors in New York City, which passes on a very large portion of the films shown in this country, and about which there is absolutely nothing mercenary or inexpert.
> On the other hand, if there were created a federal board of "movie" censors there is no guarantee that there would not be placed on it men wholly incapable of intelligently discharging the duties of their office, but capable of doing a lot of mischief to the moving picture business in this country.
> The film show has evolved into dimensions undreamed by the man or woman or child who drops into one of these little theaters, and sees a reel quietly unwind before the gaze. It has become educational as well as recreational, and it entails accessories that from the standpoint of expense mount into many millions annually, and mean employment to thousands of people.
> If it is shown that a federal board will insure the country any better films than those now exhibited, well and good. If, on the other hand, the attempt is to take the job out of hands eminently qualified and place it in hands that may bungle, that will be a different question.
> The debates on the subject in House and Senate ought to be worth hearing or reading, for the light they will throw on this amazing new industry.

That federal censoring will be a farce if it ever comes—and it may come if the exhibitors are not just as active as the fanatics. Don't think that just because a measure is foolish it cannot be passed. Remember that it is only lately that a bill was passed requiring all outdoor places of amusement to supply free ice water just because some legislator got tired of buying lemon soda at the ball games.

Got Us Guessing.

Ralph Ruffner, of the American, Butte, Montana, writes that he would not pass us up "for the World." Wonder what he means? He says it on a handsome card that suggests that American patrons are going to get Easter remembrances—or it may be only a Henegan sample.

He sends in the February calendar which goes back to the previous smooth stock instead of the more elaborate cards he had last month. It looks about as well, for looks, and is more business-like.

Funny what an idea we get of people. We thought he must be fat and rosy but a portrait in a recent Real Reels pictures him as a college professor. The picture was taken, of course, before he read all the flattering things Carpenter said about him, or he would at least be smiling.

The Answer Is "Yes."

Steve Farrar pleadingly asks if we read his Casino News from cover to cover. We do. We read all of the stuff that comes in, but we read some of his with especial interest, because he puts the tang in it. The opposition has been busy and put in vaudeville. In an earlier issue Steve wrote of what he thought of the sort of vaudeville that could be coaxed to Eldorado, Ill., and his conclusion was that it would be an insult to his patrons. Now the situation calls for stronger action, but instead of blindly following suit, as so many have done, he worked it this way:

> In the past few weeks I have had quite a few requests for Vaudeville, these have given me no little worry, as it is my desire to please all the people all the time. Once before in this paper I have stated reasons for the Casino not showing vaudeville this winter. After giving the matter a great deal of thought I decided to invest the money that I would have to pay the poor vaudeville in a good orchestra for the Casino, and with this idea I went to work, and now I take pleasure in presenting to the people of Eldorado a bunch of musicians that are a credit to the town and to the Casino: Mr. Adolph Benneaur, leader; Miss Claudie Burkes, piano; Mr. Ernest Price, trombone;

Mr. A. Anderson, trap drummer; Mr. Norman Gumbert, cornet; Mr. Will Webber, clarinet; Lonnie Brannon, bass. These people are all citizens of our town and spend their money here, and I am sure will do us all more good than any vaudeville I could secure. You are invited to attend the Casino and hear them play, and tell your friends about the orchestra.

Any One Can Show A Picture—But.

Yes, anyone can show a picture but—But what of the actual picture itself? Will it have in it the Casino's seven years' experience, skill and knowledge. Will it have in it the superb quality that shows in every Casino screen presentation? Will it be clear, clean and flickerless? Will it be a picture with a thrill and a punch in it? Will it be a picture that you enjoy seeing? Will it be a picture of quality—yes, Casino quality?

Has His Troubles.

John William Kellette is finding out that it is some trouble to run a picture show. He and some of the Thanhouser players took over a lame house, you may remember, up in New Rochelle. The other day he hired a new operator and the first picture the light went black and he hustled into the booth to find the operator trying to discover a way to keep the lamp going by fooling with the knobs, explaining that he knew only the Simplex, though most lamps work on the same idea. He uses Kraus Postcards every Friday, with the Thanhouser players, and about three times a week he gets out a card with "To-night" and the announcement of some Thanhouser star on the stage as well as the screen. And before he read a recent notice he learned to play up the star's name. Here is some more of his dope:

> The house has a lot to live down, because it was pretty much an all five-cent house at one time—West New Rochelle element, etc., and the good people wouldn't come. But they are coming now. The enclosed will show you how it fell off, and how we planned to build it up. Another clipping will show you Reel Life's follow up on the plan.
> I am taking an inch daily in the two dailies here, changing the program every day. When I have something worthy of advertising I get out a throwaway, and plan to bill the town on Wildfire with 3s and singles and heralds. We are not attempting to set the city on fire, understand, but want to let people know we are having a dandy show at the Thanhouser, and get them into the house. When we get them there we have the best projection to show them; they are met by a pleasant "Thank you" when they get their tickets; ticket taker says, "Good evening"! the head usher receives them and passes them on to an usher who asks how far down they want to sit, and says "Thank you"! when they take their seats; $360 worth of portieres greet them at the entrance to the body of the theater; in the lobby are ivy and artificial flowers in urns, perfumed every day; palms line both sides of the lobby; inside, from the indirect lights, hang flower and ivy baskets, while the exits are velvet curtained; we have a 90 foot throw from a new Powers 6A; the picture is 15 feet wide; I write my own slides with white ink, seldom running the same slide twice; the piano player is a good one, playing softly, that he may not detract from the interest of the picture,, and I'm slowly building him up to classic and semi-classic, ballads, etc., and cutting all the "Hes a Devil in His Own Home Town" stuff; the Woman's Club, auspices of Mrs. Stone, take over the theater every Saturday afternoon for a children's hour. This will show you that we are trying to do right. Later the prices will have to come up, but while we're paying TWICE as much for service alone now, than others had to pay, and increased salaries ALL AROUND for meritorious service, we are keeping it at 5 and 10 cents. About the 15th I plan to run the Keystone two-reel special releases, "Runaway June," "Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," a Thanhouser or Princess every night, and by the first of March may have a 10 and 15 cent house, and when we have a weekly Paramount or World Film program for a night, the price must go up, and I'm sounding the people on the feasibility of it now.

Not for the world insinuating anything about $360 worth of hangings; we would suggest to the Thanhouser "props" to go over his stock. Kell has even worked the musical union for a boost, being the only house employing union men. He works all schemes that will make for a better class of house, and he is getting the trade. Of course, his New Rochelle optimism will have it that there can be an "east" and "west" in the town the express trains scoot through, but apart from this misguided loyalty he is doing things right. The matinee—"Children's Hour" he calls it, is getting the mothers then and the mothers and fathers at night. The point is, he is taking a broken-down five-cent house and raising it to a good one. It can be done almost anywhere with proper management. His letter tells much of the scheme. We'll get him to write more: reversing the "Bill" stuff.

Kraus Stuff.

And speaking of the Kraus card souvenir nights, have you found out about the small portraits they get out on the same lines as their life-size pictures, but smaller? They certainly are worth the price and worth looking into, lending themselves to a number of schemes as well as lobby decoration.

Hennegan Heads.

The Hennegan Company sends in some new letter heads designed to be printed up for photoplay houses, giving the suggestion of special work for little more than a home printed head would cost, offering four designs and envelopes to match. We like best design four with number one for a second choice, but all do well for a manager who wants to make his house look respectable when he writes. They also send some new designs in colored-cover programs with hints on how to go out and get the money, some of the samples being printed up with advertisements to show how to swing the space. All you have to do is to take the hint. They even supply the advertising contracts. They are worth looking into, even if you already have a home-printed program.

By printing up in million lots they can sell you two-color work for little more than the cost of your stock alone purchased in small lots.

Knows This One.

The former correspondent of this paper who told us the bloomer about the man in Hannibal who got so much free space, that we later found out he paid for, is with a Pathe exchange now, and he dug up something that he has seen. The Majestic theater, Ponca City, is the location, and he writes:

> Mr. Barron, manager of the Majestic theater in Ponca City, Okla., has a dog, Pete. Mr. Barron is considered one of the best trap drummers in the business, and uses every trap known to the art. Pete is his "bark effect." Pete sits in the pit and on the cue from Mr. Barron barks.
> You will notice the clippings are all about Pete. Pete "talks" for the newspaper every day or so. And his discourses run into all channels of human thought, from pickles to politics. Incidentally, however, he always mentions the Majestic theater.
> Pete is the best-known dog in the town and everybody reads his talks. The talks, by the way, always contain "local stuff" which makes them doubly interesting. These "talks" are prepared by the editor and they don't cost Mr. Barron a cent.
> He says that this form of advertising brings more people to his house than any other that he knows of, and affirms the old saying, that the "dog is man's best friend."

We can't be told that the dog is man's best friend until we forget the six dollars we had to spend for muzzles for our own pups last week, but Pete smokes a pipe and talks "wise," and helps the boss quite a lot. A real "dog bark" is a unique "trap," but the newspaper stuff reaches even better, as this sort of local stuff will be read and carry the theater with it:

> "Of course, I hated to see the folks waiting outside in the cold for the next performance," said Pete, "but it couldn't be helped. It's one of the inconveniences we have to contend with, for the house was packed so full that Oat Rumble had to hold his chewing tobacco in his hand so's to give Mrs. Rumble breathing space. So I guess you'll have to admit there was quite a sprinkling of folks out to see the show."

We would print Pete's picture with his eight dollar calabash if we had room, but we lack the space, and anyhow you can get the idea that anything that departs from the ordinary will help.

Here Comes Winstock.

Melvin G. Winstock has had a nice, long nap the last year or so, but he seems to be waking up again, now that he has a new house, and he writes:

> I am enclosing a blank which I have used with success. Ninety per cent. of the people, in their answers, prefer a varied program to the long five and six-act play.
> Up to this time I have been opposed to the serial idea, but in examining the "Exploits of Elaine" I found the material extraordinarily strong and the Pathe people have made me a very attractive advertising proposition. I accepted, and am putting on this serial as an extra matinee attraction, using it every Wednesday and Thursday afternoon, beginning Wednesday, February 3. In addition to their splendid advertising campaign, I conceived the following ideas which I put into execution with wonderful success. For two evenings I had ladies planted in three of the principal cafes of the city and when the crowds were largest had Elaine Dodge paged. The plants, who had on little black masks, walked the extreme length of the room out. Also called an announcement in the theater for Miss Elaine Dodge, stating that she was wanted at the Providence Hospital, worked the same plan. Naturally, this caused a lot of attention. This was just previous to the full page ad in the leading paper. Already the Clutching Hand and Elaine Dodge are the talk of the town, and I feel reasonably certain it will accomplish the object which it has, namely, to pull more people into the matinee attendance. The success of this might encourage somebody else to do the same, and improve the business.
> I have just killed another attempt to foist state-wide censorship on us. For seven or eight years now I have successfully led the fight, and exhibitors of this section have not had to pay out a dollar along this line, yet I am about as cordially hated as any man among the exhibitors. Everybody seems to resent the fact that I built the best and most attractive theater in this section of the world. I hope, however, that I will survive.

The blank to which reference is made is merely a reproduction of the similar blanks given more than once in this department. The catch-line, however, is good, reading:

How Would You Operate the National Theater?

"Family complimentary tickets" are offered for each suggestion accepted under "Is there any other comfort or convenience you would desire us to add?"

Good and Bad.

The Lyric theater, Harve, Mont., sends in a half page ad in the local sheet with a lot of reading matter. It starts off with the statement that business is good, which alone is sufficient to attract attention these days. It adds that because of that fact the bills will be better than ever. It lists new stuff, including Zudora with "Jimmie and Mrs. Cruze." Wonder how many of the patrons know who "Mrs. Cruze" is? Most of them know Marguerite Snow, though. On another page is the advertisement of Zudora without naming the house. This is never a good plan.

"Mystery" stuff is all right, but this is not "mystery." The house name should have been used. Advertise the Lyric and Zudora at the the Lyric, but let Thanhouser advertise Zudora.

Down the Line.

The Colonial theater "per A.," St. Joseph, Mo., writes:

> I am enclosing an advertisement used by this theater in promoting "Samson." We were particularly impressed with the manner in which this "stood out" among a number of other amusement ads that had been displayed in what, to this city, is the conventional style. It may occur to you that the day and date were "under-played." In explanation would say that for several days preceding there had been announcements that "Samson" would be shown in this theater on the days announced in this ad. And, also, it is customary, here, in our afternoon paper, to advertise for the coming day, not forgetting, however, to remind the reader of the current day's offerings.
> Should you feel sufficiently interested to comment upon this advertisement we would be very grateful. And it so appeals to you that you think it would be of value to readers of The Moving Picture World to reproduce it for their benefit, we would indeed be pleased. We are "searching for the light" and find many helpful beacons in your publication.
> This house has been open only a short time under its new management; it's getting better all the time—due, in a large measure, we believe, to the generous use of printers' ink and a determination to make good our promises of high class programs.

Space does not permit the reproduction of the advertisement, though it is an excellent one, save in that an outline letter should not have been used for the house title, which is faded out by the black type following. The advertisement drops seven inches, single column. In the center is the word "Samson" set in 48 point gothic down the page instead of across. These four-line letters are surrounded by light type, only one line heavier than eight point full face being used, and stand out above all else on the page.

But it does occur to us that the day and date do not get proper prominence, no matter what the local usage may be. If they wished to hold to the general effect they could have set the two days one on each side of the play title, and in the same manner, using an eight point gothic and setting it into the rule work beside the two middle letters. Next to the title the days are the most important thing in an advertisement, and should be played up.

The general idea of the advertisement is excellent, the novelty of this idea being found in the fact that they use their white space and still seem to have it, since the text on either side of the title is a light roman. It is a mistake to think that the blacker the type the larger the display. It is black type plus handling.

Old, But—

Here is a clipping sent in by Joseph Desberger, of the Arcade, Paducah, Ky.:

> Fully twenty of my thoughtful friends called me over the 'phone yesterday to tell me that the boys had hung the big "Pit sign in front of the Star theater upside down," said Mr. Joe Desberger, manager of the Arcade theater, last night. Mr. Desberger referred to an enormous yellow sign advertising the coming of Wilton Lackey in "The Pit," the thrilling stock market drama. "The ticket takers at both the Gem and Arcade were asked to tell me a hundred times yesterday that the sign was upside down," said Mr. Desberger, and I have been doing some tall up-sleeve laughing about it, for of course I had it hung wrong just to attract attention. It did the work all right.

It is an old scheme, but always a good one, particularly, as in this case, where the title is short and easily read. Try it sometime. Mr. Desberger, by the way, adds: "I am sending my next year's subscription a little in advance because I don't want to miss any copies." That's a good idea.

Growing.

The idea of massing the advertisements of all local houses in one publication handled from the outside seems to be growing. The Simpson-Kennedy company, who handle other publications, have the Censor, in Dallas, Texas, handling five theaters, getting out 8,000 copies weekly. The issue is still young, and needs to be strengthened in its reading matter. The last issue in some comedy rules for theatergoers advises against keeping time to the music with the feet as it annoys the cockroaches. This may be humorous, but it is not helpful to the houses. Their clips, too, are rather haphazard and their program arrangements lack form, but probably they see this, too. One objection to the general program is that it bars any house from special stuff, but on the other hand it simplifies the work for the management and it is easier to obtain advertising. With really smart reading the idea is good, but copy must be carefully prepared and editorial supervision exercised.

From Troy.

H. R. Emde, of Proctor's Griswold, Troy, sends in a neat booklet with this explanation:

> These booklets are given away with each ticket purchased at Proctor's New Theater (the vaudeville house) one week in advance of playing date of Paramount productions and are redeemed at the Griswold during the week printed in the booklet. We have found this medium of advertising a good business getter in introducing Paramount features to the public.

The booklets are four pagers, four and a half by two and a quarter. At the bottom of the first page is:

VALUABLE!

This booklet has a money value at PROCTOR'S GRISWOLD THEATER for the week of February 15th. Program on next page.

Inside the coupon reads:

DETACH COUPON WEEK OF FEBRUARY 15th

PROCTOR'S GRISWOLD

(Special Admission)

AFTERNOONS This coupon and 5c will admit one to best seat. | EVENINGS This coupon and 10c will admit one to best seat.

NOT GOOD SATURDAYS, SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS.

As an ice-breaker the scheme is excellent, but should not be too long continued or they will get the habit and kick when the rebate is withdrawn. Like the recent postcard from the same house, the typographical work is excellent and, in itself, suggestive of the best.

"Kell" Hints.

John William Kellette sends in some more hints that are worth studying:

> When patrons announce losses we ask them to show us where they sat. We have so far, ALWAYS found the lost article. The management lets it be known that he is the SERVANT of his patrons and not the BOSS. I find it leaves a good impression. Our telephone is always busy. Its number is flashed on the screen with "Our phone number is 3741. Jot it down. Call the theater up at any time and ask about the show. Always glad to answer." And in the box office I hang a slip with the show thereon, and queries are met with a smile in the voice.
> I try to personally greet incomers. I make it a point to say "Good-night, come again," as they are leaving, and smile and nod to the stranger within our gates.
> You'd be surprised to find out how much our women patrons use a large mirror we have in the lobby.
> If boys makes unnecessary noise someone goes and sits behind them, and whispers: "Would you rather be quiet or go to the box office and receive your money, and never be allowed in here again?" It quiets them.
> Projection is so good that I often have the house lights on while slides are being shown. It gives people a chance to get better seats if they want them.
> I have discouraged advertising slides. If they paid $300 a month instead of $30 my decision would be the same. I never liked it when I went to the theater, and I know others object to it. So I refuse to run anything of an advertising nature except house announcements, and those sparingly, and slides for local charitable or lodge affairs.
> I refused to carry on the Mutual Trading Stamp contract, although it was a paying proposition. I have twice turned down the representative, and refused payment for about a dozen pages of stamps torn upon presentation. I allowed entry to the theater, with the admonition that if they presented them again they would not be honored.
> The exchange slipped up on sending a two-reel subject, although it sent the rest of the program, Monday, February 1. I told those who came to the matinee—about 100 in number—and threw the house wide open for a free show.
> Wednesday, on account of the tie-up on the New Haven, reels reached the exchange late. My show didn't get here until about 4. I had a lot of money in the house. I explained to the people via screen and personally, and told those who did not care to remain to call at the box office for their money or receive a ticket for a future afternoon. Many didn't have time to remain. Only ONE took back her money. Several received tickets, but most of them remained for the show.

That telephone hint is particularly good, likewise the "servant of the people" idea.

Even So.

Steve Farrar writes that someone tells him that twelve dollars a thousand is too much to pay for his Casino News. Not if he only gets a thousand printed, for it costs something to set type, and it is all new each week, but if he gets more than a thousand and pays twelve dollars each, we'll be sorry he was not made to buy that autogobile. By the way, what's become of it? In the Steve Says department he exudes this wisdom:

> Anyone can borrow all the trouble they want without putting up any security.
> Anyone can borrow money to attend the Casino for every one knows that it is a good investment.

Makes His Own Cuts.

Recently we commented on a subpoena from Hot Springs, used by the Central theater, to which no name was attached. Now it develops that J. H. Moore, an old-time theatrical man, is doing the work for the manager, Sydney Nutt, and he sends in some newspaper advertising for which he makes his own wood cuts. Old-time agents had to do their own bill posting, but Mr. Moore is the first one who carried along a lumber yard instead of a cut trunk. One five-column advertisement for the Hippodrome America carries a shield eight by ten inches, which is decidedly effective, and a more sketchy cut title for "As Ye Sow" comes out even better. There are a lot of mighty resourceful men in the exhibiting end. Woh comes next?

Script.

The Maxine theater, Detroit, announces its opening February 6, and announces it in script type. They use for regular work a six page railroad folder card. They give the times of exhibition, prices and all the other necessary information on one page, announcing as their policy "A satisfied public," which beats a lot of pretentious promises. It is very neatly done, though a trifle crowded.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return, stamped envelope is enclosed.

More on Plotting.

"GIVE us more on plotting," is the burden of many recent letters, and we are perfectly willing to comply with the suggestion, because plotting is the very essence of photoplay writing. Three letters in five days express the writers' desires to do photoplay work because they have led adventurous lives. They think they are authors because they know a lot of life, but if they started to write plays they would be stumbling over their own heels all the time. They would be in their own way, for the man who has things happen seldom gets the right perspective.

Plotting does not mean the recital of your own life. That is biography; not play writing. It does not mean the translation of the happenings of others. It means the creation of ideas. If you cannot create, you are not an author but a historian. You are bound fast by facts and even if you would, you cannot break the trammels. If you know a man who had wonderful things happen to him you might be able to get it down on paper in such a manner as would please editors, but there would be small credit to you. You had ready made facts that, unfortunately, were so laid that they made a story. You recorded those facts. But you could not get another story as good until the man does something else, as good or someone else obliges. If you are at the mercy of events, you are not an author. The author is a man who can stub his toe and imagine it up to a fatal accident. At first he cannot do much better than break the bone in his foot or perhaps sprain his ankle, but each time he practises imagining, he can do better until he reaches the point where he can stub his toe in reality and break his neck in fiction.

Plotting is just another name for building up through the exercise of imagination. "F.," in a recent criticism in the Dramatic Mirror, hands this to William E. Wing for a Selig comedy: "The scenario, like a good many of this author's works, portrays either a height of ingenuity or else common action in an uncommon way." Like W. S. Gilbert, Mr. Wing took the idea of a man who marries on condition that he immediately kill himself. Mr. Gilbert got the Mikado where Mr. Wing did a western story, but both evolved the same unusual situation and then made the most of it where others might merely be gruesome. They get an impossible situation, make it first possible and then funny. They build up. The novice might build up but so awkwardly that the story would be loathsome instead of funny.

Any man can put a stickpin in his scarf and prick his finger. Most men would swear and let it go at that, but an author could take that slight happening and built it into a three reeler. The pin would become the poisoned pin and perhaps give the title to the story. Around the pin could be woven a mass of mystery, an unexplained death, a hidden treasure, and all sorts of stuff through which moved the silent figure of a Hindoo, wielder of the poisoned pin, with which he puts out of the way those who oppose his quest. Then, of course, a detective, professional or amateur, the deduction, tracing, surprise and denouement, all from a dinky pin-prick. The man who writes true stories would write about the pin prick. He might even be sufficiently imaginative to evolve a case of blood poisoning, but that would be about as far as his imagination would take him, just as the real plotter could not do much better at first.

The real plotter is one who has plodded at the work so long that plotting has become an instinct, rather than a habit. He learns to think in incident and situation, so that all he needs is a starter; a reason for the happenings. Given that he dips down into his memory like an actor into his wardrobe trunks and presently the idea is as completely disguised with complication as the actor is with clothes and paint and crepe hair.

The true plotter can put a toy engine into his memory and bring it out, after the transmutation process, a railroad wreck. He may store it away for years, but it will be waiting for him when he needs it. When it was announced to von Moltke that the French-Prussian war was declared he was in his bath. He told in which pigeon hole the plans for the war could be found and reached for the soap again. In the same way the trained plotter knows his material. He gets an idea. In the storage places of his memory he knows just where to look for the ideas to go with it. They were ordinary and commonplace when they were put away, but imagination has been at work ever since and they are drawn forth elaborated to the point of interest.

The average man might kick a stray dog off his front steps and it will always be a dog kicked off the steps. The plotter may have the same experience and metamorphose the dog into the pathetic figure of an old man driven from his son's home. We are mildly sorry for the dog. The old man's plight moves us to tears.

Plotting is nothing more than the careful and painstaking development of the latent imagination until the commonplace can be made uncommon; not through laborious and evident effort, but without exposing the mechanism. There must exist in the mind an uncommon capacity for imagination, but given this, it can be developed only through practice and almost constant use. It is an excellent plan, for developing, to take the simple ideas and see how greatly they may be changed without becoming grotesque. At first the results will be poor; perhaps even discouraging, but in time the practice will bring better and better response until in time a given idea will suggest, almost automatically, the best treatment. It is not to be done through the elaboration of one or two stories, but through the development of hundreds of ideas, not necessarily into photoplays but into something better than they were when taken up. In the street cars build romances and dramas about the people around you. In the office find material for comedies and tragedies. Work constantly for natural effects in uncommon situations and in time you'll be a plotter.

If you have no imagination, do not bother with plotting. Realize that you are better fitted for an exact science. If all of us have the same sort of brains we would be the same sort of people. If we were all imaginative along story-plot lines, we would be a world of authors. There would be no cold, calculating magazine publishers to take our stories, no far seeing film makers to buy our photoplays, no marble hearted financiers to make the money to back the publisher and film man with. We would all be authors with no publishers. It is God's own provision that we are not all made alike.

Schools.

Elbert Moore-Kenneth Langley has broken out again. Times must be hard in Chicago, for now he announces that he will send his first two lessons free and you can either keep them and send one dollar for them or send them back. The back of the circular carries a list of prize contest in the last eighteen months, figuring at something more than a thousand dollars a month. This is better than his form letters, one of which, dated January 30th, of this year, announces the Vitagraph contest that is so dead it has almost been forgotten. Another sign of hard times is the line "as this circular must last me for several months to come" he cannot change it for each new contest.

The Photoplaywrights Association is using the checked sheet for its criticisms and sends also a "personal" letter from Thomas. The letter is mimeographed; in spite of its intensely personal note, and they do not even take the trouble to match the ink. The last paragraph urges the purchase of a good book on writing (presumably the Thomas book), but it does not get up to the school scheme in this number. The form we have is the one starting with "I often wish the word plot." If you have any other letter you'll be glad to get rid of, please send it along.

A writer in speaking of her experiences says:

> I started about two years ago with McIntyre's course. I had taken three lessons, had paid him eight dollars. He wrote me a personal letter telling me that ten to eighteen scenes would make a full reel, and that was about the standard number. My husband, being director of the orchestra in the best picture house here, gave me the chance of seeing from eight to twenty reels a day. I began counting the scenes, and out of eight reels the least had thirty-five scenes, so I decided I should not take any more of his course, and promptly wrote him why.

And then she took up with another school, without learning more than the surface technique, so now she is going to work along the right lines.

Elmer F. Bostwick, of the Eastern Film Co., is telling Rhode Islanders all about it in the Providence Journal. He disclaims any intention of starting a school. He defines a dissolve as "an immediate disappearance of a scene," while a flash is "an instantaneous appearance of a scene." A synopsis is "telling your story in as few words as possible." It is nice of Mr. Bostwick to help, but it does not help to give the incorrect information. A dissolve is a gradual fading in or out of a vision or the gradual fading of a scene. It is not instantaneous. A flash is a short length scene, from three to five feet. Mr. Bostwick announces that there has never been a thorough school of photoplay construction. Also he says "if you have the faintest creative power, you should be able to learn how to write a very acceptable photoplay." Something more than the faintest creative power is required.

And still they come.

Books.

We have the books on photoplay writing recently asked for, but we want to make a complete collection and many of them we've not even heard of. If you've been stung with a book and want to sell it, write the title and author on a postcard, please. Do not send the book, as we want only one of each. We already have the books by Leeds, Wright, Phillips, Nelson, Katterjohn, Carr, Ball, Hoagland, Thomas and Dench. We shall be glad to get any others. Address this writer personally.

Addressing Scripts.

If you do not know the editor of a company not only personally, but well enough to know when he quits, it does not help even a little bit to address your scripts to him instead of his department. Monte Katterjohn has not been with the Universal for several months and yet scripts still come in addressed to him, are sent to him at Boonville and he has to send them back, and half the time has to throw in a two cent stamp and an envelope.

It is not alone the inexperienced writer who does this clumsy thing. There are hundreds of those who should know better who are constantly trying to get a shade the best of it and they think it tickles an editor's vanity to be addressed personally. It doesn't. As a rule he curses the idiot and starts to read prejudiced against the script.

Even if he was among the inexperienced few who might be pleased to get letters with their name on, he would not be so pleased that he would take the junk that usually is addressed direct.

If you want to send a manuscript to Mr. Katterjohn, even though he has nothing to do with the purchase of scripts, send them to his address. If you want to offer a script to the Universal Company, address them direct, either to "The Editor," or, better still, by writing in the lower left hand corner "Manuscript Department." As a rule even the office boy knows a script when he sees one and there is no danger of your work of genius getting over to the advertising department by mistake. Do it right and at least get that much of a start.

Imagination.

And now one of our most promising pupils writes that she cannot get as much interested in her play people as people of flesh and blood. And we're greasing the skids.

Your people must be as real to you as though they were flesh and blood or you'll write stuff that is not convincing. No matter whether you are doing a five-reel drama on a split reel farce, you must make your people real to yourself or they'll not be real to the audience. Just as a matter of fact your people are real people because they are merely the multiple of reincarnations of people you have seen. If they are not there is something wrong with your imagination or your system.

One question we've probably answered five hundred times a year for the last three years is "Do you get many stories from things you see on the street?"

And the answer always is, "Not a blamed thing. I note what is going on, and some day I use it, but I do not get stories on the street, but out of my brain."

A cousin of ours who has written some fifteen hundred dime novels said the same thing the other day, not knowing how we felt about it. "I've been all over the world," he said, "and I've seen a lot. I don't consciously make note of things, but it's all in my head when I need it, so I am never stuck for stuff."

Don't study people to put them into plays, and don't put them into plays anyhow. But study how people act, keep your eyes wide open all the time and store your brain with incidents. Then when you need something you merely dip into your memory and pick out what suits you best. Learn to keep things on tap, then when you write you take a type and you have a real man built up, perhaps, of hundreds of men of that type, and your man will act naturally and convincingly because he acts as several hundred man of that type would act. You may know a man who habitually walks on his hands and pushes himself along on his left ear, but though you know of such a man you cannot put him into a play and make others believe that there is such a man outside of an insane asylum. But if men who walk on their ears were common and you had seen half a hundred of them, writing of such a man would bring to your mind a composite of all fifty, and the result would be a man who would appeal to all as being logical because he was a man of general type, even though he did an unusual thing.

And by the way, that paragraph points the moral. We wanted an unusual type and we automatically picked a man who walks on his ear. We saw that man first in a vaudeville show twenty years ago, and all that time he has been hanging around in our brain waiting to be used, and this is the first time he ever got a chance.

Writing stories is something more than thinking out a plot and putting it on paper. It's a matter of study and long training. Is it any wonder that we sometimes silently curse the cuss who writes, "I have been writing photoplays for two months now, and have done twenty-eight, but, strange to say, not one has sold. Can you tell me what the trouble is?" On paper we politely explain that the trouble is lack of practice, but what we think is sometimes another matter.

Remember This.

When you send out a manuscript, be certain that it is folded so that it will go into the return envelope. It is not enough that the script can go into the going envelope. It is going to come back in the other. You fold it so that it does and you'll not get it back with two sets of creases. We do not believe that any editor willfully damages a script by making new folds, but if you do not fold it right in the first place it's not his fault if you get a corrugated script back Right in line with the above, suggested by a couple of scripts we lately handled, comes a letter from Doris M. Schroeder, editor for Western Vitagraph, who writes:

> As everyone seems to appeal to you in your official capacity with the World, this poor editor has decided to appeal to you for justice—no—for Justice with a capital. I'm enclosing a postal card I received yesterday—it is self-explanatory.
> Now, just what do you think of a person of this stamp? Notice the failure to sign a name—or even an address. I thought you might be interested in seeing it—because of the mention of the World.
> Comparing the dates, etc., we have come to the conclusion that it is from a person who resides on Edgecombe avenue in New York City. To the best of our remembrance, this manuscript was on odd-sized paper and typewritten. We're not clear on that, however. But—here's the rub—note the kick about fastener! You know, when a script comes in here—it is opened—registered in a ledger, the return envelope, letter and manuscript neatly fastened together with a clip, the same carefully handled by three readers (including "moi-meme"), then handed to either the manager for purchase, or the opener for return. Now, by this time it is exceedingly difficult to tell whether the clip was on the script originally (unless the script is market "Use no clips")—or whether we had to put it there. If we leave it on—they kick. If we remove it and drop it into our own little contribution box—they kick. Now, what on earth can we do? Help!! And—from your own experience with handling scripts—do you imagine that anyone who has to handle great numbers of scripts per day (especially since we ad-advertised in the World for comedies) takes the trouble to deliberately fold a manuscript in new folds for sheer impishness? Goodness knows, when they send a tiny envelope with a thirty-sheet manuscript—we have to take one or the other alternative—folding it as small as possible, or using a Company envelope and politely returning the other to them for private use!

The enclosure is a postal card, undated and unsigned. It is postmarked New York City, and runs:

> Gentlemen.—Recently I sent you a scenario fresh from the typewriter. You returned it folded in new creases, in fact, in four parts instead of three, and put a clip on though none had been there. The return envelope was plenty large enough to hold it in its original folds. Is that fair for you to muss up the writer's paper just because you cannot use it. The Moving Picture World constantly asks directors to be careful of scenarios it returns and not destroy them with clips, etc.

Judging from that four-fold we gather that the writer folded thirteen-inch in three and sent it in a No. 11 envelope, and it had to be refolded to get it into the No. 10. In any event, no attention should have been paid an anonymous communication, and on a postal card, at that.

Personally, we do not see why clips should be used, and if they are used the Niagara should be used, which marks the paper least of any we know, but while we make a plea to editors to be wise to the authors, the authors, too, should learn to be nice to the editors.

A Give-away.

The Photoplay Writers' Exchange, of Toledo, using a postoffice box for an address, is sending out form letters to studios reading:

> We have a number of Scenarios on hand that we would like to mail to you. We would first like to know the nature of the Scenarios that you are at present purchasing—whether comic or drama, etc., and if possible your prices for well-written, original ideas.

In other words this self-styled exchange knows no more of the market and the needs than the veriest novice, and is taking the same idiotic means of finding out the novice would. They tell the author that they can sell, presumably because they know the market better than he does, but they are more ignorant than some of you, because they do not know enough to study production.

Polite Comedy.

Several want to know what "polite" comedy is and more want to know what the Universal's "Parlor" comedy is. Both mean about the same thing, in a way. It is comedy, rather than slap stick, and preferably played by well-dressed actors. Instead of hod carriers and comedy cops, the players are men and women of social rank. The ideas may be pretty much the same, but the environment and the costuming are changed. That's about all the real difference there is. Instead of Mike Finnegan getting violently drunk and beating up Bridget, Montmorency Montague lingers longer than usual at the club and receives a warm welcome when he gets home. It affords an opportunity for more pretentious setting and better dressing, but there is still the same need for comedy action as always. This does not mean antics but action.

Plot vs. Technique.

Some time since, in making a diagnosis for a correspondent, we suggested she was giving too much thought to form and too little to plot, advising greater care with the latter. She does not seem to have agreed wholly with the suggestion, but she took the hint and now writes:

> I restudied my situation, and concluded precisely as your comment in the issue of January 23, as to a professional woman, too technical work. I am plotting and plotting, stimulated by the contest for the Chicago Tribune.
> Last Wednesday I received $75.00 for my first success, and was given an order for more. He commended my plotting and even more the care in my technique. In other words, I have by persistent and painstaking labor for one year and a half—in spare time from library work by day, and teaching in the evenings—succeeded. As I write, just after reading your columns of January 30, I heartily agree with "Here's Spec."

It all gets down to a matter of plotting in the long run. You cannot sell mere technique. You must have something to back that up. Technique is needed to give you the ability to lay out your story so that it will show to the best advantage, but they have more technique than original ideas in the studios and it is the ideas alone they need to take in from the outside.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form. The second half of the questions, seventy-six in number, will be ready for distribution within thirty days. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without study.

Question No. 74.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Would you prefer a wire coil or a cast iron grid rheostat, and why? With current at 6 cents per k. w., how much would it cost per hour to operate a 30 ampere arc on a 550 volt supply, using resistance? You have a 110 volt supply, and 110 volt, 25 ampere rheostat, and a 70 volt, 15 ampere rheostat. How many amperes would you get with the two connected in series? How much with them connected in multiple? Give the rule for figuring resistance in series with the projection arc.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 68.

The Roll of Honor on Question 68 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico; J. I. Roberts, Nashville, Tennessee; J. J. Kamm, Lancaster, Pennsylvania; John Henderson, St Louis, Missouri; Barney Hatche, Beatrice, Nebraska, and Joseph G. Maddux, Spokane, Washington.

I have selected the reply of Brother Henderson as most completely covering the subject.

Reply to Question No. 68.

By John Henderson, St. Louis, Mo.

The Question:

Suppose you were projecting a 15-foot picture and had the choice of a 50 and 100-foot throw, which would you choose, and why would you make that selection. Suppose the choice were between 50 and 125 feet; 50 and 150 feet, or 75 and 125 feet? Give your reasons in each case.

The Answer:

This question involves more points than are apparent on the surface. If I were projecting a 15-foot picture with a choice of a 50 or 100-foot throw, I would select the longer distance, because (a) shorter focal length lenses contain the maximum amount of spherical aberration; (b) if there was side throw or drop in the projection the keystone effect and the out-of-focus effect would be much less at 100 feet than at 50; (c) when using an outside shutter machine it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get the shutter right up close to the objective when using a short focal length lens, and unless the shutter be close to the lens then it must cut the light ray after it has begun to spread somewhat, which requires a wider shutter blade and renders impossible the proper proportioning of the shutter, and this, in turn increases the tendency to flicker.

The only thing I know of in favor of the shorter throw is the fact that the operator can see his picture with less effort and more readily determine whether or not it is in exact focus, but this latter can be very largely overcome on the longer throw by using an opera glass to test the focus of the picture.

As between 50 and 125 feet, or even 50 and 150 feet, I would still choose the longer distance, for the reason that everything said with regard to the 50-100 throw holds equally good with the others. As between projecting a 15-foot picture, 75 and a 125-foot throw, however, I think there would be but little choice, since the shorter throw would require approximately a 5-inch e. f. objective, and a 5-inch e. f. has flat enough curvature to largely eliminate spherical aberration. Also the shutter position objection does not obtain, and the only thing left is the angle. If the drop in the projection be heavy, I would prefer the 125-foot distance, but if it be moderate and the side angle be only that ordinarily found where two projectors are placed as nearly as possible central with the screen sidewise, then the 75-foot position would perhaps be preferred as against 125 feet.

The whole thing sums up as distance from picture to operator vs. angle of projection.

I think the brother has put the thing very clearly. Now, I wonder how many of you who read this reply really ever had stopped to consider the points involved in a little, simple thing like this. Don't all say "I did" at once, because I might get the idea that some of you are not, in thus answering, doing honor to the Father of Your Country.

They Study.

Utica, New York, orders a Handbook and says:

> Most of the union operators of Utica have copies of the Handbook and recommend that all apprentices procure it. The operator I am working with is one of the examination board of the local, and he tells me that out of the nine applicants examined during the past year, five of the six who passed were owners of the Handbook, which I consider is pretty good proof of its value.

It is at least proof that these six men were willing to study and try to learn something. A man does not have to own a Handbook in order to be a good operator, or even a high class operator, but, as a general proposition, the really high class operator does own a Handbook, because the high class man has brains and understands that in order to reach the top of his profession he must avail himself of all possible avenues of knowledge. If this holds good with the high class operator it certainly holds good in even greater degree with the one of mediocre ability, or with the apprentice. The editor of this department has consistently and persistently urged all operators to get a Handbook, and after having been out more than two years, and nearly 10,000 copies of it having been sold, only one man, an electrical engineer—University graduate, Class '04, of Chicago—has expressed any dissatisfaction whatever with his purchase, whereas, I can show you many letters from men whom I know to be high class operators of long experience, saying they would not take ten times the price of the book if they could not get another.

The Policy of this Department.

The editor of this department has often been criticised for having himself criticised operators, sometimes pretty harshly. He has had to encounter some very bitter opposition, on the one hand from managers who objected, and still object strenuously to his boosting for better conditions and better salaries for operators, and, on the other hand, from operators who objected strenuously to his condemning certain acts of operators' unions when those acts were detrimental to the interest of the men themselves, or to the business as a whole, and to his criticising the shortcomings of individual operators.

Now, look here, gentlemen, let me ask you this question, but before you answer, just sit down for a few minutes and consider the matter carefully: What earthly good would I accomplish, either for the business as a whole or for the individual manager or the operator, or for the operators' organization, if I conducted a wishy-washy, weak-kneed, good-Lord-good-devil department which feared to express an opinion where that opinion was likely to be met with opposition, and merely slobbered around trying to please everyone, regardless of whether I believed them to be right or wrong?

The editor of this department does not like to offend people; he would very much rather have their good-will than their enmity. It is not a pleasure to make people angry by criticising their short-comings. He is not, however, acting in an individual capacity. He is editing a department which he knows can be so conducted that it will be of no earthly use to the business, to the paper, or to anybody else, but which he firmly believes can be made, and has already been made of inestimable benefit to the business, to the operator, to the theater manager and to the paper which contains it. He can, however, only accomplish the greatest possible good by calling attention, in good, plain words, to the mistakes that are being made, and pointing out the things which he believes will remedy those mistakes. If you will look back through the files of the department you will, I think, find that the criticism of its editor has always and invariably been constructive—not destructive. He has never pointed out a fault without suggesting a remedy, and if his remedy is not the best the suggestion at least brings the matter out where it is discussed and the ideas of others are presented for consideration, and the right thing is likely to be brought to light. I have sharply criticised the acts of certain unions, as well as certain acts of the I.A., as a whole, and this notwithstanding the fact that I am heartily, thoroughly and completely in accord with the organization of the operator and in favor of their affiliation with the I.A. But when one takes the position that the individual union, or the I.A., as a whole, cannot make mistakes, he takes a position that is nothing more or less than silly, and when either the individual or the organization takes the position that the wrong acts of the organization ought not to be criticised—well, that is even worse than silly; moreover, the organization which fears criticism probably stands in urgent need of considerable fixing. It would be far easier for me, however, to avoid all this scrapping and conduct the department on a "Hurrah-boys-you-are-always-right-and-cannot-be-wrong basis." But if I did that I would be false to my trust, or at least I think I would.

To cite a concrete example in explanation. It has been my misfortune to be obliged to criticise, and criticise sharply, certain things connected with one of the finest theaters in New York City, and thus ruffled the feelings of the manager of that theater, whom, in many respects, I regard highly, and for whose work, along certain lines, I have the greatest admiration. Do you think this is or was a pleasant duty to perform? Well, if you do you are entitled to one hundred and seventy-five more guesses. But, strange as it may seem, I take both myself and my work in the department seriously, and from my point of view if I failed to criticise the wrong things in this house I would not be doing my duty, because of the fact that this particular theater is being and has been held up by this paper as an example for others to follow. I have never yet criticised except I thought good was to be accomplished by taking that course. The policy of this department is, and so long as I remain its editor will continue to be, a policy of constructive criticism, and criticism will be made whenever and wherever it is needed, absolutely and utterly regardless of whose toes get stepped on in the process. On the other hand, I give praise where praise is due, and you may believe me or not, but it is an awfully pleasant thing to be able to praise, and a very, very disagreeable thing to be compelled to make enemies by criticism.

As to the policy of this department and its editor in the dissemination of knowledge of projection, why opposition to that proposition is too foolish to be even seriously considered. I feel sorry for the men who seek to prevent the spread of knowledge, but, after all, their efforts in that direction don't amount to anything, and cannot possibly amount to anything so far as this department is concerned, except that it operates to advertise to the world the fact that there is a certain element who, although living in the twentieth century, are possessed of minds which belong to the dark ages.

Fort Worth Criticized.

George M. Warren, writes from Fort Worth, Texas:

> Having seen your comment with regard to theater in Fort Worth, where it was almost impossible to get good results (by reason of steep pitch in projection.—Ed.) and I want to say a few things concerning the city. I visited all the theaters while there. At the Orpheum you see six reels for five cents, and the projection is fine, only the films are run at a constant speed. At the Gem the pictures are very old and very poorly put on, but then it is a vaudeville theater, which accounts for it. At the Hippodrome I paid twenty cents to see "Tillie's Punctured Romance," and it was worth it. The projection was fine; not a defect could be noticed, except, as at the Orpheum, the speed was constant, and this fault, of course, marred the effect. At the Blue Mouse the pictures flickered very badly. At the Phillips the projection was fine. This theater caters to the better class of trade. Three reels for a dime, and it was worth the money. At the Egypt it costs you ten cents to see three reels, but it was worth the coin, for the pictures in this theater are fine. In fact, there are only three theaters which have high-class projection, and there is little difference between the three, the Orpheum, Hippodrome and Egypt. (The Egypt is the one I spoke of. Joseph H. Smith is operator.—Ed.) It may seem strange that out of thirteen theaters, the projection in only three can be called high class in every respect. There are others where it is good, but they are not in the class of the three named. The Healy shows ten reels for five cents. I went in at 10 A. M. and left at 12.45. Can you beat it? At the Rex the projection was good. I paid five cents in the morning, but understand it is ten after 1 P. M. This theater is a live wire. At the Odeon I paid ten cents, to my regret, because the pictures were in the same class as those at the Healy, and that is decidedly mediocre. In the suburbs the projection was just fair. And now, old man, let me remind you that the last time we met I rode with you from Kansas City to New Mexico, and a fine time we had. You promised to write and I did the same. Well, I have kept my word after more than ten years, but you bet, Old Top, I read every word in the department, though it has been six years since I have touched a projector.

It seems from this that projection in Fort Worth is decidedly above the average, because out of the principal theaters the projection of only two is criticised to any considerable extent. I do not remember Brother Warren or the Kansas-City-to-New-Mexico incident, but, anyhow, I am glad to hear from him.

From Nashville.

From Nashville, Tennessee, comes the following letter, signed by several men, their names being withheld for obvious reasons.

> We note what John L. Burton says concerning conditions in Nashville and are bound to admit that this is all true, and then some. We don't know the gentleman, but he certainly is well posted. There are operators (?) in this city working thirteen hours a day for $14.00 a week, and kids in short pants are left in complete charge of operating rooms at salaries ("Salaries" is good.—Ed.) of less than $8.00 a week, working from 7 to 10.30 p. m., and three matinees a week. Incredible as it sounds, we are reliably informed that one of these baby operators actually works for $3.00 a week. If you even so much as mention "union" you lose your job, and stand small chance of ever getting another. The "managers" put an usher or door-boy in the operating room, give him the job, and he immediately becomes a full-fledged "operator," swells out his chest and tells you how much he knows. When the house is crowded the manager says: "Shoot 'em through in ten minutes," and if you cannot or won't do it Jimmie, The Usher, will. Under these conditions what chance have Nashville operators to produce high-class results? The town is full of would-be's. There are only about five real operators employed, and they are handicapped through lack of material and shoot-'em-through orders. One operator asked his manager for ten cents to buy alcohol with which to clean lenses. The manager replied: "Aw, spit on 'em, I cannot throw money away like that." There was a law passed to examine Nashville operators as to their competency, but they have done nothing about it, and won't even tell you why. Cannot you suggest something?

You say there was a law passed requiring the examination of operators. I believe your officials swore to uphold and enforce the law when they took office—not such laws as they wished to enforce and uphold, and if they did and there is such a law and it is not being enforced, then your city officials, particularly your mayor, to my understanding, is guilty of—well, you can finish the sentence to suit yourself. Theoretically, officials are your servants; practically, however, they are your masters—because you let them be. I do not know how you can go about getting the law enforced, but I'll bet seven dollars to a plugged nickel if I lived in Nashville, conditions were as set forth and there was a law requiring the examination of operators there would be disturbances in that village if that law was not enforced. I might get the worst of it, yes, but while they were landing on me there would be quite a cloud of dust, and when it settled down the matter would have sufficient publicity to compel your city officials to perform their duty whether they wanted to or not. Well, I am up here in New York, but, nevertheless, I'll try to start something. I do not know whether I can do it or not, but—maybe. If the conditions set forth are even approximately true, then it is a disgrace to Nashville managers, and not a very high recommendation of their intelligence.

This statement is, as I said, signed by several men, and, moreover, Burton said the same thing, therefore I believe I am justified in assuming it to be true, though there are, I believe, a few of the houses (a very few) to which the criticisms only apply in a modified degree. As to the Nashville managers opposing the organization of the men—why, that is evidence they are sadly behind the times. The up-to-date, progressive manager does not waste his energy thus foolishly. He is a member of the exhibitors league (union) himself, and welcomes the organization of his operators as a step in advance.

Later: I am now informed that Nashville officials propose to enforce the examination law.

Film Cement Recommended.

Samples of Sticktite film cement manufactured by the Sticktite Film Cement Company, Turner Falls, Mass., were sent out for trial. I now have two reports from Fort Worth, Texas. V. Wood, chief operator Blue Mouse theater says:

> Have given the cement a thorough trial and find it to be in every way good. Makes a nice, smooth patch, does not buckle, and have never had a splice made with it come apart.

John H. M. Smith says:

> Mr. Wood encloses his report with mine. Wood is a very competent man, in fact, one of the best I know of in Texas. Personally, I find the cement to be of very much better grade than that we get down here. Its chemical action is excellent. It sticks well and makes a good patch, does not draw or shrink the film, and is, in fact, I think, all that could be desired.

I have had one report from a New York operator which is essentially the same as those from Fort Worth.

Care of Film.

J. A. Richards, New Orleans, Louisiana, asks:

> Will you kindly tell me the best way to take care of films when not in use. Can they be kept in a tin box, or does that dry them out? Is there any book on films and their care, which would be suitable for a small exchange?

With reference to the care of film, the Eastman Kodak Company says:

> Concerning your inquiry regarding the care of film, we cannot give much information which can be considered absolutely authentic, but, from our experience, believe it is possible to keep film, either negative or positive, with but slight fear of deterioration, if the proper amount of precaution be used. In the first place it is absolutely imperative that all trace of hypo be removed before the film is dried after development; secondly, there should be no contact with metal, either, for instance, by the film being wound on a metal reel or stored in the usual tin container. After being tightly wound and wrapped in tissue paper, with an additional wrapping of oil tissue the film should be placed in a wooden box, which in turn may be placed in a vault or safe, or in a place where the atmosphere is of normal temperature and humidity. It might be well in winding the film to see that it contains no unusual amount of moisture. This information is about all we have on the subject, but in our opinion if the foregoing be carefully carried out there is every reason to believe that the film will remain in a state of excellent preservation for years.

In reply to our inquiry, Mr. Sigmund Lubin, president of the Lubin Manufacturing Co., says:

> In answer to the questions, your letter of December 10th, beg to say that, so far as the writer knows, a negative will keep indefinitely, that is to say, the way we keep them, by storing in small rolls placed in small covered cans. (You will observe that these films have apparently been stored in metal cans, which is not recommended by the Eastman Company.—Ed.). We have found negatives which we made, sixteen, seventeen and eighteen years ago in practically the same condition now as when taken, with the possible exception that they may be a trifle darker, though not enough to affect them greatly.

Mr. J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company, says:

Replying to yours of December 10th, we have very little authoritative data on the condition of film after it has been kept a long period of time. On July 4th, four years ago, our New York office burned, and all the old films we had been keeping in a large iron safe, in hermetically sealed boxes, were destroyed. It is my opinion, however, that films of the present make, if sealed up in air-tight boxes would keep a very long time. However, all the films which I have seen and tried to run on a machine that were more than ten years old were very brittle and in such bad condition that it was almost impossible to keep them on the screen, this being due, doubtless, to the fact that they had not been kept from contact with the atmosphere.

And that is all the data I have up to date. I made the same inquiry of the Selig Company, but have received no reply; doubtless the letter was mislaid or the matter of its reply overlooked. I think, however, taking everything into consideration, the advice of the Eastman Kodak Company is best, by reason of the fact that wooden boxes certainly would not be any worse than metal ones, and evidently the Eastman people, who themselves are manufacturers of film stock, are of the opinion that contact with metal has a bad effect, and surely they ought to know. As to the sealing in air-tight boxes, I am awfully sorry we have no data on that proposition. Sealing hermetically appeals to me, but, on the other hand, I have somewhere heard that where film was hermetically sealed in metal cans there was a possibility of its "sweating," though unless there were extreme changes of temperature and much moisture present when the can was sealed I hardly see how that would happen. Well, anyhow, there you are. This is all the data we have, and we cordially thank Messrs. Lubin, Blackton, and Blair, the latter of the Cinematographic Department of the Eastman Kodak Company, for their kindness.

Carbons and Condensers.

C. C. Perry, Fowler, Kansas, wants to know:

(a) Using 110 volt d. c. on Edison one-pin Exhibition Model, and a. c. 110 volt on the same make of machine at another theater. What kind of carbons should be used at each place? (b) Why will carbons blaze and flicker at times, particularly on direct current? Am using hard carbons on d. c., and soft on a. c. Am I right? (c) What causes so much condenser breakage on alternating current, and not on direct?

(a) If d. c., amperage exceeds 35 use ¾ inch cored carbons above and ½ inch or ⅝ inch solid below—whichever gives best results. Don't use ordinary arc lamp carbons, such as are used for street lighting, you must use projection carbons, which may be had of any film exchange. Ordinary carbons are altogether too hard. For a. c., up to 60 amperes, use ⅝ inch cored above and below. Set your carbons, both for a. c. and d. c., as per Fig. 101, page 211 of the Handbook. (b) May be due to three things: (1) A defective core in the upper carbon. (2) Hard spots or other defects in carbons. (3) Carbons working above their capacity. (c) May be due to a great many things. I would suggest that you keep the vent of your lamphouse perfectly free and open, and get either a Preddy or Elbert condenser holder—see their advertisement in Moving Picture World. Either one of these holders in conjunction with good ventilation in the lamphouse will either greatly reduce or entirely eliminate your condenser breakage. You probably are using a much greater amperage a. c. than d. c., and that, of course, makes more heat.

Grand Rapids Operators' Banquet.

On January 12th, M. P. M. O., Union 291, I. A. T. S. E., Grand Rapids, Michigan, massacred some Edison celery, Simplex fricassee of chicken with tea biscuit, Powers SixA mashed potatoes, Motiograph creamed corn, Polyscope coffee, Pathe tea, Lubin milk, Optigraph ice cream and Camaragraph cake, liberally interspersed with oratory, the latter furnished by president C. R. Bright, treasurer Roy Gardner, and by Frank Chute, Orvill Skelcher, Ernest Louckes, James Sherman, Charles Dart and Claude O. Taylor, president of the Michigan Federation of Labor. The affair was, we understand, thoroughly enjoyed, and the manner in which it was pulled off is a distinct credit to the organization. The editor does not know what Simplex fricasse chicken is, but presumes it is chicken which has been run through a Simplex machine, also presumably Powers mashed potatoes are those mashed by the Powers machine, but just how you can get milk out of the Lubin machine—well, will Pop Lubin kindly explain. If that can be done we will get a flock of Lubin machines, start a dairy and make our fortunes.

Unsigned Letters.

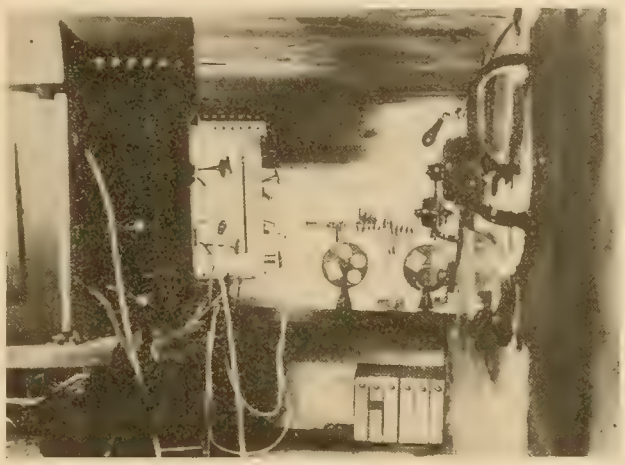
From New Orleans, Louisiana, comes a long typewritten letter simply signed "New Orleans, La., Chief Operator." Now, gentlemen, I cannot use unsigned communications; it simply can't be did, particularly where a letter deals with such matters as this one does. The name don't need to be published, but I must have it as an evidence of good faith.

I am firmly convinced there are many abuses practiced against operators by New Orleans' theater managers and I am willing to do anything I can, within reason, to help get them remedied, but you cannot expect me to publish that which you won't sign your own name to, even when it is understood that your name will not be published.

Much Pleased.

A. H. Arnold, Chicago Heights, Illinois, writes:

Received the Hand book and am very much pleased with it. Enclosed find photograph of operating room in this theater, the Fashion. Am using two Simplex projectors, with Bell &



Howell lamphouse and transformers. Note the two fans in rear of room for ventilation purposes. In the floor are two openings about one foot square, these being the fresh air intakes. What size link fuses would you advise, using two transformers, 60 amperes, and one rheostat, 25 amperes, 110 volts? Am now using two 100 ampere fuses, but think they are too large.

Your two 60 ampere transformers will take approximately 20 amperes each from the lines, and your rheostat will, presumably, pass 25 more, making a total of 65 amperes, approximately. I think you will find 75 or 80 ampere fuses to be sufficient to carry the whole load for a short time, but in view of the fact that you probably seldom or never use the two 60 ampere lamps at one time, most certainly 75 ampere fuses ought to be ample, placed on the primary of course.

A Good Stunt.

W. S. Turnpaugh, Fort Worth, Texas, says:

For those who have a small fire at the aperture I would say that peroxide of hydrogen will instantly dissolve the brown deposit which is caused by a burning film, but where peroxide is used on iron be sure to wipe it dry and oil immediately thereafter.

I tried this myself and was surprised at the ease with which the peroxide cut the gummy deposit left by burning film, which is mighty nasty stuff to get off, too, as all old-time operators know. Thanks, Brother Turnpaugh, in the name of the fraternity.

Wants Our Opinion.

Canada makes the following inquiry:

We would greatly appreciate your opinion on the following. Are using 60 cycle, 120 volt a.c., projecting a 12¾ foot picture at 89 feet; radium gold fibre screen. We run one motiograph, using 60 amperes from a Fort Wayne compensarc, and one Powers Six A, using 55 amperes from the Powers inductor. We are getting a much better picture from the Powers, it being brighter and its focus sharper. We believe the double cone inside shutter on the 1913 motiograph cuts a greater percentage of light than the Powers outside shutter. How about it? Would you advise putting an outside shutter on the motiograph? Do you know of any cases where an outside shutter has given good results on this machine? We are going to try out a set of meniscus-bi-convex condensers and would like to have you tell us what size to buy, the objective being 6¼ e.f. We may show a larger picture in the near future and presume that would require a shorter objective, in which case we would have to have a different condenser combination.

With reference to the difference of the brilliancy of light it would be exceedingly difficult to advise you as to the reason for this. It is quite possible that (a) the Powers inductor is delivering a considerably higher amperage than the conpensarc; (b) that the Powers shutter is cutting a smaller percentage of the light than is the motiograph, though that, I think, while possible, is hardly probable. I could not answer definitely on that point, because of the fact that your Powers might have a three-wing shutter, wide-blade style or narrow-blade style, or a two-wing shutter, each one of which forms a distinct and separate proposition; also the 1913 model motiograph might have any one of two or three widths of shutter blade; (c) as to my advising you with regard to the outside shutter, why you certainly would not cut any less light with one, nor would you get any less flicker, unless you used a three-wing shutter, and if you do that and your current is 60 cycle AC, you may run into trouble of other sorts. You see, you have asked a question which is practically impossible to answer definitely except that I have a pattern of the shutters and know exactly the ratio of the intermittent movement of your machines.

As to the meniscus-bi-convex condensers, all you have to do is to write Mr. Bryson of the Laemmle Minneapolis Film Service, 252 Hennepin Avenue, and tell him I referred you to him with a request that he see that you are fitted with the proper combination, giving him the exact throw, exact width of picture, kind of machine and current. No, I think if you change from a 6¼ to a 5¾ you can get very good results with the same condensers, though, of course, theoretically they should be changed. Practically, however, my opinion is that the same lenses would answer fairly well.

Light Trouble.

Toronto, Canada, sets forth the following:

> Not long ago I told you I thought the intermittent of my Simplex caused the identation between the sprocket holes, but since I have concluded the lower sprocket is really the guilty wretch. Several things might cause it, such as a strong spring on the roller arm, together with the flanges on the roller which will keep the film on, even though it climbs the teeth, the spindle carrying the roller working loose, etc. At the aperture I use a 2 inch spot and two 6½ inch condensers. The arc gets 50 amperes d. c. A cone of green glass on the machine enables me to look at the spot. I have noted something I don't understand. Inside the 2 inch spot is a smaller one, and, although it is all white, the smaller one seems brighter. When the lamp > is moved closer to the condenser the inner spot appears to get smaller. Have tried different lenses with the same result. What do you suppose causes this? Enclosed is a sketch of the carbon economizer I use. Any operator can make one for about ten cents; 1, is a ⅜ inch gas pipe, 2, a stove bolt, holes in No. 1 are threaded for No. 2, 3, bolt with wing nut, 4 and 5 are ½ inch gas pipe split, with a hacksaw, bolt holes in 4 and 5 are not threaded.

I referred Toronto's letter to Mr. Arkin, who says: "The brother describes a physical phenomenon exactly as it is, though he does not understand it. The inner white spot is the theoretical white spot that one should get on the film. The outer blue spot is formed by the rays striking the edge of the aperture plate. (I wonder what Brother Arkin means by this. He is twisted on that particular proposition, because the rays have not yet passed the aperture. He might mean the cooling plate, or the aperture of the condensing lens.—Ed.) The metal gives it the color. It never reaches the lens; it is wasted light. The nearer the lamp is placed to the condenser the more light the condenser receives and the brighter the spot will be, but I doubt if it gets smaller."

Now, that is Friend Arkin's version of the matter. Frankly, I am skeptical about his correctness on this particular proposition. I believe the blue edge is due to a combination of spherical and chromatic aberration, yet I would not like to say Brother Arkin is in error, because, perhaps, I do not get his meaning right. Anyhow he is right in one respect, and that is the inner theoretical spot which ought to cover the film picture. I agree with him also that the spot could not get smaller. That would seem to be, or would be optically impossible.

Umph! Well.

A. L. Chocklett, Roanoke, Virginia, says:

> I recently experienced a queer thing in the shape of a travel ghost, which my manager, who is a better operator than I, and who is always willing to help, discovered the cause of. The sketch will describe it better than I can. The seat of the trouble was found in the fact that one of the lens of the objective was loose, and the vibration of the machine produced travel ghost. Possibly some other brother may benefit by the publication of this.

According to the sketch the ghost was both up and down in a diagonal direction toward the right hand lower corner and left hand upper corner of the screen. I do not see any reason why a loose lens should produce travel ghost, at least in both directions. Of course a loose lens might alter the direction of the light ray slightly, but it seems to me it would be almost impossible to alter it sufficiently to produce this kind of effect. Has any one any comments to offer?

Seattle License Law.

Seattle, Washington's, moving picture machine operators have requested by the city council to pass a law regulating moving picture theaters, and to include in that ordinance provisions for a board of examiners to examine and license operators for an initial fee of two dollars and fifty cents, with a one dollar fee thereafter for renewal. No operator to be permitted to work more than six and a half house without relief and not to exceed eight hours in twenty-four.

This department and its editor are heartily in accord with the proposed law, as stated, except that it seems to him six and a half hours is too long to work without relief.

Powers Machine Improvements.

The Nicholas Power Company have put out an improved apron for this No. Six machine. Considerable annoyance was caused in many instances by the film making a noise through slapping against the lower apron rollers. The new apron bulges or bends straight outward for one-half inch, 15-16 inch above the center of the rolled spindle, then it angles upward and the lip occupies the same position as does that of the old apron. This apron may be substituted for the one now on your machine if you have any trouble of the kind mentioned.

The Power Company has also put out a shield designed to prevent the upper loop drawn down under the sprocket. It is neatly nickel plated and can be attached in just a moment. I would advise owners of Powers machines who have experienced any trouble of the kind mentioned to purchase this little device, which may be had from the Nicholas Power Company.

Getting Acquainted.

Jesse Tuckness, Springfield, Missouri, says:

> Feel it my duty to write the department and get acquainted with the bunch. Have been operating about five years and consider myself as just a beginner. Have been keeping tab on light action and measuring of lenses. I find a simple method of proving that the ray of light crosses outside is to punch a pin hole in the dowser as near the center as possible, take a piece of film about 4 inches long and thread it in the machine, frame the picture up, first having fastened the fire shutter up out of the way. Now strike the arc and let the light project through the pin hole, the film, and on through the objective lens. Then take a piece of paper, follow the ray until it comes to a focus or crossing point. Before it reaches this point the picture is blurred and upside down. After going about one inch the other side of the point it will be in perfect focus and right side up. I find the best and simplest method of measuring condensers to be the one in the Handbook, which I have used and I am getting a clear field with both objective and stereopticon lenses. My measurements are as follows: with a 6½ and a 7½ condenser, 5¾ e. f. Gundlach objective with 14¾" from center of condenser combination to aperture, and 1-16" separation of lenses in condensers; 3⅜" from crater to back surface of back lens with a 2" spot at cooling and a 22" stereopticon lens, projecting a 12' M. P. at 80', using ⅝" carbons above and below, taking a current through a 110 volt, 60 cycle Fort Wayne compensarc, with a two-wing shutter, cutting 50% of the light, using a mirroroide screen I have very little flicker.

Well, by golly, Friend Tuckness don't overlook anything! Glad to have you yank the latch string, and you are cordially invited to come again. As to the pin hole matter, I would recommend it to others to try. It won't do any harm, and, in any event, will be an interesting experiment. If you don't want to punch a hole in your dowser, just put in a piece of sheet metal in its place temporarily.

Current Saver.

T. Glucksman, New Orleans, Louisiana, says:

> We have replaced the arc light suspended in the dome of the auditorium with a 400 watt nitrogen, in a big special made wire guard holder to protect same, as this lamp is handled three times daily. I can recommend this lamp as a current saver as against an arc lamp; also it gives a better light.

All of which is respectfully referred to our readers for their consideration.

New Orleans Operators Exonerated.

It will be remembered that some time ago I published the fact that some New Orleans operators had been arrested on a charge of having thrown "stink bombs" in theaters during a strike. These cases came to a sudden ending in Judge Fisher's court recently when the affidavits against James O. Webb, Fred Chateau, Louis N. Chateau, and Albert St. Johnstone were dismissed by Assistant District Attorney Landfried, on the ground that there was not sufficient proof of the offense. This information is contained in a clipping from a New Orleans daily paper.

THE VICTOR (Essanay), Feb. 15.—Wallace Beery is the victor in this mother-in-law comedy relating the experiences of a henpecked man whose rights are totally ignored. The best farce is reserved for concluding scenes when the two women are caught under a deluge of water from an overflowing bathtub. After that they have greater respect for the man. Good for a few laughs.

THE NEEDS OF COMMERCE (Edison), Feb. 16.—An educational subject of particular interest. The making of paper money in Washington is followed in all of its stages. The film was produced with the co-operation of the United States Treasury Department.

A POUND FOR A POUND (Essanay), Feb. 16.—The story of this production has been written by James Oliver Curwood, and is a story of the Yukon. Albert Roscoe, Nell Craig and Walter Beery figure in the cast. The picture in some ways is an interesting one, but through the lack of explanatory sub-titles it is rather difficult to follow.

A DOUBLE ROLE (Lubin), Feb. 16.—An amusing situation has been chosen as the basis of this comedy. It is, however, an extremely improbable one. According to the story a man who is an actor has succeeded in keeping from her the secret of his profession. She goes to the theater with some friends and falls madly in love with the leading man, and invites him home to take tea with her. The comedy is, of course, developed in a partially farcical style, a fact which makes up for the improbability.

BILL HAYWOOD, PRODUCER (Selig), Feb. 16.—Attracted by the life of a motion picture director, a cowboy becomes a producer with a company comprising other cowboys and two stranded actors. In lieu of a consecutive plot, the film offers many rough-and-tumble scenes, some of which are laughable. The cowboys place the making of photoplays among the extra hazardous occupations.

A SPIRITUAL ELOPEMENT (Edison), Feb. 17.—William Wadsworth, Arthur Housman and Viola Dana make a strong combination; but this time they are handicapped by a trivial story that is childish rather than funny. It closes a reel with "Their Happy Little Home."

THEIR HAPPY LITTLE HOME (Edison), Feb. 17.—Mark Swan is the author of this half-reel farce, based on the trials of a young married couple when they prepare to settle in their pretty little country bungalow. The painters splash paint on about everything except the house. A passable offering, opening a reel with "A Spiritual Elopement." Bessie Learn, Saul Harrison and William Bechtel are in the cast.

THE FABLE OF "THE COLD GRAY DAWN OF THE MORNING AFTER" (Essanay), Feb. 17.—Starting with the misery of one cold gray dawn after a too festive night before, this fable follows the Rounder until he awakes to another equally unpleasant morning. As played by Rapley Holmes and a supporting cast composed exclusively of men, it is George Ade humor of the best quality. The production is true in its details and very cleverly sub-titled.

THE BLACK DIAMOND (Selig), Feb. 17.—The exposition in this detective melodrama is somewhat confused, probably because of the many characters introduced. In its entirety the story is too obviously artificial to be impressive, although the plot development is rather ingenious. Double exposure scenes, permitting Guy Oliver to play two parts, are well handled. Stella Razeto and Eugenie Besserer have prominent roles.

SOME WHITE HOPE (Vitagraph), Feb. 17.—Boxing bouts are nearly always well received in films, and the one shown here is no exception to the rule. After drinking too much hard cider, the White Hope (Donald MacBride) dreams of his prowess in the ring. Ralph W. Ince, as author and producer, may be credited with another amusing comedy.

THE BOX OF CHOCOLATES (Biograph), Feb. 18.—That a wealthy man should object to his daughter marrying a clerk is not unlikely, but it is stretching a point to have the young man arrested when he calls on his sweetheart. This turn in the plot is not fortunate. The picture gets its title from the scene in which the girl hides jewels in chocolate bonbons in order to fool robbers. Charles H. West, Claire McDowell and Frank Evans are in the cast of this mediocre melodrama.

SNAKEVILLE'S BEAUTY PARLOR (Essanay), Feb. 18.—Although somewhat below the average of the comedies presenting Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin, Harry Todd and Ernest VanPelt, this film has a few laughable moments. The proprietor of the beauty parlor and his assistant get into serious trouble when Sophie's face is scalded by hot water.

LOVE VERSUS CHICKENS (Kalem), Feb. 16.—The old idea of young people falling in love and ending the quarrel of their parents is used here without any marked novelty of treatment. The subject suffices, however, as a companion piece for "You'll Find Out." Scenes are laid in a rural community.

YOU'LL FIND OUT (Kalem), Feb. 16.—W. H. Brown, Carrie Clark Ward, John Prescott and Ethel Teare are in this brief farce, having insanity for its central motive. Nurses are badly mauled by the patient and the new arrival is told that he will find out why his predecessors left. An offering of slight merit on a reel with "Love Versus Chickens."

THE QUALITY OF MERCY (Vitagraph), Feb. 18.—The plot material in this drama, written by George Bronson Howard, seems full enough to warrant a more lengthy treatment. As it stands, the picture is not without appeal in showing how the heart of a severe man is softened toward his children. Frank Currier, well cast as the father, is ably supported by Edith Storey, S. Rankin Drew and others.

THE VILLAGE FRIEND (Biograph), February 19.—It is plain that the company that made this picture were interested in it—the acting gives it a liveliness that keeps it always pleasing. It is not a strongly convincing situation, but interests. A fair offering.

A MELODIOUS MIXUP (Kalem), Feb. 19.—A laughable comedy featuring Lloyd Hamilton and Bud Duncan. The action takes place in a theater that boasts of a ludicrous band of musicians and several fetching chorus girls. In entertainment value this sketch is above the average of its class.

THE LITTLE DETECTIVE (Lubin), Feb. 19.—Louise Huff is the little detective in this quite exceptional story of boarding school life. By much reading of detective fiction the girl acquires a taste for unearthing crime, and without leaving the school grounds she soon has an opportunity to test her skill. Edgar Jones and Joseph Kaufman are conspicuous members of the cast.

THE LADY KILLER (Selig), Feb. 19.—A comedy with a marvelously perfect female impersonation. It is a well made piece; is fresh enough and was liked by the spectators. It is distinctly lively and will go well.

A MADCAP ADVENTURE (Vtiagraph), Feb. 19.—Many characters introduced with little formality make it a trifle difficult to keep track of their places in W. A. Tremayne's story. Barring this defect, "A Madcap Adventure" is a very creditable offering, brightly acted by Dorothy Kelly, Cissy Fitz-Gerald, James Morrison, George Cooper and others. While on her escapade, Miss Kelly wears the clothes of a dapper young man.

THE COWBOY'S CONQUEST (Biograph), Feb. 20.—Passing as a cowboy, a young millionaire wins the love of a society girl and to put her to a test he returns to fashionable New York still clothed as a cowboy. People are shocked until they learn his true identity. The lovers are well enough presented by Ivan Christy and Isabel Rea; but they have slender material on which to base a genuine comedy.

LOVE AND THE LEOPARD (Selig), Feb. 20.—Lacking a story of dramatic force this picture relies upon one incident around which the plot is woven. A young woman sets a trap for a leopard and catches a man. That is the gist of a tale, whose best excuse for existence is found in an awe inspiring leopard.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE VIGILANTE (Essanay), Feb. 20.—Broncho Billy, wearing the badge of a sheriff, is called upon to outwit a lynching party and save the life of a cattle thief. Part of his game is the loading of shot guns with blank cartridges that the volley fired after the fugitive may be ineffectual. In all respects on a par with the customary run of G. M. Anderson's Broncho Billy pictures.

THE ENGINEER'S PERIL (Kalem), Feb. 20.—Not up to the best of the "Hazard's of Helen" railroad pictures, this, the fifteenth reel in the series is more conventional than most of its preedseccors. The story is hardly better then fair. Despite some shortcomings, however, the film should be well received by audiences that have been following the adventures of Helen Holmes.

THE VOICE OF CONSCIENCE (Edison), Feb. 20.—Owing to constant use, the story of a wife who is on the verge of deserting her husband because he is too busy for social affairs is not open to many new variations. By its very nature much of this film is bound to be reminiscent of preceding versions of the same theme. The production is satisfactory, as is the acting of Frank McGlynn, Sally Crute and Richard Tucker.

AIN'T IT THE TRUTH (Essanay), Feb. 22.—The most diverting incident in this comedy, played by Wallace Beery, Ruth Hennessy and Richard Bolder, concerns the deception practiced on an unsuspecting fisherman. In order to win the favor of his sweetheart's father, the suitor keeps hooking fish on the old man's line until the angler is in the best of good humor. Then the would-be bridegroom tells his friends of the approaching marriage and one and all they condole with him. He escapes before it is too late. The film has good moments.

THE HEART OF A BANDIT (Biograph), Feb. 22.—In the matters of picturesque locations and the direction of the story, this film recalls innumerable other westerns. It is all right in its way, but lacks any distinguishing qualities. Harry Carey and Charles H. West are well cast in the chief roles.

WHEN SAMUEL SKIDDED (Vitagraph), Feb. 22.—A real surprise and a clever one closes this subject with a laugh. Faking an injured leg, a man sues a traction company. In court he is told to show the jury how he has been obliged to walk since the accident and then how he used to walk, that they may judge the seriousness of his lameness. He does as requested to the dismay of his wife, who had all but spent the $10,000. The plot is out of the ordinary.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 15 (Selig), Feb. 22.—Winter sports at Dartmouth college, showing ski jumping and coasting, make a particularly good subject for pictorial treatment. Other interesting events are the Mardi Gras at New Orleans and the flood that swept away railroads and bridges in California.

ONE WAY TO ADVERTISE (Edison), Feb. 22.—Running something more than half a reel as a companion piece for "Protecting Big Game," is this farce, written by H. D. Phillips and acted by Cora Wiliams, William Wadsworth and Arthur Housman. A harmless advertisement is transformed into something quite shocking when a goat rips the paper in half. As handled by the Edison Company the action is mildly humorous without being indelicate.

PROTECTING BIG GAME (Edison), Feb. 22.—Excellent views of a wild, snow-covered part of Idaho in which the government is making earnest efforts to prevent the illegal killing of elk. An epsiode in the life of a game warden is presented. On a reel with "One Way to Advertise."

IT ALL DEPENDS (Lubin), Feb. 20.—Clay M. Greene offers a good comedy idea, although in photoplay form it is not especially effective. The idea is that vocal sounds issuing from a neighbor's apartment may be heavenly or atrocious, all depending upon whether the singer is a celebrity or a nobody. The tenants complain until they learn that the offender is a great opera tenor. Ethel Clayton displays many delicate touches in her performance and is ably seconded by Joseph Kaufman and John Delson.

Licensed Specials.

ONE NIGHT OUT (Essanay), Feb. 15.—After this, the second Charles Chaplin two-part Essanay release, it is clear that the comedian lost none of his ability to entertain when he left the Keystone Company. "One Night Out" keeps an audience in an almost perpetual uproar. It is Chaplin at his funniest, and supporting him is a strong company that follows his method as though accustomed to it from long experience. The situations are rather good in themselves and they are used to the very best advantage.

DWELLERS IN GLASS HOUSES (Biograph), Feb. 16.—In the first reel of this two-part drama the plot development is unnecessarily slow. The real climax comes early in the second reel and after that one is asked to become interested in a story within a story, telling how the characters came to occupy their respective positions. This is pure narrative lacking in dramatic suspense, and save for able performances given by Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale and Jack Drumier, the picture would be tiresome.

O'GARRY OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED (Vitagraph), Feb. 16.—This three-part Broadway Star Feature was reviewed at length by George Blaisdell in the Moving Picture World of January 23d.

THE MYSTERY OF THE TEA DANSANT (Kalem), Feb. 17.—Ruth Roland plays the lead in this, the fourth episode of "The Girl Detective" series, reviewed by Hanford C. Judson in the Moving Picture World of February 13th on page 988.

THE RAINY DAY (Lubin), Feb. 17.—Reversing the usual situation, George W. Terwilliger introduces a wife who is the very spirit of economy and a husband who sees no need of saving for "a rainy day." He is infatuated by a flirtatious woman who wears low cut gowns; but is won back by his wife when she appears in fashionable attire. Without offering much dramatic action to fill two reels, the picture still excites a fair degree of interest, largely because of the acting of Ormi Hawley, Earl Metcalfe and Florence Hackett.

HER MARTYRDOM (Lubin), Feb. 18.—The ending is the weakest part of this three-reel drama, adapted from a story in Young's Magazine. The problem of a girl who marries a wealthy man that she may have money to give her fiancee who is ill, is made interesting by Arthur Johnson, Lottie Briscoe and Howard Mitchell. When the woman falls in love with her husband, yet allows her former sweetheart to believe that she remains unmarried, the solution is in doubt. The author chose the easiest, if not the best, way out of the difficulty when he made the superfluous man a burglar and had him shot.

HER HUSBAND'S SON (Edison), Feb. 19.—A two-reel offering with McCoy, Housemann and Conness in the leading roles. It has a sensational denouement which will compensate for lack of freshness and punch in the situation up to that point. The story doesn't really live; but the prettiness of the scenes and the commendable acting are assets. The photography, too, is good.

AN AMATEUR PRODIGAL (Essanay), Feb. 19.—Albert Payson Terhune's story, which first appeared in Short Stories Magazine, is disappointing as a two-reel picture. If not actually padded, the action at least seems needlessly slow and save in a few instances the scenes have little grip. There are some incongruities. For instance, it is not customary for the key to an apartment in an expensive house to be placed beside the furnace in the cellar within convenient reach of a would-be burglar. But to compensate for defects, the film has good points in the idea behind the story and the acting of Lester Cuneo, Joseph Byron Totten and Ruth Stonehouse.

TWICE RESCUED (Vitagraph), Feb. 20.—That this two-part drama holds the attention is largely due to Theodore Marston's pleasing production and the sympathetic acting of Dorothy Kelly and James Morrison. In the matter of plot there is nothing extraordinary. The picture opens with the rescue of a girl from a wrecked ship and passes through various complications until the same girl is restrained from jumping off the Brooklyn bridge. The sweetheart whom she thought faithless saves her life and all is well. Frank Currier, Mary Maurice and George Cooper are in the cast.

THE RED BLOOD OF COURAGE (Selig), Feb. 22.—James Oliver Curwood was not inspired when he wrote the scenario for this two-reel melodrama, supposed to be laid in the wilds of Hindustan. The first reel moves too slowly and the second, in so far as the story is concerned, is not convincing. On the credit side of the offering are several thrills born of physical daring, settings that attract the eye and the sincere acting of Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton. One member of the cast is noticeably stagy.

PATHE NEWS NO. 12, 1915 (Pathe Exc.), Feb. 10.—The news items herein recorded are of more than the ordinary interest, including a crash on the Sixth avenue elevated road, New York, an excellent picture of Andrew Carnegie, a handsome sword made in France for King Albert of Belgium.

PATHE NEWS NO. 13, 1915 (Pathe Exc.), Feb. 13.—The items from the war zone are unusually interesting in this number. The Czar of Russia with some twenty or so of his officers about him is one of the most remarkable pictures of the kind that has been seen. A picture of Archduke Nicholas conferring with his officers is also interesting, and evidently not a posed picture.

THE HOBOES' INVENTION (Royal), Feb. 15.—Two hungry tramps get a dry goods box and build a fake sausage machine, advertising as their product some stolen weinerwurst. The machine is funny and the subsequent developments bring numerous smiles. The photography is good.

YE OLDEN GRAFTER (Keystone), Feb. 18.—A half-reel comedy, in which Ambrose and other characters appear in colonial costumes. The subtitles are also couched in ancient phraseology. The story is clearly photographed and diverting.

A GLIMPSE OF SAN DIEGO (Keystone), Feb. 18.—On same reel with above. Very pleasing views of the beautiful exposition buildings at the San Diego fair; also a view of the bridge costing a quarter of a million.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 7, 1915 (Mutual), Feb. 18.—An interesting number of the Weekly showing Belgian guns and gunmen, ambulance barges on the River Seine, the Eighth Annual Bob Sled Race at Huntington, L. I., the ruins of Creil, and other notable events and views.

HEARTS AND PLANETS (Keystone), Feb. 20.—Chester Conklin appears in this very pleasing number as spooney Mr. Walrus. He makes love to the professor's daughter and they fool the aged astronomer by shooting off fireworks near his telescope. The plot of this seems new and unique; it is sure to bring much laughter from an audience.

ETHEL GAINS CONSENT (Komic), Feb. 21.—The 17th of the "Bill" series proves, as far as we have seen, to be one of the best of the series, and can be calculated on to keep an audience in good humor as long as it lasts. In it Ethel handles a serious situation in connection with her future family-in-law in a most amusing manner.

A LUCKY LEAP (Keystone), Feb. 22.—The opening scenes of this characteristic number occur in a grocery store. The bursting of the vinegar barrel created much amusement. The later scenes, including the falls from the cliff, were also good. A good nonsense offering.

THE MUFFLED BELL (Reliance), Feb. 22.—A ready-made detective yarn, in which the hero trails a gang of ammunition smugglers. The girl goes to his rescue and both are tied in a room together, as well as two policemen who raid the place. The cast and photography are pleasing, but the story does not develop much feeling.

THE CONSTABLE'S DAUGHTER (Beauty), Feb. 23.—Joseph Harris, Fred Gamble, Virginia Kirtley, Gladys Kingsbury and Webster Campbell constitute the cast which plays this picture. The production has some amusing points, but it is also another demonstration of the difficulty which is apparently met with in obtaining good stories.

THE FATAL BLACK BEAN (Majestic), Feb. 23.—This release is one of the indifferent sort. Its story is not of sufficient strength to guarantee a strong production. It has been directed by R. A. Walsh, and Miriam Cooper and Elmer Clifton appear in the leading roles. The scene is laid possibly in Southern California, and so far as its scenic properties go is pleasing to look at.

THE DOUBLE CROSSING OF SLIM (Reliance), Feb. 24.—A variation of the jewel robbery story, with a new twist in it. Before going away the husband substitutes paste jewels for those he gave his wife. Later one of the crooks substitutes still another string of paste jewels for those already hidden, to double cross his pal. This is well photographed and makes a fair offering of the conventional type.

ON ACCOUNT OF A DOG (Princess), Feb. 26.—Blake hates dogs and his wife loves them. He sends her to a dog show with his partner. Later he thinks his wife loves his partner, but finds it was only a dog she referred to in her note. This is a very light subject, but proves fairly amusing.

A BIT O' HEAVEN (Eclair), Feb. 28.—A slum story with a very pretty close. The opening scenes were made so realistic as to be unpleasant. The mother's death scene can easily be cut. The search of the children for God and their adoption by the bereft widower makes an effective close.

WHEN THE GODS PLAYED A BADGER GAME (Rex), Feb. 28.—Pauline Bush appears in this as a chorus girl. A married man pays her attentions and at the wife's request she has the "prop" boy pretend to be her husband. The plot is quite pleasing and the behind-the-scenes settings are attractive.

A NEWSPAPER NEMESIS (Thanhouser), Feb. 28.—This begins with a safe cracking and murder in a darkened room. Molly, the girl reporter, takes up the case and locates the murderer in a saloon back room. Later she causes his arrest. A conventional newspaper story of fair strength.

TOO MANY BEAUX (Pathe Exc.), February.—This is a rather good farce comedy. A girl comes to a western hotel after being robbed on a western stage coach and sets up a manicuring establishment. Of course she has numerous patrons of the wild and woolly west type, and some really good comedy asserts itself in the various situations.

WILD BIRDS (Pathe Exc.), February.—On same reel with "A Trip to the Island of Madeira." This is an intensely interesting study of the wild birds of Scotland, including Merlins, the Snipe, the Plover, the Black Duck and others. These birds have been photographed at close range.

A TRIP TO MADEIRA (Pathe Exc.), February.—This trip by means of the motion picture film to the quaintly beautiful Islands of Madeira constitutes a scenic of exceptional quality.

PRESSING HIS SUIT (Imp), March 1.—A familiar comedy plot, apparently a reissue, with King Baggott and Arline Pretty in the cast. He sends flowers to the girl and his trousers to the tailor. The boy mixes the packages, with very humorous results. An amusing subject.

WHEELS WITHIN WHEELS (Big U), March 2.—A story of political intrigue, written by Bess Meredyth, with Murdock MacQuarrie, Agnes Vernon and Rex de Roselli in the cast. The plot contains a good mystery and there is a surprise at the end. It makes a very pleasing one-reel subject.

WHEN HE PROPOSED (Nestor), March 2.—This comedy subject, written by Lee Moran, develops a very amusing idea. Eddie and Victoria are in love. The family help themselves to Eddie's cigars and candy and big brother induces him to buy an automobile with the money he has saved to furnish his home. This is close to human nature and makes an enjoyable release.

BILL'S NEW PAL (L-KO), March 3.—A typical eccentric number, featuring Billie Ritchie, Gertrude Selby and Henry Bergman as restaurant employes. The scenes are of the usual knockabout sort, followed by a chase after the man in the garbage can. This is a fair number of its kind.

SUCH IS LIFE (Rex), March 4.—This story, located in a theatrical boarding house, is so interesting the observer wishes there was another reel. All the types are good; the slavey, the burlesque man, the matinee idol and the girl looking for her first engagement. The entire case is pleasing and includes Pauline Bush, Lon Chaney, Wm. Dowling and Olive Golden. The slavey sacrifices her own love to save the girl's happiness. A pleasing offering.

WHEN SNITZ WAS "MARRIAGED" (Sterling), March 4.—A low comedy number with John E. Brennan and Dot Gould in the cast. The bridegroom's appearance was unattractive throughout the film and many of the scenes were in like character. The fall over the cliff was a scene worthy of a better story.

ROOMS FOR RENT (Victor), March 5.—The sporty young husband puts up a "For Rent" sign during his wife's absence to make a little easy money renting rooms. There is a mixup of eccentric characters later and the wife clears out the unwelcome tenants with a hose. Fairly amusing knockabout humor.

SOME NIGHTMARE (Joker), March 6.—Two hoboes steal money from a blind man and have numerous adventures. Trick photography furnishes the chief interest, but the lack of plot makes this a flimsy offering.

CHECKED THROUGH (Royal), March 6.—Rather an amusing but totally improbable situation is presented in this film, which is not of a sufficiently farcical development to allow of its exaggerated nature. Despite this criticism the film placed before an audience may appeal as being tremendously funny. The story is built around the home-coming of a young actress who has been stranded, concealed in her future brother-in-law's trunk.

DIRTY DAN'S DEMISS (Kriterion-Thistle), March.—A farce comedy of fair qualifications. Lured from home by her favorite cow, the young woman falls into the hands of a despised suitor, namely "Dirty Dan." Her father and her accepted lover following in an antiquated automobile to rescue the girl, are good for a considerable amount of comedy.

Independent Specials

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE, NO. 8 (Pathe-Hearst), Feb. 15.—"The Hidden Voice" in Episode 8 proves to be a vocaphone. This number is interesting, although not quite as thrilling as its predecessor. Elaine again gets into the grasp of the "Clutching Hand" and through the use of the vocaphone is again freed, her assailant leaving hurriedly under the impression that her rescuer is in the same room and about to jump on him.

THE WESTERN BORDER (Kriterion-Monty), Feb. 15-20.—Rather an unusual western subject with Mona Darkfeather in the lead. It is the story of an Indian elopement, which has been told in two reels. A drug fiend comes on the scene, attempts to confiscate the gold belonging to the Indian, and which is in the custody of a Chinaman, and for his pains, and incidentally for the accidental killing of the child of the Chinaman, is tied to a bed and presumedly blown to pieces with a keg of gunpowder. No particular merit can be said to attach to the production as a whole.

THE BOUNDARY LINE (Reliance), Feb. 20.—A two-reel production based on a legend of an Indian tribal feud. The picture has been set in an interesting environment, and the story is one that might have been made much of, but, unfortunately, the picture does not always leave a favorable impresion from an artistic point of view, regardless of the fact that it contains scenes which have merit. The opening of the picture where a panoramic view of the surrounding country is given, showing the Indian camps, is interesting.

THE LOST LORD LOVELL (Majestic), Feb. 21.—This is a laughable comedy founded on a story by W. Carey Wonderly. The production is in two reels, and in it Dorothy Gish plays the part of a slavey. In marrying the butler next door she finds herself suddenly transported from humble callings in a large boarding house to the dignified position of the wife of an English peer; for it happens that the butler next door is none other than the "lost Lord Lovell" and the heir to a large English estate. There are some excellent situations in the picture, and the production can on the whole be classed as a really good comedy. In the story the posing of another man as Lord Lovell is taken advantage of for a good part of the comedy.

THE DECISION (American), Feb. 22.—The story which has been used as the basis of this two-reeler is rather a slender one; and the saving grace of the pictures is that it has been handled by a cast of competent players. It is a comedy-drama treating of how a trifling circumstance turned the tide of events, and won for an heiress a reversal of the original decision regarding the disbursal of her father's estate. Winnifred Greenwood, John Steppling, Ed. Coxen, George Field, Josephine Ditt and William Bertram are the players.

THE MISSING MILLIONS (Thanhouser), Feb. 22.—Episode No. 14 of the "Twenty Million Dollar Mystery." Storm is first shown trying to locate the Zudora gold mine in Montana. Mme. Du Val invites a number of guests to a reception, at which she assumes the name of Zudora. The reception scenes are very attractive, as are also the snow storm scenes somewhat earlier. The snow pictures were exceptional. The action is somewhat confused, but interesting nevertheless. The instalment closes with a raid on the reception. This is the best number of this series shown for some time.

THE TORMENTORS (Reliance), Feb. 24.—Instalment No. 7 of the "Runaway June" series. The closing scenes in this instalment find all of the principals enroute to Bermuda, which they will no doubt reach safely in spite of the accident to the taxi just before boarding the yacht. The earlier action of the number deals with Ned's further efforts to locate the girl-bride, calling her parents and the Bletherings to his assistance. Some understanding is also obtained of the financial affairs of a henpecked husband and his wife. This makes June begin to wonder if she should have let the money question come between herself and Ned.

THE AVENGING DENTIST (L-Ko), Feb. 28.—A two-reel eccentric comedy number, featuring Billy Ritchie, Louise Orth and Henry Bergman. The action in the first reel is very conventional and the plot as a whole is slight. This might have been condensed into one reel. The main situations occur in a dentist's office and are of a familiar type. This makes a fairly humorous offering.

AMBROSE'S SOUR GRAPES (Keystone), March 1.—A two-reel nonsense number, introducing Ambrose, a polished city chap, Mr. Droppington and an interesting pair of twin sisters. One of the latter is married; the other spurns Ambrose for the city chap. There are a number of characteristic complications, some shooting and some rather breezy scenes in the hotel. This is handled acceptably, but the finish is not as strong as usual. The chief fun of this number is in the characterizations and small business.

THE SMOULDERING FIRES (Victor), March 1.—A two-reel western number, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan in a part of characteristic appeal. He plays a homeless boy who protects a cabaret girl from insult and eventually wins her love. Some of the settings are tawdry, particularly the home of the mother and girl which was unnecessarily ill-kept. The characterization of Mr. Kerrigan is the strong feature of the production and maintains a steady interest. In spite of the obvious nature of the plot this makes a fairly strong offering.

THEIR HOUR (Gold Seal), March 2.—This two-reel subject, written by Bess Meredyth, probes beneath the surface of things and is excellently handled. The wife and married man meet, while traveling away from their own mates, each being unhappily wed. The meeting at the train and subsequent acquaintance was delicately and convincingly shown by Cleo Madison and Wilfred Lucas in the leading parts. Idyllic scenes of a rural type are shown and the love grows between the two. They agree to run away and marry when thought of their children restrains them. This is a fragment of real life, touched with a certain pathos. Thoughtful observers will like it very much. The clear photography helps also.

THE OATH OF SMOKY JOE (Eclair), March 3.—A two-reel western number with Norbert Myers, Edna Payne and H. Stanley in the cast. The characterizations are good and the story well-constructed. The meeting of Joe and the bandit was well pictured and Joe's determination to kill his pal for running away to get married was convincingly shown. The plot itself is better than the average story of the western type. It makes on the whole quite a pleasing yarn.

THE RECOIL (Big U), March 4.—A two-reel prize fight and gambling story, written by Calder Johnstone. Ray Gallagher, as the hero, fights a four round glove contest with Kid Kennedy. He is fined and takes a job in a saloon, as he is out of work. He meets the girl reporter, portrayed by Edna Maison. The district attorney is about to prosecute Ray, but the reporter catches his daughter playing bridge at a society function. She has the girl arrested and all appear before the district attorney. The reporter insists that if prize fighting should be prosecuted, gambling should also. The story is not exceptional in any way, but raises an interesting point and has numerous entertaining features.

IN THE WARDEN'S GARDEN (Domino), March 4.—A conventional two-reel crook story in which a stool pigeon lures a reformed thief named Jim back into criminal ways. The latter needs money for his sick wife and straving child. The stool pigeon tips off the proposed burglary and Jim is sent to the penitentiary. Later the stool pigeon commits murder and is also sent up. Jim escapes and discovers in the warden's yard his own daughter, she having been adopted by the warden's wife after his own wife had died. The child saves Jim from the pursuers and he then escapes, promising to come back for her. This is well pictured but has no very strong motive behind it and is not very new.

ON THE HIGH SEAS (Kaybee), March 5.—A tense two-reel story, with Richard Stanton and Leona Hutton as a pair of crooks. The husband has dragged the reluctant wife into his line of work. The action occurs on an ocean steamer. He forces his wife to play a guitar while he saws his way down into the hold and taps the vault, in which a shipment of gold has been stored. He then makes a diabolical plan to blow up the vessel and escape in the life boat, but the wife throws the bomb overboard. The explosion and subsequent excitement is realistic in the extreme. She is then reunited with the husband and child she had abandoned. A strongly sensational offering.

THE LOST LEDGE (Bison), March 6.—This two-reel number opens with the igniting of an oil well, in which the hero loses all his invested capital. The scenes make a picturesque opening for this characteristic number. Wm. Clifford, Marie Wolcamp and Sherman Bainbridge are in the cast. The girl's father induces the hero to go to Mexico and endeavor to locate a ledge of gold, dating back to Aztec times. There is plotting and conniving by his rival and the ledge is located during an explosion in the mine. The photography is somewhat uneven, but the story is a good one of its kind, being full of action and adventure.

FATE'S VENGEANCE (Kriterion-Paragon), March.—A two-reel production by Donald MacDonald, with Dorothy Davenport, Benjamin Horning, Lee Hill and Rupert Julian in the cast. The picture is a fairly acceptable one. The story upon which it is based is a good one in a measure. It is that of a young man forging his father's name in the payment of a gambling debt. In the course of events he falls in with the daughter of one of his father's misused tenants, who at her mother's death has taken up with a body of anarchists. This young woman is appointed to go to the old man with intention to kill if he refuses to give over money enough to repay the debt owed him by his son, whom he has refused admittance to his home until he replaced the stolen money. In the scuffle that follows the outcast son is shot. It is not certain that the story has been given a satisfactory solution.

THE STAGE OF LIFE (Kriterion-Monty), March.—In this two-reel production the impression received by the reviewer is that the subject has been too heavy a one to handle. There are many points that the critic could single out for adverse criticism. It might please many audiences, and there is nothing objectionable about the film whatsoever. Its main fault lies in the fact that a big subject has been attempted and has not been "put over" with sufficient force.

"When the Mountains Call"

THIS picture is somewhat obscured by the title, for in reality it is about the finest travel scenic we have.

Issued by the Katherine E. Carter, Inc., of New York, it presents a vacation adventure by Robert C. Bruce and is a thrilling story of how a company of hardy mountaineers passed a summer vacation amid the eternal snows of Mount Adams, Washington.

Accompanied by a camera man and four other experienced climbers, Mr. R. C. Bruce left Portland, Oregon, early in July for the Columbia River Gorge, taking views of the towering basalt columns, Multnomah and Horsetail Falls, the Cascades and Rapids, and other beautiful scenes of this region where nature is so lavish with her charms.

It should be noted that the Multnomah Falls are: Upper Falls, 533 feet, and Lower Falls, 177 feet, or three times the height of those at Niagara. Nature has indeed been prodigal in the distribution of her charms in this neighborhood.

The Cascade Locks are extremely interesting. Twenty-three years' time and four million dollars were spent in building these locks which lift the river boats twenty-two feet to avoid the Cascade Rapids.

Scene from "When the Mountains Call."

For scenery of mountains and mountain orchards this portion of the film is of unsurpassing beauty. Mount Hood as seen from the Washington side of the Columbia River now looms in its majestic beauty at an elevation of 11,225 feet above the town of Hood River, seen in the foreground.

Now "hitting the trail" for Mount Adams from White Salmon, Washington, very interesting side trips were made especially to film the beautiful yet dangerous glaciers and canyons of this majestic peak; often it looks as if the climbers and camera man would be hurled into eternity; but their daring and nerve carry them safely through, and we are much indebted to them for the results of their labors.

The views of the mountain heights are both beautiful and thrilling; sheep ranges, with thousands of sheep feeding at a height of 6,000 feet, acres of squaw grass or mountain lily are among the sights; as for the weather at this July season, it is best expressed as follows:

"First it Rained, then it Blew,
And then it Friz, and then it Snew,
Then it Fogged, and then it Thew,
And very shortly after then
It Blew and Friz and Snew again."

Klickitat Glacier as seen from Wonder Ridge.—This amphitheater or cirque is one of the most characteristic in America. The glacier is one mile wide, two miles long, deeply cut by many crevasses, and moves about 225 feet per year.

Scene from "When the Mountains Call."

The South Peak of Mt. Adams.—The camera is now at an elevation of 12,000 feet. Mount St. Helens, 10,000 feet high, can be seen forty miles away. July 16 found the company registering at the Mazama box on the summit at an elevation of 12,307 feet.

The return trip, though necessarily rapid, is full of interest.

This film is full of educational interest and beauty, not an ordinary scenic of a few hundred feet, but a most interesting adventure told in about 3,000 feet of film, with a most sustained and animated interest from beginning to end. It richly deserves to be classed as about the most superior production of its kind and of the highest educational value, and becomes one of the best possible additions to the educational series of moving pictures.

"SLIPPERY SLIM" JOINS BLACKFEET.

Harry Todd, as "Mustang Pete" in the Essanay comedy, "Slippery Slim's Wedding Day," tries to put one over on his rival "Slim" but gets the worst of it. He paints Slim's feet black while he is asleep, calls a doctor who declares he has the black plague and nails him into his home. In the meantime "Sophie" is anxiously waiting at the church. Slim finally escapes and gets to the church, where he is kicked out. He takes refuge in the river, finds that the black washes off and all ends well.

KLEINE'S ITALIAN STUDIO COMPLETE.

Word has been received at the Kleine offices of the completion of the big new studio at Grugliasco, Italy. The glass studios, dark rooms and mechanical apparatus of various kinds are all of the latest and most improved types. Grugliasco, Italy, lies but a few miles from Turin in the foothills of the Alps. Production will not be commenced until conditions abroad are normal.

HARRY WOODRUFF WITH THE MUTUAL.

It is announced that Harry Woodruff, famous for his appearances in "Brown of Harvard" and "When We Were Twenty-One," will shortly begin rehearsing at the Hollywood studios in a four reel feature production destined for release in the Mutual program.

NEW JOKER COMPANY.

A new Joker company has been formed with Ernest Shields, Eddie Boland and Bertha Burnham as the leading players. Their director will be Archer McMackin.

Edwin Thanhouser is Back

Pioneer Film Manufacturer Now in Full Charge of the Studio of the Company Bearing His Name.

By George Blaisdell.

EVER since the return to this country last fall of Edwin Thanhouser there have been reports that he was again to become interested in the making of motion pictures. To those who in the old days—and old days in the film business are not so many years remote—knew Mr. Thanhouser or knew his work it seemed the logical, the psychological thing that he should again be associated with the brand that bears his name, with the company that nearly seven years ago he founded; it seemed inconceivable that his unusual picture-making talent should be devoted to the production of pictures placed on the market in competition with the film to which for over four years he gave the best he had. That he had much to give will be ungrudgingly conceded by those who were then his keenest competitors.

It was in November, 1912, that Edwin Thanhouser took leave of the men and women who since 1908 had been associated with him in the making of Thanhouser films. He had disposed of his interests six months before his departure, but had remained to aid his successors in getting the hang of things. When from his shoulders were removed the responsibilities that for so long had been heavy and insistent he determined to take a good rest. With Mrs. Thanhouser and their two children he went abroad. His vacation came to an abrupt end with the breaking out of the European war. Like most Americans, he had exciting experiences getting away from the Continent, but arrived safely in New York late in August.

On Monday, February 22, as general manager of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, Mr. Thanhouser was back at his old desk in the New Rochelle studio. When two days later a World man called on him he very suddenly discovered that Mr. Thanhouser is not a talkative man. To a somewhat thinly veiled reference to this outstanding fact the founder of the institution of which New Rochelle is so proud said that he much preferred to be judged by results than to be estimated by promises. He readily admitted, however, that he was full of ambition and that he was anxious to make good films. He said it would take some little while for him to find himself.

"Since your retirement from the film business have you not experienced a desire to get back into it—in other words, have you not found that there is a lure in picturemaking?" the World man asked of Mr. Thanhouser.

"Yes, that is true," he said. "Even when I was in Europe I visited the different studios for the purpose of learning what I could of the way things are done on the other side of the water. Of course, I find conditions in the film market very much changed in the last two years. Different methods are noticeable. For instance, there is the advent of the feature film and there is the engagement of the best talent—and, what is perhaps even more notable, the availability of the best talent. These are some of the factors that make the business of producing pictures to-day quite another matter.

"As to the relative merits of European and American productions I will say that when I left the studio I was firmly convinced that the European pictures were better than the American. Since my return to the United States my opinion has altered. I think the American producers have made wonderful strides and that their work is now on a par with the best that comes from Europe. The feature film proposition is and probably always will be a vexed question. A long film does not necessarily constitute it a feature—that is, where a subject has nothing to recommend it but its length."

It was just here the writer recalled the fact that Mr. Thanhouser was the first manufacturer, so far as his knowledge extended, to make a plea for the "natural length story," to employ a term which he believed Mr. Thanhouser had coined. "Yes," said the returned traveler, "I always have advocated the natural length film. I believe I was the first one to produce a fifteen-hundred-foot subject. My reason was that the particular story naturally ran just that distance. It was too good to cut to a thousand feet and I didn't think it good enough to extend to two thousand feet. So that it follows if a subject runs naturally to four thousand feet it will be a good story and a good feature, too. It is the story that does not naturally run to that length that is tiresome and consequently hurts the feature as a market asset. I don't think it will be disputed that the longer the film the better the story must be—the interest must be cumulative.

"Of course, the revival of old plays has helped the feature film business, but just as soon as these are exhausted producers will have to look for original manuscripts or adaptations. Personally I do not think the possibilities for adaptations of novels and poems and classical literature has been touched—that is, as compared with the approximately limited field of plays. It is patent to every one that plays are not being produced on the stage as fast as they are being adapted for the screen. There is a great deal in literature, what is described as classical and that which is not so termed, that has not yet been used for the screen. It may be remembered that the Thanhouser company made many adaptations when I was in charge here, and I think these were responsible for some of the kind things that were said about our pictures.

"We were the first to put on Ibsen and make the works of that author commercially acceptable. We were among the first of the independents to put on Shakespearean plays. It is my intention to make more adaptations, because as I said the field practically is inexhaustible."

Asked if his re-entrance into the affairs of the Thanhouser company portended any change in policy, the new general manager said it would not. "We will make the regular program as strong as possible," he added. "You may be sure that the film that bears my name will be as good as anything I can do will make it. Our output now is six and a quarter reels a week, of which all but two go into the regular program. We plan soon to increase the amount. In spite of the fact that our facilities here are capable of material expansion over present requirements, it is our intention soon to erect an additional studio on adjacent property. We may begin construction during the summer."

It is pleasant to record the return to the manufacturing fold of this veteran of the film industry and of the theatrical world as well. We may be sure he will make his presence felt, and for the good of pictures as a whole.

Indorses War Pictures

Edwin Emerson, Returned War Correspondent, Attests the Authenticity of Picture Playhouse European Views.

SINCE the outbreak of hostilities in Europe it has been the ambition of practically every feature film exploiter to secure a series of pictures which could be established as authentic and yet would present some of the actual field engagements which the public are anxious to see. There have been war pictures galore offered—and that exhibitors throughout the country are quick to book them is evidence that they recognize the deep interest which exists in views of this class. Such disappointments as have resulted have come from the ultimate conviction of many who have seen some of these pictures that they were not what they purported to be. The authenticity of the picures has always been the main question.

In releasing the eight reels of war pictures which they recently received from their European representatives, the Picture Playhouse Film Company, in the World Tower Building, New York City, count themselves particularly fortunate in having been able to secure the indorsement of a number of people who are in a position to pass authoritatively upon the genuineness of the pictures. These indorsements, presented in conjunction with the pictures themselves, which are unusually convincing, bid fair to make the Picture Playhouse series the biggest money-winner in this line which has yet found its way to the American market. Edwin Emerson, war correspondent recently returned from the campaign in Belgium, Alsace-Lorraine, Northern France, Flanders and Poland, where he enjoyed unusual privileges by reason of his association with the German general staff, wrote a strong letter on the subject of the authenticity of the pictures after his personal interest in the subject matter presented had led him to view the series here in New York. "Your moving pictures of fighting and of other war scenes at the front and elsewhere," he wrote, "I recognized at once as genuine war scenes." And concluding his letter he expressed the following opinion: "Indeed, your great war film shows more interesting and thrilling scenes in the course of half an hour than the luckiest and most forward war correspondent could hope to see in the course of half a year."

RICHARD CARLE TO BE SEEN IN "THE DANCING BEETLE."

The World Comedy Stars announce that their first release will be Richard Carle in the Mark Swan comedy, "The Dancing Beetle," on March 8. This will be Mr. Carle's introduction to the camera, and those who have followed his career in the realm of musical comedy are aware that he is a fun-maker of the highest type. At present he is appearing as a co-star with Marie Cahill in "Ninety in the Shade," at the Knickerbocker theater, New York City.

Kalem's Ham Comedies.

Series of Laugh-Provoking Pictures Featuring Lloyd Hamilton and Bud Duncan.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN LLOYD V. HAMILTON and Bud Duncan the Kalem Company has a slapstick team of which more will be heard in coming weeks. On the strength of a number of productions already approved by exhibitors, they have been awarded a regular position on the program and a brand name—simple, direct and suitable, so that when one sees a Ham Comedy announced he may know about what to expect. Beginning with "Ham at the Garbage Gentleman's Ball," to be released on March 16, there will be a Ham Comedy every Tuesday for some time to come. Hamilton, who is six feet tall and large in proportion and Duncan, who must stand on tiptoes to look over his partner's shoulder, will be weekly visitors.

Scene from "Ham in the Harem" (Kalem).

Physically they are a sort of Mutt and Jeff combination; in method and make-up they are careful not to copy any slapstick favorites of the moment. Ham is the leader; Bud plays up to him, looks up to him and receives rather more than his shares of the kicks. Ham is fluent in the use of the flapping toes of his long boots, Bud turns somersets, dives through a window, or rolls down a flight of stairs with ludicrous nonchalance. When he recovers, Ham glares at him and the fierceness of his expression is accentuated by a black and abundant mustache. The clothes of both are grotesque misfits.

Judging from three productions, "Ham at the Garbage Gentleman's Ball," "A Melodious Mixup," released February 19, and "Ham in the Harem," to be released March 30, the two comedians, under the direction of Chance E. Ward, have a good understanding of low comedy values and an effective method of scoring langhs. Of the three films, "Ham in the Harem," from a scenario by Hamilton Smith, is the best. The elaborate settings for the Sultan's palace would attract attention even in a serious picture, and they add appreciably to the illusion of the predicament in which Ham and Bud find themselves. Capping a long series of fantastic happenings, the intruders are brought before the Sultan and allowed ten minutes in which to make him laugh, otherwise they will be beheaded. Various means failing, Ham introduces a mock poker game (capitally played) and the Sultan is interested, entertained and finally drawn into a real game. He loses everything, even his beloved Fatima; but in the end his guests lose her, too, and inconsolably grieved they drown themselves in a tank.

Very different, but unquestionably well done, after the manner of knockabout farce, is "Ham at the Garbage Gentleman's Ball." Here, as in the film just mentioned, there is more of a consecutive plot than one generally finds in pictures of the kind and the situations profit in consequence. When a man is dropped off a roof—as is Ham in this instance—one is more concerned about the fall if it is the outcome of some sin of omission or commission. The author did well in preparing for the incidents in this picture and the director put a lot of snap into the playing of scenes, such as those showing the dancers at the ball where Ham and Bud are unwelcome and only temporary guests.

"A Melodious Mixup" has less of a story and depends more upon the antics of Hamilton in the role of a wild-eyed, free-armed orchestra leader. Supplementing the work of the comedians are the attractions of a pretty prima donna and a graceful chorus dancing to the discords of the musicians. Ham and Bud are in love with the singer, but so are many other men, including (worse luck) her husband. For every broken heart there is a broken head to correspond. These comedies are not designed for over delicate sensibilities, which, of course, is an argument for, rather than against their popularity.

Franklyn Gale.

THE lure of the photoplay screen has attracted another player of distinction from the ranks of the so-called legitimate in the person of Franklyn Gale, known from Coast to Coast and an idol in many of the important cities of the United States.

Franklyn Gale.

Miss Gale's early experience on the stage was in stock and within recent years she has appeared as leading woman with Mortimer Snow in Troy, New York, where she played for thirty weeks; as leading woman with the exceptionally strong company which played all the big Broadway successes at the West End theater in New York City and as leading woman with the stock company at the Grand Opera House in San Francisco where productions of unusual magnitude were the rule.

Two seasons ago, Miss Gale toured to Pacific Coast in "The Third Degree," winning new honors in the role originally played by Helen Ware. This trip, by the way, was the fifth which Miss Gale had made across the country with important traveling organizations. After the "Third Degree" engagement Miss Gale played the Orpheum Circuit and other important vaudeville time with a dramatic sketch which she herself had written.

In her brief career in the picture business, Miss Gale has written a number of scenarios for the Biograph company, Gaumont, and others—and in some of the screen plays which she created, has played important roles. Her permanent association with one of the big picture producing companies is likely to result from offers which she is at present considering.

BURN OIL WELLS FOR BOSWORTH PICTURE.

In staging the forthcoming Bosworth release, "Sunshine Molly," the producers have spared no time or expense to give the picture the desired realism. The subject is a drama concerning the history of the discovery of oil in California, the kernel of some of the greatest tragedies and comedies of real life ever enacted.

Some of the scenes were taken at Taft, the heart of the oil country, where for hundreds of miles against the landscape rise the grim skeletons of the oil derricks. Other scenes were laid at the La Brea oil fields, near Hollywood, and many interiors, showing the home life of the prospectors before and after the strike. The plot calls for an explosion followed by a big fire. After considerable trouble and persuasion the producers secured the permission of the oil people to set fire to three of the great oil wells and several big scenes of unusual spectacular qualities were successfully filmed.

"Sunshine Molly," outside of its spectacular value is a thrilling dramatic subject that will hold an audience on edge to the very end. This is not only due to the fact that the story itself is of unusual merit, but because of the splendid cast that has been selected to portray the various characters, most important of which are Lois Weber, Phillips Smalley, Herbert Standing, Vera Lewis, Roberta Hickman, Frank Elliott and Adele Farrington.

"David Harum"

William H. Crane Scores Heavily in His Splendid Portrayal of the Country Banker and Horse Doctor (Famous Players).

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IF you would see a fine, sweet American play don't miss William H. Crane's interpretation of the name role in "David Harum." The Famous Players Film Company has produced in five reels an adaptation of the famous story by Edward Noyes Wescott. It is well done. There is a good cast, and it gives excellent support to the star. Of course, it is always David Harum upon whom the interest centers—not alone because he is the hinge upon which the story turns, but by reason of his individual work. His portrayal of the benevolent country banker who found relaxation in "hoss" trading is one that will appeal in rural communities even more than it will in the cities—and that is saying much. Some comedy there is to be sure—of the refined, delicate sort—but there is a leavening of pathos, too.

Scene from "David Harum" (Famous Players).

Mr. Crane is true to the life. He seems to be the man David, not the character. It was a tribute to his work that as the picture faded on the screen Tuesday afternoon the great audience at the Strand broke into hearty handclapping, a rare occurrence. As Aunt Polly, the sister of David, Kate Meeks is wholesome, lovable. Harold Lockwood gives a good performance as John Lenox, the clerk of David, and May Allison is a charming Mary Blake, the young woman who prefers to make her own living as a country school teacher rather than to lean on a wealthy sister. Hal Clarendon does well in a part none too easy properly to portray—that of Chet Timson, the distributor of counterfeit so summarily "fired" by David.

As a story "David Harum" develops slowly, but none the less surely. In the beginning we are interested more in the revelation of the outstanding characteristics of David. We note that he is interested in horses—and that he is quick to get back at Deacon Perkins when that shrewd person has "put one over" on him. There is hearty laughter as the deacon fumes at the big gray, guaranteed to "stand without hitchin'," as it rears and plunges, but makes no progress. There is another delicate bit as David, arrayed in a dress suit, the trousers of which give a trace of a suggestion of Charles Chaplin, leaves his home and parades down Main street and nods to his amazed neighbors. There is forcible drama as David throws out the obstreperous customer and Lenox takes a sure grip on the crooked Timson.

There is a fine bit of mingled humor and pathos when Lenox is shown into a room, Aunt Polly's "spare room," and there finds his few belongings which Aunt Polly has quietly transferred from the bare room in the hotel. There is a situation which will make silent a great house as David, who has taken over the mortgage held by the deacon on the widow's home, explains to the woman who fears eviction how her husband many years before had given him ten cents, his only capital when he ran away from home. He gives her the interest in the shape of the mortgage, which he destroys. The principal he redeposits in his capacious pocketbook.

We have not space to indicate the many worthy incidents in "David Harum," of the delightful bits we note when David visits the city; of the mob in Homeville as it clamors for revenge when it becomes known that some one has been sprinkling counterfeit in the town, or of the scenes of the circus, shown in retrospect as David tells of his boyhood. The production is one to be described as a whole rather than in detail, and it is one that is mighty good to see. It is a worthy record of the art of a great American player.

"The Fairy and the Waif"

Mary Miles Minter Scores in First Gustave Frohman Production Released by the World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

JUST a little twelve-year-old girl is Mary Miles Minter, but without her there might be quite a different story to tell about "The Fairy and the Waif," the first production of the Frohman Amusement Company to be released, in five parts, by the World Film Corporation on March first. Miss Minter is sweet and unaffected. She is as delicate as a spirit from fairyland. It is refreshing merely to watch her and she can act without appearing pert, or self-conscious, or mechanical. Gustave Frohman's diminutive leading lady is a great success.

Because of Miss Minter, and to a lesser degree because of the other youngsters in the cast—the lad playing the waif and Willie Archer, who suggests one of Dickens's boys—the picture should be favorably received, especially by the women and children in an audience. The production at its best carries the charm of childhood, and perhaps that is enough to compensate for shortcomings that would be fatal in a picture of a less ingenious character. The plot, one might surmise, is the work of a scenario writer unaccustomed to building up suspense and climaxes in a five-reel picture.

The father of the little girl who wants to be a fairy, goes to the European war and is reported killed. Friends, in whose charge Viola is left, spend her money, make her a household drudge and finally she runs away to play the part of a fairy on the stage. Once more she is ill treated, again she runs away, and on Christmas Eve finds the shivering, ragged waif tucking himself into an empty barrel for the night. Together they are rescued, and all is well when Viola's father returns.

Some of the scenes, a party of children at a table and a rehearsal of the ballet in the theatre, for example, are very pretty, whereas a number of others are harmed by inadequate settings. The subtitles might be revised to advantage, for some of the speaking titles are either too long, weakly worded, or unnecessary.

CASTS OF FOUR FORTHCOMING LASKY PRODUCTIONS.

Samuel Goldfish, speaking for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., announces the casts for four of the productions to be released in the near future: "The Governor's Lady," presented by Lasky and Belasco with Edith Wynne Mathison as the star; the picturization of Eleanor M. Ingram's "The Unafraid," with Rita Jolivet as the star, and House Peters featured at the head of the supporting company; "The Captive," founded on a play by Cecil B. De Mille and Jeanie MacPherson, in which Blanche Sweet is to make her second Lasky appearance, with Mr. Peters again playing the leading male role; and the picturization of "Snobs," in which Victor Moore makes his screen debut.

The leading players in the company supporting Miss Mathison in "The Governor's Lady" are James Neil, Theodore Roberts, Tom Forman and May Allison. The artists appearing in "The Unafraid," in addition to Miss Jolivet and Mr. Peters, are Page Peters, Billy Elmer, Lawrence Peyton, Theodore Roberts, Al Ernest Garcia, Marjorie Daw, Raymond Hatton and Gertrude Kellar.

"The Captive," announcement of which is now made for the first time, tells a story transpiring during the recent Balkan war, the plot of which develops through the love of a Turkish noble (played by House Peters), for a Montenegrin peasant woman, interpreted by Miss Sweet. The Turkish noble is made a prisoner of war and assigned to the peasant girl to take the place of her brother, slain in battle. At first she makes him do the most menial tasks, but their joint sufferings finally lead to the beginning of a most extraordinary romance. Other leading roles in the photo-drama are played by Gerald Ward, Page Peters, Theodore Roberts, Jeanie MacPherson and Billy Elmer.

The picture version of "Snobs," with Victor Moore in the stellar character, is well under way. The main supporting artists are Anita King, Constance Johnson and Ernest Joy.

Production Versus Manufacture.

Samuel Goldfish Returns From West With Well Defined Impressions of Exhibiting Conditions—Comparative Importance of Feature Producer and Distributor.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, who returned last Monday from an extended transcontinental tour and visit to the studios of the Lasky Feature Play Company in Hollywood, California, declares that he has been greatly impressed by the manner in which the moving picture industry is evidently approaching legitimate theatrical conditions.

"Elaborate feature productions, based either on successful plays or established works of fiction, are positively the order of the day from New York to the Pacific," said Mr. Goldfish when seen at his office. "The old-time authorities who predicted that the feature business would turn out to be only a fad must feel strangely now if they are correctly informed.

"Throughout my trip I was deeply impressed by the rapidity with which the moving picture business is apparently become more and more similar to the conditions of 'legitimate' theatrical management. After seeing Griffith's 'The Birth of a Nation,' which is founded on 'The Clansman,' I was forever convinced of one thing—that it is no longer the length, but the value of the picture which counts. The time has forever gone when people will want to see a picture just because it moves and because it is a certain number of thousand feet in length. The wise producer is the man who makes the picture precisely the length that the nature and force of the subject demand, just as the wise playwright does not gauge himself by the number of words in his comedy or drama. This means that the picture industry is getting down to the elements of 'show business,' and that the ultimate aim must be to provide for audiences those things which are truly of most absorbing interest.

"During my trip I tried to analyze local exhibiting conditions in many cities and found them amazingly uniform. It is evident that the time has come, or is fast coming, when the moving picture 'manufacturer,' who turns out so many reels per week or so many brands, must disappear from the map, and only the few genuine moving picture producers will be left. To 'manufacture' is one thing; to 'produce' in the true sense of actually creating something worth while, which survives not because of any system, but because the public absolutely wants it, is entirely a different matter. This is, of course, the 'show business' all over again, with the main issues at stake not money so much as organization and Art.

"Much of the needless loss of money in the moving picture industry has been caused by the various supposedly infallible systems for disposing of the studio's output. When the feature business first came into existence the would-be manufacturer, wishing to interest capital, assured the men with money to invest that the product could readily be disposed of at high prices on the States' rights system. That theory has now died a natural death. More recently the program idea has replaced the States' rights idea, and hundreds of unsuspecting investors have been induced to furnish capital for the making of mediocre subjects on the assurance that wonderful returns could positively be obtained through this or that program. Though the program plan is still comparatively young, many of the investors who put up their money through their belief in that theory have learned the sad lesson that the mere making of photographic images on one side of a celluloid film is not necessarily to coin thousands of good, real dollars. The only program which can succeed is one which supplies the very best productions. It is the producer who makes the success of the program, because his offerings bring money to the box offices of the theaters, and not the program which sustains the producer.

"An article recently published in the Saturday Evening Post, the authorship of which is ascribed to a well known legitimate theatrical manager, is just the sort of article which has done much to mislead the public and bring into the business people who should never have involved themselves at all. This article dwelt upon the fabulous salaries supposed to be paid to moving picture artists and directors and tells how a legitimate producer has received $150,000 from the picture versions of his plays. One might almost suspect such an article of being written with the intention of encouraging the misguided public to invest even more deeply. It is the shame of this business that the stock market is loaded down with hundreds of thousands of shares in various inflated alleged motion picture concerns, at least a portion of which are absolutely unworthy of any serious consideration.

"There are only two essentials in a moving picture—the popular value and the artistic merit. The program system itself has proved that if a picture is truly great it will not be long unknown to a public which craves fine photodramas; if it is not good, there is no power on earth which can make it anything else than what it is. Therefore, as I have already said, the day of the real producer is dawning, for only he can face the competition of an art which is developing by leaps and bounds; only he can establish a program and triumph by genuine superiority while the mere mechanics of the business fall by the wayside.

"Considering all these things, it is evident that the theatrical experience of Mr. Jesse Lasky has been of inestimable advantage to our entire organization. He had the right experience, and he has known just how to use it. In the same manner, their long familiarity with theatrical producing has been infinitely valuable to Mr. Cecil B. De Mille and Mr. Wm. C. De Mille, in their respective capacities as producer and photodramatist.

"Our whole energy is now being bent, as ever, not on the manufacturing, but the producing of photodramas which shall positively set new standards and lead in the march of advancement."

ZUKOR RETURNS FROM LOS ANGELES.

Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players Film Co., returned the early part of last week from Los Angeles, where he went about a month ago to visit the western studios of the Famous Players.

In California Mr. Zukor made many important plans for the forthcoming activities of the Famous Players' Western organization, from which a series of important Mary Pickford productions are soon expected.

It is said that Mr. Zukor also stopped in many of the principal cities of this country en route to and from Los Angeles, where he conferred with the managements of important local theaters regarding the booking of the Famous Players' photo-spectacle, "The Eternal City," and other important features of this nature to follow, that will be booked through the Select Film Booking Agency, organized before Mr. Zukor's departure for the West.

Mr. Zukor reports the fact that the organization of the Select Film Booking Agency has met with nation-wide endorsement by all the enterprising exhibitors who realize the conditions that prompted the inauguration of this special agency must be confronted by some definite course such as the Select film plan is purposed to pursue.

ROLAND BLAISDELL WITH BUFFALO KRITERION OFFICE.

Roland Blaisdell, who has been associated with the Kriterion home office since the inception of that company, was appointed associate manager of the Empire Kriterion Corporation of Buffalo. Mr. Blaisdell has had a wide experience in the film business. He was formerly sales manager of the Lumiere Company and also private secretary to David Horsley. In his new field it is expected that he will enjoy splendid success. His wide knowledge of the business will serve him well. Mr. Blaisdell is a man of initiative, who, during the time he has been in the film game, has been creative in his work. His natural ambition has brought him forth prominently on many occasions and it is felt that success is going to attend him in this new venture.

"EDISON NIGHTS" AT WASHINGTON.

Edison Director Nowland has returned from a week at Washington, where he has been filming a play to be produced in conjunction with the Government civil service. He succeeded in getting a number of shy "big guns" in the Washington Government, and successfully filmed the interior of the Congressional library. The Edison players, which included Gladys Hulette, Mrs. Wallace Erskine and Pat O'Malley, were given an ovation at two Washington theaters, the Liberty and the Crandall, which held an "Edison Night" in their honor.

NEW PLAYERS IN ALHAMBRA PICTURE.

Edward Peil, Betty Harte, William Ryno and Lottie Case have been added to the roll of Alhambra Film Manufacturing Company, who are producing two-reel dramas for the Kriterion Service. Lloyd B. Carleton, who recently left for the Coast, is directing the dramas for the Alhambra brand, releasing through Kriterion.

"Heart of Flame."

A Pathetic Tragedy in Two Parts by the American, Carefully Directed by Thomas Ricketts.

Reviewed by J. S. McQuade.

THE poetic title given this photodrama is peculiarly appropriate. "Heart of Flame" catches one with a grip at the outset, and creates expectation that is not disappointed. Director Ricketts is always happy in visualizing stories of this type, and this production has delicate touches here and there that reflect a nice discernment of art. The love scenes in the mountains are idyllic, with their golden glow of sunrise and limpid pools guarded by sentinels of massive rock. The little mountain inn is just what one might expect in such a region—picturesque both in its oddity and surroundings. The interior of a theater, built in the studio, in which the young musical genius gains fame in a night, also merits special mention because of the pains taken in its construction.

Miss Vivian Rich and David Lythgoe appear in leading parts of Zira, a mountain girl, and Gordon Keith, a young and gifted violinist. Miss Rich is really charming in her characterization of this "daughter of the mountain winds." Her dressing of the part is very happy; for her attire is in harmony with the mountain wilds and the simple tastes of a child of nature. Many would have marred the character by over dressing; but Miss Rich has subdued feminine vanity by a nice respect for her art.

Mr. Lythgoe is new in moving pictures to me, but his introduction, as Gordon Keith, has been pleasurable. Keith is the ardent and gentle lover, manly and graceful. The only discordant note in the acting occurs in the dressing room, in the theater, to which he has carried Zira, who has been stabbed by the gypsy, Checo. There, when his old music teacher, Von Ezdorf, prevails on him to leave the dead body of his sweetheart and appear before the audience that has waited long for his musical recital, he takes off his cloak and throws it over the beloved form on the couch. How much more seemly would it have been had he placed it tenderly and reverently there, as if its rough touch might disturb the repose or crush the beauty of his dead divinity!

And how much more satisfying, and fitting for the occasion, would it have been had Von Ezdorf been less persistent in his endeavors to take the young man from the room of death—where all that was tender and gentle in him had been shriveled up by his eternal loss—to appear before a clamoring audience! Here the scenario strikes a brutal chord, for it places money before everything else; because no audience, after learning the facts, would have insisted on the appearance of the bereaved virtuoso. The professor is even barbarous in his words of comfort, as given in a subtitle, "The great love comes to man but once. Lift up your head, lad, and give thanks that yours has been worthy the pain and ecstasy," he exclaims in the room of death. And then the great violinist is led out to hear the plaudits of his admirers!

Jack Richardson and Harry Von Meter do fine character work in the parts of Checo and Von Ezdorf, and Miss Charlotte Burton and Miss Louise Lester impersonate Beppa and Nita creditably.

Young Gordon Keith has the technic but not the soul of a great violinist. His devoted old music teacher, Von Ezdorf, tells him that the soul of expression will surely come. An impresario hears young Keith play and gives him a contract. Then the teacher and his pupil go into the mountains for a rest. There Keith meets Zira, a beautiful mountain girl, and they love at first sight.

Soon afterwards Von Ezdorf hears his pupil playing a new composition with an inspiration never before attained. Keith tells him that the change is not due to genius but to the "Heart of Flame," as he tenderly calls Zira. The lovers are forced to part for a time, as Keith must go to the city and fulfill the terms of his contract. Zira and he pledge undying love, and this pledge gains for Keith the mortal hatred of the gypsy, Checo, who has long looked on Zira as his own.

Keith gains fame at his first appearance and is lionized among musical circles in the city. To the consternation of his teacher, Keith announces that he must go to the mountains and see Zira. Then Von Ezdorf plans to save him for art. He secretly visits Zira and gains her promise that she will tell Keith that she does not love him, but that she does love Checo. This she promises in order that Keith's career may not be ruined. Keith arrives in the mountains a few hours afterward and the girl meets him with the fatal "No." Checo, who is near, hears Zira's acknowledgement of love for him and, after Keith leaves the scene, broken-hearted, he presses his claim. Zira spurns and slightly wounds him as he attempts advances. Checo, enraged, plots the death of Keith and sets out for the city to accomplish it.

Zira hears of this and follows on his track so that she may save her lover. One day, in the strange city, she sees Keith surrounded by a crowd of admirers in front of the theatre where he plays. Almost at the same time she spies Checo trying to make his way through the crowd, with knife in hand, to the spot where Keith is standing. She rushes to intercept him, and receives a mortal wound from the infuriated gypsy.

The release date is Monday, March 1.

Fannie Ward To Star For Lasky.

THE Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces the engagement of Miss Fannie Ward, the distinguised international artiste, who, by the kind permission of Marc Klaw, has entered into a contract which calls for her to make her screen debut in the immediate future under Lasky management.

Miss Ward's most recent important success was "Madam President" in which she starred for an entire year at the Garrick theater and in which, since that time, she has been playing with most exceptional success throughout the country.

Fannie Ward.

Fannie Ward was born in St. Louis and made her first appearance on the stage at the Broadway theater, New York, in "Pippino." Among her early successes were a number of the most successful musical productions of the day both in New York and in London, where she scored an overwhelming hit at the occasion of her initial appearance at the Gaiety theater. Among the important dramatic offerings in which she has starred during the last few years are such productions as "A Marriage of Reason," "In the Bishop's Carriage," "A Fool and a Girl," "The Marriage of William Ashe," "The Three of Us" and "Madam President," already mentioned.

Miss Ward is one of the few American women who have attained genuine and unquestionable fame in England. She has won success of the greatest magnitude not only in musical productions but also in the English productions of various American successes as well as in original English dramas.

Miss Ward is famous throughout the American and European continents for her vivacity and unusual charm.

Moving picture theaters all over the country showing the feature are planning to distribute small black boxes as souvenirs at each episode of "The Black Box."

"Back of the Shadows"

Santa Barbara Two-Reel Production Which Has Something to Say on the Evils of the Opium Habit.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THE search for subjects suitable for melodramatic development in film the evil of the dope habit evolves itself into one which is possible in the matter of obtaining startling effects. And if handled properly it serves more than a merely commercial purpose, for rarely, if ever, has a picture treating of this subject failed to present it in a revolting form, thereby serving as a warning against possible temptation.

William Robert Daly has produced this picture with Fritzi Brunette, Edward Alexander and Jack Prescott playing the principal roles. The story which is partly in dream form, a fact which has been very cleverly kept from the audience until close to the finish of the picture, is a good one; and it is somewhat of a relief to find that the unpleasant and rather gruesome facts presented are in most part the conception of a dream. In the production Fritzi Brunette has ample opportunity for the display of her gifts of dramatic interpretation, portraying, as she does, three distinct periods of a woman's life.

At the opening of the story Doctor Alexander and his wife, with their child of four or five years, are living happily. One day a dope-fiend entering the house finds his way to the room of the Chinese cook, and left alone with some opium and a pipe, he falls asleep and the bed takes fire. Here a timely criticism might be offered, for the doctor and his wife, rushing to the scene, carry the man downstairs to safety before making any attempt to extinguish the flames, after which the fire is easily dampened and smothered out.

In the Chinaman's room the doctor, of course, discovers the drug, and carrying it downstairs places it carelessly on his library table, where it attracts the attention of his wife, who smells it, tastes it, and finally eats it, with the result that later she is found lying unconscious on the floor.

Just where reality ends and the dream commences is somewhat of a problem, but, however, the wife forgiven by her husband and started off on the right road again, evidently dreams of the vengeance of the Chinaman through which she is lured by means of the drug to an opium den prescribed to be exclusively for women. Here, of course, she enters the clutches of an evil gang of Chinamen, and closely following the happening in the den, she is pictured to be, years later, an outcast from the place, finally ending in prison scarcely recognizable as her former self. Then the dream merges again into reality, after being accidentally located in prison by a grown-up edition of her little daughter, and we are glad, indeed, to come suddenly face to face with the fact that it was all a dream.

The production is not by any means without its faults, but unlike many others that could be named, it at least lives up to its title, and is not easily forgotten. It will be released through the Kriterion Service.

MORE UNIVERSAL PLAYERS.

Princess Hassan of Egypt, Neal Burns, Hank Mann and Alan Holubar have been added to the growing list of leading players of the Universal.

Maibelle Heikes Justice

IF Miss Justice spells her first name peculiarly, it isn't through affectation—she has the right by inheritance, it having come down from an ancestress of the Middle West when that section was as French as Quebec. She is a daughter of Indiana, a state that seems to feed its youngsters with some kind of royal honey to make them write and sing. She writes in an ambidextrous way for screen or magazine page with good Indianian skill and the Mother State has her name down on her golden list.

The writer had a talk with her during the past week at the home of her aunt, here in New York, about her work and authorship in general. She showed me one of her new scripts, "The Friendship of Beaupere." It was merely a straightforward account of what she wanted to put on the screen. She is one of those to whom construction seems to come naturally and can't understand why anyone who can construct a magazine story can't think just in action and get an effective story on the screen. With her, there is no awkward twisting and translating. It is the old story of the special person who has the natural gift for expression in some peculiar way—let others study and think all they can, they will never catch up with the one naturally gifted, who uses any effort at all. One can learn how to write; but to do it easily and keep up the stunt is just a gift. Miss Justice says that ideas are continually knocking at the door. She can't possibly use them all.

Maibelle Heikes Justice.

There is authority for the statement that to choose is the greatest nerve wearer known to man. One who has many ideas is always at wits end choosing and the process leaves one tired. There is another truth—a flood of fresh ideas coming in is like food to restore one. Miss Justice says that when she gets tired she likes to go to grand opera. The orchestration and melodies set a new train of fresh ideas marching through her mind and she comes out of the opera house fresh and renewed. If music and the stirring, broad life of great cities is what she needs today to give her inspiration and keep her in tune, tomorrow she will feel the lure of the windigo and must be off to get new stories from the whispering of the pine trees in the woodlands of Canada.

What she likes best to picture are deep human emotions; the heart-elevating and heart-breaking things. In the cities man lacks space, so he tones down, subdues his feelings and consents to live in a lower key, lest he be destroyed. Miss Justice likes to go to the wild places where she can see great dramatic emotions actually pass across the scenes of real life. In the great Northwest that she pictures so well and truly she finds the air filled with suggestions of the big things and now and then actual life will give her the idea for some picture as it did for "The Lure O' the Windigo." Her idea is to picture human beings as God made them and do it courageously. Actual life produces many raw things. In picturing such, she wants to tell the truth of humanity acting according to its lower animal instincts; but in doing so, by developing at the same time the really human elements, she gets an effect that is not offensive but stimulating to humanity.

Just now she is preparing to spend a few weeks at Los Angeles at the Selig studio, where a series of comedies by her and William Lord Wright are to be produced.

Her best pictures are (by Essanay) "A Song in the Dark," "The Other Man," "The Great Game," "The Love of Penolope"—(by Selig) "Pay As You Enter Man," "Itienne of the Glad Heart," "The Lure O' the Windigo," "A Splendid Sacrifice," "The Post Impressionists," "The College Chaperone" and many others. Some of her scripts have been produced by some of the eastern companies, Lubin and we understand Vitagraph, have put out a few. She says the Western companies pay better.

"Hearts and Planets"

One-Reel Keystone Farce of Original Conception and Amusing Treatment.

Visible Star.....Chester Conklin
Invisible Star.....Mack Sennett
Three Astronomers and a girl.

AN astronomical farce, "Hearts and Planets," is amusing enough to please the average audience, and it has the merit of departing from the stereotyped in its development. It does not, however, give Chester Conklin the exact opportunity suited to his peculiarities. He excites laughter by sheer stupidity. The inanity of his portrayals, their weak-mindedness, the inferiority of which his characters are not conscious, which are, however, obvious to the audience in his amusing self-revelations, constitute his art. The ludicrous side of his acting would be more pronounced if he essayed the role of an important man, a self-important one, trying to make a profound impression, in sublime ignorance of his own condition and of what others think of him. Mack Sennett might try his star in such a part to advantage.

Scene from "Hearts and Planets" (Keystone).

Chester Conklin in "Hearts and Planets" courts the daughter of an astronomer. He manages an elopement, but the girl's father chances to see him through a powerful telescope. For this Conklin attempts novel retaliation. He carries a formidable array of fireworks to the observatory and sets them off as the astronomer is engaged in star-gazing. The astronomer telephones to some fellow-scientists and they gather at his observatory to witness some remarkable phenomena in the heavens. There are rockets, roman-candles and pin-wheels in the sky, as if the entire universe was in a state of eruption instead of a few nations on earth. The ingenious suitor and the girl are enjoying themselves so well that they become careless, and a human hand and slow match are injected into the field of observation.

Discovery that they have been fooled sends the three astronomers to the roof in vengeful mood, but they are immediately and very accurately bombarded with rockets and stars. The girl finally effects a rescue with a stream of water from a fire hose, and reconciliation follows. It is mere farce—it is simply to laugh and that is all there is to it—but it is refreshing in the presentation of new effects, and it will brighten the variety of any exhibitor's program.

EXHIBITION TO RELIGIOUS EDITORS.

A private exhibition was given to the religious editors of New York publications on Thursday afternoon, February 18, by the Church & School Social Service Bureau at its offices, 80 Fifth avenue, New York. The visitors were shown a number of reels of religious, educational and sociological subjects that indicated the scope of the work of the Bureau, of which Rev. William Carter, D. D., is the head.

Dr. Carter announced that the Bureau would give an exhibition before the Presbyterian Social Union at the Savoy Hotel on Monday, March 1. He also said that arrangements had been made with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company by which the Bureau would have control of all educational subjects made by that company.

Alfred Swenson Joins Kriterion

THE Alhambra Brand on the Kriterion program is going to show a brand new face in its coming releases. Alfred Swenson, who has had a wide theatrical experience in both stock and road work, is now busy posing before the camera for his first release under the Kriterion banner.

Mr. Swenson, before going to Los Angeles, appeared in stock in New York City for B. F. Keith, at the Gotham Theater. One hundred and forty consecutive weeks was Mr. Swenson's record when he boarded the train for the West.

It appears as though he has a still longer record ahead of him. The motion picture business is famous for long runs. The photoplayers of the screen no longer keep track of their runs with the picture companies by the weeks. The shortest period taken into consideration is one year.

Many of the best-known plays of the past decade have claimed Mr. Swenson as their star. Among others he appeared in "The Wolf" when that production was having such a splendid success throughout the country. He also appeared in stock for several years in Salt Lake City. In fact, every city in this country of ours of any size has seen Mr. Swenson's work some time or other.

Alfred Swenson.

This is not his first appearance before the camera. He asserts that he is thoroughly camera broke. With his wide following throughout the country his ability to just exactly portray the character that is required of him, coupled with his pleasing personality, which someway or other creeps into his picture work, Mr. Swenson seems assured of the great popularity that comes to all good motion picture actors.

"POLLY OF THE CIRCUS" INJUNCTION.

In granting the petition of Margaret Mayo Selwyn for an injunction restraining the Feature Film Association from producing and marketing a feature picture under the title "Polly of the Circus," Justice Cohalan, in a special term of the Supreme Court for New York county, issued an order forbidding the defendants during the pendancy of the action from "exhibiting, performing or representing or advertising in any manner or form, the performance or intended performance, representation or production of any motion picture photoplay under the title 'Polly of the Circus,' or any simulated or colorable imitation of the said title, and from using or advertising or announcing the use of the said title 'Polly of the Circus' or any colorable imitation thereof, as the title of any motion picture photoplay"; also that they withdraw all advertising matter and turn the same over to the plaintiff.

ATSCO IN BANKRUPT PROCEEDINGS.

The Atsco corporation, which manufactures and sells curtains and screens for the projection of moving picture films, with offices at 218 West Forty-second street, is bankrupt, with liabilities estimated at $21,000, and assets valued at about $5,000.

The petition was filed by the law firm of Olcott, Gruber, Bonynge & McManus, representing the following creditors: Rose C. Keegan, $202; Paul T. Kammerer, Jr., $182, and Harry M. Spence, $160. It is alleged the corporation is solvent and preferred certain creditors. Judge Mayer appointed Milton M. Sittenfield receiver under a bond of $2,500.

The company has a factory at East Orange and manufactures radio gold fibre screen by a secret process which gives high reflecting power and is believed to be very valuable. Additional capital is needed to develop the process, but the officials of the corporation are confident they will be able to interest financiers in the project.

WELL handled and presenting Mr. Hart in a new light, "The Roughneck" will please as a story, though it comes under the heading, "conventional." Interest is quickly aroused by Hart's characterization, one of more psychology than he has hitherto attempted and one placed in strong contrast by the admirable selection of type in Enid Markey. The eternal conflict, that of "The Great Divide," is one of locality. It is between a Westerner of primitive and unconquered nature and a girl of a more civilized environment, supposedly in the "East," though such distinctions do not hold to-day. In this case the man has softened into that finest of gentlemen, he of delicate sensibilities and noble heart. The girl is merely the spoiled doll of wealth and fashion until a sudden revelation leads to an entire conversion of character, and not a little of the charm of contrast is due to Enid Markey's consistent impersonation.

Three reels would have admitted of a more adequate treatment or the early development could have been compressed in favor of showing the girl's conversion. It is almost too sudden. Then three reels would have permitted a more powerful contrast to be set forth at the mines. The girl and her brother are supposedly heirs to an enormous fortune, comprising a great mine, but the latter really constitutes the sole possession of their father at his death and he deeds it to the manager, Dave Page, as restitution for a wrong done Page's father. Thus the supposed heiress and her brother are left penniless. They do not know it, however, and the girl demands five thousand dollars advance on her supposed dividends. The manager pays her that amount, though he is forced to do so from his own bank account.

Now it happens that the heiress is courted by a penniless lordling, and this gentleman suspects Page of secreting valuable property. Armed with a search warrant, the heirs and the lordling go to Page's office and inspect his papers. This interesting scene results in a discovery wholly unexpected, the discovery that Page is the real master of the mine. A sudden change comes over the spirit of the lordling, and his true character comes to light. Page feels sorry for the children and, in a moment of supreme compassion, he gives the mine to them. He imposes a condition upon the brother that the next time a husband is selected for his sister he shall be a real man. The girl reaches a realization that Page is the real man for her in some well-handled scenes that are all too brief for the effect they deserve. The play is superior to most of its kind and will be well received.

HARRY MYERS DIRECTING "SAVED BY A DREAM."

Harry Myers is directing "Saved By A Dream," in which the versatile players, Rosemary Theby and Brinsley Shaw are also starring.

Edward Alexander

FOR years an idol in stock companies throughout the East, Edward Alexander is now playing leads for the Santa Barbarta Motion Picture Company at Santa Barbara, Cal. He was indeed a favorite in the New England States on the stage, his success being phenomenal in that part of the country. He has had many years of legitimate experience, supporting such stars as Robert Mantell, Wright Lorimer and others.

He is a great athlete and sportsman and devotes his spare time to exercise and healthy sports.

The films he has appeared in have met with high comment regarding his parts. He is playing leads opposite the beautiful Fritzi Brunette, under the direction of William Robert Daly. These productions are being released exclusively through Kriterion Service. A drama, entitled "The Keeper of the Flock," released last week by Kriterion, featured Alexander, and it is said by those who saw it, that it shows him at his best.

Edward Alexander.

Elizabeth Drew

THE Runaway June Company left for Bermuda on Wednesday, where they will be for three or four weeks, and with them goes Miss Elizabeth Drew, another scintillating star, who, in supporting Miss Norma Phillips, has deserted the footlights to seek fame in filmdom. Miss Drew is very well known in Broadway theatrical circles, having been with "45 Minutes from Broadway" for five seasons, and also having played the lead in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford."

Elizabeth Drew.

It is Oscar Eagle, director of the Runaway June serial, who is responsible for Miss Drew's advent into motion pictures, and it is also a coincidence as Mr. Eagle was Miss Drew's dramatic director when she was a mere child, and meeting her recently induced her to work under the Mutual banner.

The New York World, and Herald, have both mentioned Miss Drew in their columns as one of the best looking and smartest dressed women in New York, and with assets such as these, she undoubtedly will in a very short space of time rise to the top, for it is none other than Director Eagle who has made the statement "Give me a woman regardless of looks who can wear clothes, and I will make a star out of her in six months."

WELSH RENEWS UNIVERSAL CONTRACT.

William Welsh, the talented character actor, has just signed another contract with the Universal company and will continue to appear in Imp productions as heretofore.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine."

Paul Armstrong's Strong Melodrama Makes Hit as Picture Offering (World Film, Five Reels).

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE quality of its story is the big thing in any picture, and the quality of "Alias Jimmy Valentine" is known. The picture is one of the kind of which there is no question or doubt; that it is a very good offering everyone, we think, will be quite agreed. The spectator who wants "high brow" stuff and the one who wants "low brow" stuff can generally get together on simple, human stuff and that this picture, in both plot and detail, furnishes richly.

Maurice Tourneur directed the picture in the Peerless studio, with Robert Warwick in the leading role as "Jimmy." Ruth Shepley plays the girl. John Hines plays "Red," the pal of Jimmy, and the other crook of the three is played by Alec Francis. Doyle, the detective, is played by Robert Cummings. There are many delightfully small details; but there is nothing in the whole offering that is, in this way, quite so pleasing as "Blinkey," the clever penman, done by John Starkey. Scenes actually taken in the big pen at Sing Sing are included. These pictures are full of interest and, just at this time, have a news value, due to the work of the new warden, Thomas Mott Osborne, the rich man, who is reforming methods of treating prisoners and is remaking many of them into men. Warden Osborne is shown on the screen. The staging and scene-making throughout is convincing and worthy.

The quality of the story comes, in part, from the breadth of its emotional appeal to human affections; it's a love story of several different kinds. First there is good human stuff, and we can sympathize with it, in the friendship of the crooks against the background of police activities. Then comes the showing of Jimmy's respect for women and the first, faint twittering daybreak of a real love story. It was through Jimmy's strength and not through his weakness that he is arrested and brought to book for the robbery of the bank. It was due to the fight he has with the cad to protect the girl on the train. He goes to prison and the pals who are gathered together in a long-term reunion are denied long conversations; but they have their signs and understanding. For his good deeds Jimmy gets a pardon and soon there is a real love story within him, and this is reinforced by his attitude towards his old chums. He would herd them all on the straight path and does his best for them.

There is good dramatic construction in Jimmy's finally winning his right to happiness. He is successful in business, but his past still holds him liable. He has worked out a false alibi so cleverly that it fools the relentless detective. He then wilfully relinquishes its safety to secure the safety of the little sister of the girl he loves—he lets the detective see that he is able to open the safe, for the child is shut in it. The girl sees it too and the detective's heart is touched and he tears up the papers asking for information about alias Jimmy Valentine..

Douglas Gerrard.

DOUGLAS GERRARD, whose correct name is Douglas Gerrard MacMurrough Kavannagh, was born in Dublin, Ireland, thirty-one years ago. "Gerry," as his intimates call him, was educated at Dublin University, Dublin, just outside of London, and also at the historic Heidelberg University.

His theatrical career commenced at an early age. His first appearance was in "Henry the Fifth" at the Lyceum Theater,London. Later he was featured at the Zurich Theater, Switzerland, as Carl Heinrich in Old Heidelberg. He speaks German fluently, and was prominently associated with a number of German stock companies. He is the typical Irish gentleman in manner and appearance. He has dark, rich Spanish coloring of the Western Coast Irish people, a wealth of curly raven hair, large dark eyes, is of excellent physique and in all the type which lends itself readily to the motion picture screen.

Douglas Gerrard.

Mr. Gerrard is a daring horseman, and the happiest moments of his life are spent topping six-foot fences on his thoroughbred Dermot. He is a member of the Players' Club, New York, the Savage Club, London, the Photoplayers' Club, Los Angeles, and the Los Angeles Athletic Club. He is one of the board of directors of the Photoplayers' Club, and his enviable reputation as a raconteur places him in the foremost ranks of the entertainment committees of all clubs.

His first appearance was with Miss Viola Allen in "Cymbeline," at the Empress Theater, New York, returning to London for a limited engagement, where he was engaged by William A. Brady for Ahdemar in "Divorcons," with Grace George. Mr. Gerrard was again brought to this country to play the juvenile lead with Ethel Barrymore in "Lady Frederick."

Mr. Gerrard's successes on the screen are many. He was featured with the Universal Film Co., Pathe Freres (Western), also the Majestic and Kalem Companies. Among the features in which he so ably took part were "The Quicksands," "Shannon of the Fifth," in which he appeared as Shannon, "The King of Chance"—"The Invisible Power"—"The Derelict" and others. He is at present engaged in the Favorite Players' production of "The High Hand," playing Lewis, the political boss, in support of Carlyle Blackwell.

"DRAMATIC RIGHTS" AGAIN IN COURT.

The question of the interpretation and scope of assignments of dramatic rights to serial productions is involved in an infringement action which is expected to be decided in the United States District Court this month. The decision is being awaited with interest by moving picture manufacturers and producers as the question is one of vital interest.

The action is brought by Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine;" John Fox, Jr., author of the novel; and Klaw & Erlanger, producers of the play based on the book, against the Broadway Picture Producing Company and the Eagle Feature Film Company.

The film companies contend the assignment of the dramatic rights to the book which the author and his publishers executed to Klaw & Erlanger, covers simply the presentation of the play on the stage with living actors and consequently photoplays cannot be construed in any sense as a violation of the rights of the producers.

The drama was staged by Klaw & Erlanger for three seasons before the Broadway Picture Producing Company negotiated with Frank H. Rice, as agent for the publishers, for the moving picture rights to the novel and consequently the film companies aver the exhibition of the drama in picture theaters does not materially injure the producers.

And we must all admit to being beautifully deceived by him when at the carrying out of the dreadful threat of the master criminal each hour a pedestrian falls dead at his door, he at last gives the signal of his consent to leave the country, by placing, as requested, a vase of flowers in the window. We see him board the ship which is to convey him to South America, while pretty Elaine bids him a sorrowful good-bye; and when the express drivers bring to Elaine's home a box of valuable scientific instruments (so it was marked at any rate) belonging to Kennedy, and which was too late in arriving at the pier to gain a passage with its master, we believe that we are tremendously surprised to discover beneath the unkempt appearance of the two men the personalities of Kennedy and his friend Jameson.

The big thrill of this episode takes place when again everybody concerned, meaning the three main characters of the story, are again captured and are about to have their lights extinguished by another scientific death-dealer, the Infra-Red Ray, the power of which is cleverly diverted to the room above in which the powerful instrument is placed, by means of a diverting shield which Kennedy in his experimental work has learned to make use of. The police are raiding the place, and everybody is in safety, including the inmates of the place (that is so far as we know) when the curtain is drawn.

Regarding the action of the play there is little to be said that has not been said before. Suffice it to say that the Pathe-Hearst serial continues to hold interest.

SEASIDE THEATER COMPANY FAILS.

Operating motion picture playhouses at seashore resorts isn't a very profitable venture judging from the experience of Harry Sterling Goldman, who has just filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court, with liabilities of $29,662 and no assets.

The petitioner conducted picture theaters at Newport, Long Branch and other places, but found to his sorrow that the wealthy people who frequent those resorts prefer to play bridge, polo, tennis or go yachting and attend dansants than witness the best thrillers on the film.

Among the creditors listed in the petition are the Strand Theater Company, of Mt. Vernon, $5,500; Charles E. Kenniston, of Long Branch, $1,500; the Associated Amusement Company, of Newport, $1,000; Abraham Michelbacher, $1,000; the Chalmers Motor Company, $625; the Greater New York Film Company, $99; the World Film Corporation, $97, and the General Film Company, Pathe Freres, the Exclusive Feature Company for lesser sums.

The People of the State of New York are listed as creditors for $300 on a forfeited bail bond which the bankrupt furnished for a friend charged with a minor offense last year which he has failed to make good.

Emile Chautard.

EMILE CHAUTARD is one of the best known French directors. He is now at work at the World Film studios at Fort Lee on a feature in which Vivian Martin is to be starred. M. Chautard is a graduate of the French Eclair studios and has been associated with such noted artists as Rejane, and he has played at the Gymnase and the vaudeville theaters in Paris.

M. Maurice Tourneur, who is well known to American picture fans because of his making of the Robert Warwick picture, "The Man of the Hour," and Vivian Martin in "The Wishing Ring," was formerly a member of the same company in which M. Chautard appeared. When "Alias Jimmy Valentine" was originally produced in Paris, M. Chautard played Valentine while M. Tourneur acted as stage manager.

Emile Chautard.

More and more the motion picture is demanding the co-operation of men of the type of Emile Chautard, artists by instinct and experience. There is probably no department of theatrical production of which this gentleman is not master. His European career demanded of him that he should be the possessor of the highest intellectual abilities when you come to produce for Maeterlinck and Rostand; "you've got to go some."

Paul Bomget was another of Chautard's authors—in fact, he was one of the prominent and successful stage directors in Paris when the gay city, before the war, was at the very height of its theatrical prosperity.

The French stage is a good training ground for motion picture directors, as Pathe, Gaumont, Eclair and others have demonstrated. Chautard, by the way, played Napoleon in "Sans Gene" fifteen hundred times. So he knows the show business all around. World Film have secured another capable aid.

UNIQUE FEATURE CO. BANKRUPT.

The Unique Feature Company is in the hands of a receiver following the institution of bankruptcy proceedings against the corporation in the United States District Court. The petition was filed against the company by Myers, Robinson & Lauber, representing the following creditors: Thomas C. Steinberg, Jennie Steinberg and R. W. Fisher on assigned claims aggregating about $500. The creditors all say the film company is insolvent and that it has preferred certain creditors.

The liabilities of the film company are estimated at $5,000 and the assets, consisting of films, rental contracts and office fixtures are valued at a somewhat smaller figure.

MIRROR-EDISON PLAY CONTEST DECIDED.

The Artistic Ending Contest, held by the Edison Company in conjunction with the Dramatic Mirror and which has excited so much comment because of the novel possibilities of the plot ending, has been decided. The unfinished scenario by Mark Swan which led up to the question, "Who Stole the Portrait," to be solved by the proffered and winning manuscript, was completed by having the artist himself steal the portrait on exhibition. This winning manuscript was submitted by Maude Moore Clement, 4118 Lake Park avenue, Chicago, to whom goes the prize of $100, while the winning title was submitted as "The Phantom Thief," by Philip H. Lenoir, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Las Vegas, New Mexico, for which he gets $10. Those that submitted the next best four manuscripts, entitling them to $10 were Kathleen Butler, 1876 Arthur avenue, New York City; C. H. Chaffee, 23 Roycroft Apts., Detroit, Mich.; Henry C. Grant, 247 West 50th street, New York, and Arthur E. Kohl, 330 W. 58th street, New York.

Popular Length of Pictures

Important Question Discussed by Horace G. Plimpton, Producer of Edison Pictures—Strong Argument for Short Subjects.

AT THIS time when so much is being said about the decrease of profit of picture theatres the following review of the situation by Horace G. Plimpton, manager of negative production of the Edison Company, will be of interest to readers of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Plimpton has made a conscientious study of the subject and his investigations have led to certain conclusions which he mentions in his article. Whether Mr. Plimpton has located the trouble or not is difficult to determine but his observations furnish interesting reading. He says:

"With the exhibitor complaining at the decrease in profits, though business may be as good as ever, from the standpoint of attendance, both the manufacturer and the exhibitor are apparently in a dilemma of not being certain what the public want, or rather, whether artificial stimulation has not been applied through advertising to create a demand that may or may not be permanent, with respect to certain lengths of films, all candid discussions such as this help to bring the vital question to a solution.

"As a matter of fact, the lengths of films imposed by custom or trade necessities are unfortunate. Present conditions are such that a film exceeding about 600 feet in length must be made 1,000 feet. If it exceeds 1,000 feet it must be made into 2,000 feet, and so on. Naturally this does not conduce to the best rendition of stories. There are stories worth 800 feet but not worth 1,000 feet. There are many worth 1,200 to 1,800 feet, but not 2,000 feet. But at present the stories must be cut down to 600 feet or 1,000 feet respectively or stretched to 2,000 feet—perhaps at the risk of padding. This condition does not prevail in England. There they do not know the 'split reel.' Subjects are released individually and may be any length, irrespective of complete reels. However, under our present system of standing orders in this country, the condition is not likely to change and we must adapt ourselves to it. The larger comparative cost of the shorter film is again a temptation difficult to resist when the opportunity presents itself to stretch the subject into longer reels. This will likely be a strong factor working against, or rather tending to discourage the individual manufacturer from championing any concerted movement tending to bring about a working basis for making the intrinsic worth of a story alone, determine the length of the reel, no matter how short it may be—if this were possible. But that it will pay—redound in the long run—to the man who overlooks initial costs of film manufacturing, I have not the slightest doubt; that the prestige of presenting such stories would in the end make it more than worth while.

"So we come down to the question of the single reel as opposed to the two and three-reel, or longer. Which do the public prefer? Here we have a somewhat anomalous condition. Almost every one of my friends that I talk to—friends not in the business—tells me that he prefers the short subjects and the varied program. He does not mind a good two or three reel, but he does object to sitting through a film that takes an hour and a half or two hours to show, and he particularly objects to the latter if he happens to come in during its running so that he is forced to sit through some thousand feet of film which cannot interest him because he does not understand it. And yet the theaters, generally speaking, have got the 'feature' craze pretty badly. They advertise them liberally and generally get good houses beside which, we shall have to admit, they attract a class of patrons formerly absent from picture theaters. Generally speaking, I suppose that the theaters in residential sections are more likely to do better with long films because families are able or more apt to make an evening's entertainment out of their visit, whereas those catering to transient trade are better off with more and shorter subjects.

"But of equal importance almost to the question as to what the public likes is what the exhibitor needs to do business in a profitable way. There is no doubt that the films usually classed as 'features' have increased his cost of doing business through his service costing more, usually, and the longer program not allowing him to fill his house several times during the afternoon and evening as he used to and without increasing his costs.

"But in any case will the long film last? Especially, will the feature film last? We reason best usually when we reason from known facts and past experience. Now Europe has passed through the 'feature' craze and like a stage of fever, it has practically passed away. Films of 'feature' length were much like the proverbial drug on the market. This was succeeded by a return to the previous demand and liking for the shorter films. Will our experience continue to be parallel with Europe as it has, for the most part, been in the past?

"It takes an exceedingly interesting story or a very spectacular production to hold on the screen for one and a half to three hours, and how many of these kinds are there? Personally, I have never seen a film over 4,000 ft. long which I was not bored to a greater or less degree—I make no exceptions. Without the spoken word it is difficult to see how except in the rarest cases, interest can be held so long. The moment the eyes have received the impression to be conveyed, the situation is, or ought to be over—so far as the screen is concerned. This being so, does it not follow that a stage play lasting three hours ought to be told in half to three-quarters of an hour in film? 'In Spite of All,' which Mrs. Fiske won such success in on the stage, was a four-act play. Edison has put it on in three reels and, of course, this includes much that was only talked about in the stage play, but necessarily must be shown on the screen.

"Prediction is dangerous work, but I believe that the single reel will, so far from becoming less important from now on, become more and more important. About six months ago, one of the men most prominent in the film manufacturing business predicted the ultimate end of the 'feature' length of film in an article entitled 'The Doom of Long Features.' Yet to-day he is one of the leading spirits in exploiting those long features. Is his attitude not suggestive that the business is in need of a strong leader who, without waiting for concerted effort, would strike out for the shorter length of films upon which the motion pictures made their phenomenal growth? This, too, touches close to the question of whether, in going into the long features, the motion picture is not trying to take in length of plays that, on the speaking stage, depend for their life and interest on the voice and spoken dialogue; that an error is being made, fatal to healthy and permanent growth, in not recognizing the limitations of the screen as compared with that of the stage, wonderful as has been the development of screen dramatic picturization and characterization? But that is a long story.

"The incident briefly led up to, dramatically handled and then over—fifteen to twenty minutes of well-held interest—after all, with its rapidity of movement, is not that the very basis of film? With a more involved plot, this same interest can be held for two or three reels, but I personally believe that the story must be extraordinary to hold beyond that.

"I have not spoken of comedies. They should, in my opinion, be more briefly told than drama. While there has been a disposition, lately, to exploit comedies, two reels or more long, I do not believe that it will last."

COBE TO TAKE TRIP TO COAST.

It was announced at the Alliance office that President Andrew J. Cobe intends to leave New York in the near future on a trip which will include visits to all of the Alliance exchanges and also to the studios of the companies contributing to the Alliance Programme.

The main purpose of this tour is to afford Mr. Cobe the opportunity to study at close range the picture field. One of the departures from the usual methods pursued by chief executives of the larger film concerns on tour will be Mr. Cobe's efforts to get in personal contact with the exhibitor, learn his needs, and then adjust the workings of every part of his organization to meet these needs.

Mr. Cobe will probably make Philadelphia his first stop and after touching Pittsburgh will proceed westward to the coast, where he will inspect the Panama Exposition. He will return through the South, stopping at all of the Alliance Exchange centers.

KLEINE GETS ALL-STAR CAST FOR "THE COMMUTERS."

"The Commuters," that popular James Forbes comedy now being filmed by George Kleine in his New York studio, will feature an all-star cast. The lead of Hetty Brice has been placed in the competent hands of Miss Irene Fenwick. George Le Guere will play Larry Brice, and another well-known Broadway thespian, Charles Judels, will handle the role of inimitable Sammy. Dan Moyles, who won fame as the original Officer 666, both in the stage play and the Kleine film version, will interpret Mr. Rolliston, while Della Connor will play Fan Rolliston, his wife.

"Wild Life in Films"

Edward A. Salisbury, With Government Aid, Secures Wonderful Film Records of the World of Fin, Fur and Feathers.

By W. Stephen Bush.

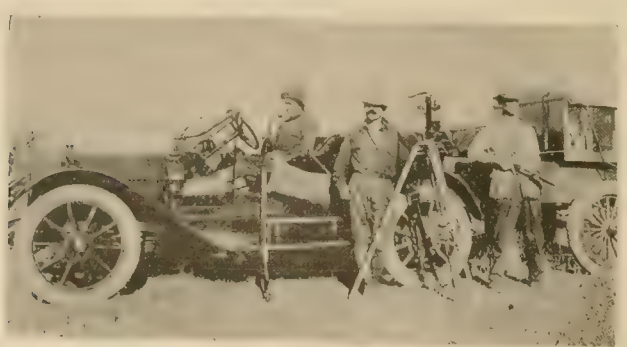
WHAT we call the "Wild Life of North America" is to-day confined to a small portion of our country. A good deal of this small portion is now under the direct supervision and the constant vigilance of Uncle Sam. Few of us know that the government of the United States maintains extensive game reservations in Oregon and Washington and on numerous large islands in the Pacific Ocean not far from the California shores. Arizona and the great Canadian West, parts of California and many millions of acres west of the Missouri constitute what might be termed the natural game preserves.

Edward A. Salisbury.

Of "Wild Life," in the sense and meaning of our pioneers, hunters and trappers, the East and Middle West know but little. Virginia and other parts of the South still afford important nesting grounds to the migratory birds of our continent, but there is little "Wild Life" below Mason and Dixon's line if we accept the definition of the word in the language of Theodore Roosevelt. In a description of the Fauna of North America, the terms of Roosevelt have become the terms of custom, of science and of the text books.

"The Wild Life of America In Films."

In introducing to the readers of The Moving Picture World the most valuable, the most entertaining and the most complete film records of "American Wild Life," I mention the name of the ex-President advisedly, for he was the great prophet and apostle of conservation and he, too, was the creator of the great Federal Game Preserves, which have checked the waste of wild life and which have helped to make these films possible. It is time for me to speak of the author of the films and here again the name of Roosevelt may be mentioned with profit to the reader. Edward A. Salisbury, the producer of "Wild Life of America in Films," has some of the protean qualities of Roosevelt. He is a thorough sportsman, passionately in love with wild life and with Nature. He is indefatigable. He will obey the "call of the wild" even if it means standing waist-deep in a cold swamp or chasing through brush and tall timber for a day and a night in pursuit of the trail of cougar, lynx or bear. He has overheard and divined the whisperings of Nature in brook, field and forest. He understands the creatures of the Wild and he is consumed with an ambition to make others understand and appreciate the eternal marvel of God's creation.



Starting for the Quail Hunting Ground.

Salisbury's Long and Fruitful Labors.

For three years and more Salisbury has labored to assemble a screen library in which may be found all that pertains to the natural history of North America. He has had the aid of the government, the faithful co-operation of a loyal staff of trappers and cameramen, and last, but by no means least of highly intelligently and highly trained dogs. Salisbury is a native of California and not without honor in his country but the fame of his pictures has not reached the East until now. His name was not altogether unknown east of Chicago and the news of the success of his pictures in California had traveled beyond the limits of the state, but not until this week had the East seen and known the fame of Salisbury as it deserves to be known. A very critical audience had assembled in the offices of the Kinetophone Company to view the pictures. They sat there for something like two hours, but the pictures had not been on the screen before they dropped their professional air and duty became a pleasure. There were somthing like seven reels and not a soul thought it was enough.

The World of Fins, Furs and Feathers.

There was variety in abundance; romance, adventure, deeds of daring, glimpses of the mysterious ways of Nature and her animal tribes, flashes of humor, pathos, wonder—all these things passed before us like a magic kaleidoscope. Let me give the reader some idea of the scope of these pictures by mentioning at least some of the splendid subjects: Trout, their life from the spawn to the fish, the spawning grounds, fish "ladders," traps, etc. All this is treated with thoroughness but the dullest audience cannot withhold its interest. Of special importance is the work of the Federal government in providing hatcheries and distributing stations for the trout, most of which is of the "Steel Head" variety. We see how the "ripe" fish is selected, how artificial spawning is carried on, the process of fertilization is then shown and the work in the hatcheries in all its fascinatng details. The pictures are packed close with information. The "close-ups" showing fine individual specimens rarely fail to elicit applause.

Sport in the California Trout Country.

The trout streams of the Pacific Coast must be life-long temptations to all who have been lucky enough to either see them or fish in them. The films make that plain enough. Our "celebrated" Eastern trout streams on Long Island and in Connecticut are like sickly little oozings compared to those wild, rapid streams that dash down rocky beds, forming an occasional limpid pool, that looks like a veritable paradise for trout. Salisbury, after showing us just what is being done to keep and nurture these game fish, invites us to follow him as he begins to cast his fly. It makes your blood tingle to see these powerful fish fighting their captor and often escaping when within touch of the landing net. Mr. Salisbury, whose running comment on the films was highly enjoyed, told his audience that no man fishing in those waters could use more than one hook at a time as three strikes for three different flies was the usual thing. The trout pictures closed with magnificent views of cascades in the trout country of California.

The Films of Bird Life Indescribably Beautiful and Touching.

There is something singularly sweet, instructive and pathetic about all the pictures of bird life, Not inappropriately the first reel shows intimate glimpses of the domestic affairs of the Bald Eagle, "The Emblem of Our Country." These pictures were taken under unusual difficulties. It took something like half a day to carry cameras, tripods and outfit to the top of the trees where the eagles had made their nest. Mr. and Mrs. Eagle viewed the preparations of Salisbury and his crew with unfeigned suspicion and when the men approached the tree with ropes the eagles immediately swooped down upon them. In order to get the camera within proper range of the nest the old eagles had to be kept away by means of clubs. The revelations of the camera away up and close to the nest are most interesting, and hold the spectators spellbound. The strange habits of buzzards are next viewed at close range. Young buzzards are entirely yellow and fuzzy. It was funny to see two of these grotesque young creatures fight, reminding one of two young fighting cocks.

The Legend of the Pelican Explained by the Camera.

Pelican Island, Clear Lake, California, is probably the most interesting and surely the best protected bird colony in the world. Salisbury, assisted by the game wardens on the Island, succeeded in exploring and recording the habits of the pelican from the egg to the full-grown bird. One cannot help noticing the extreme affection which the pelican mother displays for its young. In olden times it was believed that the pelican fed the young with blood from her own breast. Salisbury succeeded in both dispelling and explaining this illusion. As a matter of fact the young pelican is a very greedy bird and almost crawls into the maw of its mother, half of the body of the young bird disappearing within the wide open mouth of the mother. The latter is very patient and indulgent with its young and lets it feed on the contents of its low-hanging crop. A touching scene is presented by the mother bird protecting its young from the rays of the sun. Though very affectionate in the treatment of its young the female pelican builds no nest, but lays its eggs on the ground. The life of the odd and amusing cormorant family in Lower Klamath Lake, in California, forms the subject of many interesting scenes. In this work Mr. Salisbury had the assistance of the Biological Survey, which is under the jurisdiction of the Federal Department of Agriculture.

The Haunts of Game Birds and How They Are Hunted.

Never satisfied with merely showing the habits and the habitations of birds Salisbury now takes the spectator with him on a most interesting and successful hunt for quail and pheasant. The work of the trained dogs is easily the star feature of the hunting scenes. We wonder at their unerring scent, at their patience in "pointing," at their quickness in "flushing" and at their unfailing skill in "retrieving." Now it must be remarked that the hunt always gets into the camera with every interesting and sensational incident. Of course ehibitors will know that radical cutting and editing is responsible for this even and regular success on the screen but the general public will never realize how much had to be cut away to give the picture the appearance of constant success. The "close ups" of the beautiful pheasants and the shy quail and woodcocks are the result of infinite pains and endless patience.

Salisbury, who is an ardent believer in conservation and whose sportsmanship revolts at the practices of the pot hunter, shows in about half a reel or so how wild geese which pass over the western part of California are wantonly and wilfully exterminated by men who are utterly devoid of every instinct of sportsmanship and who kill the birds either for market, regardless of game laws, or who kill just for the sake of seeing the crippled and dying birds fall to the ground. These depredations take place within easy distance of San Francisco. Crippled and dead birds are used as decoys, while the hunters are hiding in holes in the earth. Some of these hunters know how to imitate the call of the gander and the birds looking down, seeing flocks apparently feeding and hearing the call, start flying in the direction of the killers. As the flocks approach within shooting distance the "killers" rush out of their holes and fire away at the unsuspecting birds. The latter tumble down wounded, dying and dead.

Bear, Lynx, Cougar Treed and Caught After Fierce Tussles.

There is a saying among hunters that for its weight the lynch or wild cat is the fiercest fighter in the animal world. The film removes any doubt that may have existed. Curley, the dog of which Salisbury is frankly proud, here gets into the limelight by climbing up the tree where the lynx is awaiting developments and holding himself ready for any emergency that may arise. In his eagerness the dog rushes up on the narrowing part of the tree and finds himself unable to turn around and come down. He is finally aided in returning to the ground by an Indian guide who takes big chances going up into the tree and trying to rope the cat. After a bitter fight between lynx and Indian, the latter brings the animal down. During the operation of putting the collar on the beast, one of the man had his hand badly bitten. The adventures with the bears and the cougar were followed by the audience with breathless suspense, which found relief in hearty applause, when the cougar was at last captured and tied. The cougar sat crouching near the top of the tree breathing defiance. A half breed Indian is seen climbing up to the very branch where the cougar sat. In spite of clawings and snarlings the half breed pulls the cougar's tail and makes things uncomfortable for him, whereupon the desperate animal jumps into another tree twenty-five feet away. This tree stands beside a swiftly running river. Again the Indian climbs up but the cougar refuses to budge. It is impossible to rope him. Thereupon the half breed swings out on the branch where the cougar is crouching and, getting close to the trunk, cuts off the branch hurling the cougar into the river below. The cougar gets away for a little distance, but the incredibly clever work of Salisbury's assistants at last lands him and he is tied to a pole and deposited in a temporary cage. Not a whit less interesting in the hunt after the bears, but there is no space for it here. Indeed, even a very brief description of all the pictures would occupy a considerable portion of The Moving

White Pelicans in Their Nesting Grounds.

Picture World. I feel that my scant outlines have done the subject poor justice.

The Man Behind the Film.

Imagine a stalwart six-footer, an example of the rugged health which is the sure reward of outdoor life, and you have the physical contour of Edward A. Salisbury. His body is "hard as nails." Without these qualifications no one could have accomplished the task that he attempted and completed. With powers of endurance Salisbury writes indomitable courage and rare perseverance. I interviewed him at the Knickerbocker and found him the "best of scouts."

"Yes," he said, as he grew eloquent in praise of his guides and his dogs. "I'd give a good deal to have Curley here right now. This city seems like a prison. I want to get out in the wild country again, where no man need ever be lonesome. Everybody is overwhelming with kindness and I appreciate it all, but you know I do feel like packing up in a hurry and getting away from here. I wouldn't sell my dog Curley for all these films. No, I do not think that there can be any doubt as to the commercial success of these films. We showed them at the Tivoli, in San Francisco, where we played to 120,000 people in two weeks. The management had put up all its paper for next week's attraction but the demand for the pictures was so great that the advertised feaure was cancelled. In the second week we played to 7,000 more people than in the first. It's been the same everywhere in California. You may have noticed it—I applied the scissors to the films without stint. There's not another inch I could cut out now without injuring the value and coherency of the picture. I intend to exhibit the pictures myself and I will lecture on them myself. I do not think it would be just to the public to let any man lecture on these pictures who was not a part of our expedition. No man can do the subject justice who has not passed through the hardships and adventures, which these pictures record in such ample detail. I have altogether taken 250,000 feet of film, but I will let this series 'sink in' before I release my next batch. I will tell you though, that I have covered the whole field as thoroughly as it is humanly possible to do it."

"The Enemies"

A Broadway Star Feature in Three Parts—Grim Story of the Sea.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

JACK LONDON has nothing at all to do with "The Enemies," a three-part Broadway Star Feature shown at the Vitagraph Theater during the week of February 22, except that he is recognized as a sort of literary foster-father to all stories of brutality at sea. People know what to expect from London, and this, as the program states, is a tale of the London type—red blood, deep water, shanghaied sailors, fights and sudden death—we have them all. It is truly Londonesque. The direct inspiration for the plot was a story by Morgan Robertson, done into scenario form by Marguerite Bertsch and directed by Harry Davenport.

"The Enemies" is a grim, relentless bit of fiction with an interesting touch of mystery for two-thirds of its course. After that it continues to be grim and relentless, but the mystery vanishes as the captain sits in his cabin and gloats over the greatest of his enemies, whose death is deferred while events prior to the opening of the story are pictured. They don't augur well for the future of the soul about to pass away. It is clear, just as the author intended it should be, that William Sargent, lawyer and gentleman, is only getting his just deserts. Previously there was no good cause for suspecting him of villainy; in fact, one was rather inclined to look askance at the bloodthirsty captain—and that, by the way, is a good feature of the plot construction. The characters are not labeled "hero" and "villain"; their records and motives alike are held in abeyance, hence mystery and interest.

The biggest mistake in the picture is Harry Morey's monstrous false nose, and the supposition that a pretty girl of seemingly good taste could be immediately attracted by a man possessing such a blemish, combined with a scraggily black beard and generally unkempt appearance. The plot demanded features unlike Mr. Morey's that might be removed by surgical operation, thereby altering his appearance; but the audience had no means of knowing the requirements early in the picture, and the grotesque deformity exerted a fatal fascination that appreciably distracted the attention from the opening scenes, which were worth following.

We meet the captain's trembling, washed-out little sister and learn right at the start that she is a hopeless drunkard. This is unconventional, interesting, and suggests a story. How did she become a drunkard, and what is the captain going to do about it? The girl dies. The captain undergoes a series of operations in which his nose is cut down to normal proportions and his face is otherwise changed so that his best friend would not recognize him. And still we haven't an idea what he is going to do about it. He behaves like a second Captain Kidd, engaging thugs to man his ship, and those that hang back are shanghaied. That is the way he gets hold of William Sargent, lawyer and gentleman. Life on shipboard is just one fight after another, and brutal fights they are, until the captain's enemy receives a mortal blow. Photographs of the people he has wronged are placed at the foot of his cot that he may look at them and remember his sins while he is dying—a pleasant fancy.

There is no gainsaying the grip of the tale that is the better for the strong acting of Mr. Morey, Wilfrid North and Edith Storey, who in a small part gives a well-nigh perfect characterization. Her expression as a girl who has fallen from champagne to begging a drink of whiskey in a sailors' saloon, is poignant. William Shea and Harry Northrup also are valuable members of a cast that incudes Ned Finley, L. Rogers Lytton and Lillian Herbert.

CHANGES AT VITAGRAPH THEATER.

A program of unusual interest in which every picture is a feature is the Vitagraph Theater announcement for the week commencing Sunday, February 28. The Broadway Star Feature part of the program will include a three-part melodrama, "The Radium Thieves," in which a fight for a quarter of a million dollars' worth of radium introduces thrilling action that reaches a powerful climax. "The Radium Thieves" was written by John Laughran and produced by William Humphrey, with a cast including Leah Baird, Leo Delaney, Charles Kent, Gladden James, L. Rogers Lytton, Denton Vane and Garry McGarry. Another three-part feature that will arouse more than passing interest is "The Lady of the Lighthouse," an absorbing story of the adaptability of the blind, showing the many vocations of which they become adepts. While of an educational nature, there is enough dramatic appeal to make it one of the strongest of film dramas. On the balance of the program is the first of the famous Jarr Family Series, by Roy L. McCardell, entitled "The Jarr Family Discovers Harlem"; a one-part comedy, "Cupid's Column," and "A Study in Tramps."

"The Grind"

Three Reel Rex With Much to Commend It, Not Startling, but Thoroughly Human.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THERE'S an original touch about "The Grind" that one enjoys. The film is based on the sort of a story that has been told again and again. The story is a good one, too; but it is the making of the picture, and not merely the character of the story that gives it its most attractive side.

Ida May Park has had the good fortune to write the story which fell, by way of more good fortune, into the deft hands of Director DeGrasse. Pauline Bush plays the sympathetic role of Jean, the eldest of three orphan sisters, all three of whom are of absolutely different dispositions and constitutions, and of as diversified professions. One of the first things to notice about the production is the care that the director has taken to stamp the nature of each individual characer upon the mind of the spectator. You cannot miss it if you concentrate in the slightest degree. Secondly you will notice the peculiar and impressive manner in which the thought relations or association of ideas has been managed. For instance the glimpses given of the daily life of one of the sisters, and the web being woven about her with presents of jewels and flowers, by her employer, as coincident with her thoughts as she mingles in the tiny family circle in the evening. And, thirdly, you will feel at peace with the action of the play, because it is free, easy, natural, and intensely human. Besides having a remarkably sharp delineation of characters, it has atmosphere in a large degree; and when the picture has ceased to be, so far as the screen is concerned, the haunts through which your mind has travelled cling to you in a sort of a material way.

"The Grind" is a question of labor for a mere pittance in a business office, in a department store, or on the stage for the girl without other means of support. The picture has its sensational side, its pretty love thread, and a good balance of morals on the home run. Besides, Pauline Bush, Lon Chaney, and Ray Gallagher, and others whose work is worthy of note, but whose names we do not know, have aided materially in making the production what it is.

SELIG RELEASE HERALD COVERS.

The Selig Polyscope Company is issuing on the first of every month a magazine entitled The Selig Monthly Release Herald. It contains stories of Selig Pictureplays to be released during the month, with illustrations. The March number is bound in a cover presenting a portrait of Miss Kathlyn Williams in five colors. It is produced from an original painting. Every month, portraits of leading Selig players will be circulated with the Release Herald. Exhibitors have been requested to preserve the Release Herald covers for framing purposes. A valuable collection of a dozen or more portraits in colors can be collected in this way.

KALEM STAR WINS PRIZE.

Beautiful Painting of Marguerite Courtot Captures Hundred-Dollar Beauty Trophy.

WHEN Miss Marguerite Courtot, Kalem's dainty little seventeen-year-old star, posed for a photograph several months ago, she little dreamed that the picture would win for her a prize of $100. This is exactly what took place recently. And with the $100 went the honor of being pronounced one of America's fifty most beautiful girls.

When the result of the contest, and the pictures of the prize-winners was published throughout the country, exhibitors and photoplay patrons promptly recognized the likeness of the charming Kalem player. A stream of letters containing requests for copies of the prize-winning photograph has poured into the Kalem executive offices ever since.

Marguerite Courtot

A large number of the writers have urged Kalem to have oil paintings, similar to the famous Alice Joyce jewel painting, made of the Courtot photograph. Acceding to these requests, Kalem commissioned the artist who painted the Alice Joyce portrait to make a number of Marguerite Courtot paintings.

These were recently completed and are of rare beauty. The portraits are in two sizes. The first, including frame and shadow box, is 28x32 inches, while the second is 22x28 inches, also including the frame and shadow box. The frame is declared to be worthy of special mention, being a four-inch double sweep, heavily gold-plated and ornamented with fifty burnished parts. These are covered with 24-karat pure gold leaf.

Since only a limited quantity of these exquisite paintings have been made, it is declared by Kalem that all requests for them will be supplied in the order in which they are received. The larger painting will be sold at $8, while the small painting will be sold at $6.

A NEW PRODUCING COMPANY FOR KRITERION.

A. M. Kennedy has organized a new Western company to produce releases for Kriterion service. Bert Bracken, who was with Lubin Western Company and more recently director of Henry Walthall, will direct. Art Acord, who was leading man with Universal, will play leads. Edith Sterling will play opposite leads. She has played leading parts with Universal and the Frontier Western Co. Fred Whiteman, Pete Morrison and Francis McDonald, who are all well known in the film world, have been engaged for regular work in this company. It is the opinion that this is one of the best Western companies that has ever been organized, and great things are anticipated from it. Their first production will be released through the Kriterion Service in about two weeks.

CHAMPION COWBOYS IN CALIFORNIA SUBJECT.

Assisting the California Motion Picture Corporation's company in staging the scenes in "The Lily of Poverty Flat" at Boulder Creek this month are eight champion broncho-busters, rope-throwers and rifle and pistol shots. Their leader contends that no other eight cowboys in the United States can equal them in skill.

Despite the temptation to use this talent in some typical "Western" motion pictures, the directors have adhered to their resolution to keep away from the overworked rodeo stunts and hold their photoplays on a higher plane. "Western," under the influence of the California Motion Picture Corporation, will, in the future, be an adjective which will mean something higher than bucking ponies and romping lariat throwers. It will stand for those things in the film world, which Bret Harte represented in the field of literature.

Although these vaqueros will do no "Wild West" antics before the camera in "The Lily of Poverty Flat," they will have an opportunity to exhibit both their skill and daring in the role of Indians, who, in the scenario, shoot up a stage-coach and capture the horses on the dead run. They will be miners and gamblers and vigilantes and other characters in the Sierran photoplay, but they won't be cowboys in the popular acceptance of the term.

In the squad of horsemen are Johnny Judd, the rope champion of the world nine successive times; Johnnie Dobbins, champion broncho-buster and "bull-dogger" of wild steers; "Texas" George Briggs; "Curly" Fletcher, champion bull rider; Heine Snow, expert broncho rider, and "Mickey," "Jack" and "Tom" Melrick, all champion rope and tie men and skilled in the use of the lasso.

This troupe could put on a Class A "Buffalo Bill" show and astound the circus world, just as they are daily making the little town of Boulder Creek sit up and take notice.

Harry A. Sherman, of Minneapolis, Minn., formerly president of the Sherman Feature Film Company, has organized a separate exchange for the handling of features for the territory of North and South Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Mr. Sherman's visit to New York is for the purpose of contracting for the year's output of the various feature manufacturers, for the exclusive rights for his territory, and has signed a contract with the Life Photo Film Corporation for their entire output for the year, commencing with "The Avalanche."

The results of Mr. Sherman's endeavors while connected with the Sherman Feature Film Company have caused several capitalists to back him financially in an enlargement of his enterprise, and it is predicted that he will be the head of the exchange to be reckoned with in his territory.

Mr. Sherman owned the Alco franchise for his territory before its disruption, and the sudden withdrawal of that programme was also responsible for his visit to the city.

TOM INCE HEADS BURLESQUE COMPANY.

Thos. H. Ince has added another string to his bow.

Plus all his other activities, he has arranged to take the presidency of a burlesque company with headquarters in Los Angeles, California.

This organization, to be known as the Western Burlesque Wheel Company, will control theaters in cities on the Pacific Coast from the Gulf to the Canadian line.

STRECKYMANS RELEASES A TWO-REEL SCREAM.

Hector J. Streckymans, well known motion picture man at present associated with the Progressive Motion Picture Co., has increased the size of his hat. Thursday morning of last week he became the proud papa of a pair of bouncing baby boys. Hector, Jr., first half of the two-reel scream, lustily announced that he weighed six pounds and was going in for high class comedy. Howard Thomas, weighing six and one-half pounds, thinks he will be a press agent like his dad. Mrs. Streckymans and the babies are doing nicely.

BEN DRUM, WORLD FILM'S WASHINGTON MANAGER.

Ben Drum, formerly manager of the Denver branch of the World Film Corporation, is now the manager in Washington for the same organization. Mr. Drum is a brother of the Western division manager, Harry C. Drum, of the World Film Corporation.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE LADY OF THE SNOWS" (Essanay).

"The Lady of the Snows," dramatized from the novel of that title by Edith Ogden Harrison, wife of Mayor Carter H. Harrison, of Chicago, has just been completed by Essanay and is released March 12. The novel was a great success and critics who have seen the picture declare it is both interesting and picturesque.

Mrs. Harrison was a constant attendant at the studios when the picture was being produced, and took an active part in directing the work. The photoplay is a thrilling romance of the Canadian northwest woods. A young Englishman goes to Canada, where he joins the mounted police, after he has been rejected by the girl he loved.

She marries another man because of his fortune, but regrets her act when she finds she is miserable. She follows the man she really loved and tries to win him back. He, however, will have nothing more to do with her. He falls in love with an unspoiled girl of the Canadian woods and his first love does everything possible to prevent the match. After many difficulties and thrilling experiences the young Englishman finally wins her hand.

With Richard C. Travers, who was born in the Canadian woods, as leading man, and Miss Edna Mayo, who spent three seasons in the Canadian wilds, as leading woman, the play is produced with exceptional realism.

"A DEAL WITH THE DEVIL" (Great Northern).

The excellent judgment of the Great Northern Film Company is again proven in this production, which teaches a moral so strong and impressive that it is bound to have its good effect upon the spectator. Olaf Fonss, the eminent actor, plays the leading role in the impersonation of Walter Fabre, an ambitious medical student whose sole energies are concentrated in becoming rich and famous. In his dream Mephistopheles assists him to his life's aspiration by supplying him with the superhuman power of foretelling a patient's death or recovery. His fame is established after he saves the doomed King's life. But when, after several futile attempts to thwart his master his own little daughter dies, and shortly thereafter Mephisto appears at the head of his bed saying he has come to exact punishment for the endeavors Walter made to cheat him, he awakens from his dream and realizes that riches and fame are not the only components of life.

LE BRANDT—SPECIAL SCENARIO WRITER.

Joseph LeBrandt, whose advertisement appears in another column of this issue, has decided to enter the motion picture field as a special scenario writer. Mr. LeBrandt should make good in this particular line as he has had years of theatrical experience and has acquired a knowledge of dramatic situations and values calculated to fit him for just such work as is required by the picture producer. He wrote "By the Governor's Order," a two-reel special released by the Vitagraph Company, upon which there were many favorable comments.

A PERFECT LOVE DRAMA.

A charming little story of true love, as opposed to a title and a loveless marriage, is furnished in "The Echo," a one-reel drama which Thos. Ricketts and his co-workers are producing at the American studios. In the cast are Vivian Rich, Louise Lester, Harry Von Meter, David Lythgoe, Jack Richardson, Reaves Eason and Perry Banks. The realistic impersonation of the characters involved convey the fullest sense of the story, which could not be trimmed nor added to with advantage to the presentation. "The Echo" will be released March 10, 1915.

"PATSY AMONG THE FAIRIES" (Lubin).

Nothing could be more beautifully inconsistent than to disport Patsy to fairyland, but in this number we find him transmogrified into Puck and excelling in mischief among the immortals of the "Midsummer Night's Dream." It is all a dream, nevertheless very enjoyable as he gets revenge for many wrongs inflicted upon him by Sykesy, Old man Grace and others. Queen Titania offers him three wishes which he promptly voices and he sees Sykesy being beautifully henpecked by Tilly, his wife, who has developed into a veritable shrew. Old Grace is sentenced to ride head downward on a bicycle for the remainder of his life. The cruel schoolmaster is turned into a scarecrow and held by a Boogaboo while Patsy thrashes him as long as his breath lasts. He then begs for some reward to balance his past suffering and Cupid suggests that nothing can equal the love of a sweet girl, and he invokes the constantly loyal Jane, who joyfully permits herself to be led to the marital altar of Fairyland. Patsy's happiness being completed he awakes and finds himself drenched by a pelting rainfall. He takes refuge under the top of a farmer's wagon just as it starts for market and for the first time is taken to the great city. The cast of the act is excellent, embracing most of the stellar characters of the serial and those who have followed the story will feel grateful to Clay M. Greene for giving poor Patsy a little bit of happiness if only in a dream.

"SATAN SANDERSON" (Rolfe).

The first release of the Metro Pictures Corporation, the newly organized corporation, composed of prominent exchange men, will be B. A. Rolfe's production of the highly interesting and widely popular novel Satan Sanderson, with Scene from "Satan Sanderson" (Rolfe).

Orrin Johnson in the title role, supported by a special cast, including Irene Warfield.

In Satan Sanderson, there are numerous novelties, including a great number of double and triple exposures, one of which is shown herewith. For the exteriors, Director Noble took his company to Augusta, Ga., and there staged the last portions of the picture.

Satan Sanderson will be released by Metro, March 8, through the releasing branches composing the parent body of that company. Shortly following this Rolfe production, will come "The Cowboy and the Lady," a thrilling drama of the West, but so staged as to mingle the modern with the ante-bellum, and thus give a popular western a new and novel atmosphere.

ENGAGE WELL-KNOWN STARS FOR AMERICAN.

Under the personal supervision of President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Mfg. Co., the organizing of the second feature company is rapidly nearing completion. This new company will be under the direction of Thos. Ricketts and composed of stars selected from the ranks of well-known stage and photoplay artists.

Harold Lockwood, whose success on the screen with the Famous Players productions is known to thousands of picture lovers, and Miss Elsie Jane Wilson, who played the title role in "Everywoman" and other dramatic triumphs, will be assigned to leading parts. Irving Cummings, at present with the Beauty Company, will be transferred to the feature company and cast in juvenile and character parts. The heavy leads will be acted by Hal Clements and William Ephe, and Lucy Payton will appear in other leads.

The first production to be staged by this feature company will be Harold MacGrath's "Lure of the Mask," published by Bobbs-Merrill Co., which affords an exceptional opportunity for these well-known artists to display their talent.

W. LINDSAY GORDON HEADS BEAVER FILM CORPORATION.

The Beaver Film Corporation announce that they will build a new studio at Dongan Hills, Staten Island, New York City. Plans are now being filed with the building department and ground will be broken at once. The studio will be completed by June 1st and will be most modern and up-to-date in every respect, many new and novel ideas having been worked out. The Beaver Film Corporation will produce single, double and triple reel features. W. Lindsay Gordon is president and general manager. The temporary offices of the company will be at 207 West 34th street, New York City, where Mr. Gordon has been located for the past twelve years.

PICTURE THEATER ARCHITECTS.

C. Howard Crane and his asociate, Percival R. Pereira, who have constructed a large number of theaters in the United States and Canada, announce that they have opened offices at 500 Fifth avenue, New York, and are making a specialty in the construction of motion picture houses. This firm maintains an office in the Dime Savings Bank Building, Detroit, Mich.

KLEINE TO HANDLE FOUR FEATURES.

Four George Kleine attractions, "Vendetta," "Othello," "Judge Not" and "The Golden Beetle," which heretofore have been booked through the special feature departments of the General Film Company, are now available for rental through the thirteen Kleine branch offices. "Othello," made in Venice, at great expense, is a scenic, historic and dramatic masterpiece and closely follows the Shakesperean classic in story and setting. "Vendetta" is in five parts and by many considered the best modern drama ever released under the Kleine standard. "Judge Not" and "The Golden Beetle" are four strong four-part subjects.

"BILL GIVES A SMOKER" (Komic-Mutual).

"Bill Gives a Smoker," a one reel Komic release in the Mutual program, is number eighteen in the "Bill" series, all of which have been adapted to the film from the stories by Paul West. The production was made by Eddie Dillon. Fay Tincher, as Ethel, the stenographer, and Bobby Feuhrer, as Bill, are featured in the cast. The story deals with Bill's adventures after he had made free use of his employer's monogrammed cigarettes without that gentleman's knowledge, and with what happened to Ethel in that same connection.

KING BAGGOT AS A COSTERMONGER.

King Baggot has played a variety of roles in his time and makes it a point, if possible, to essay a new role each time he appears upon the screen. Recently he appeared as a high-caste Chinese in "An Oriental Romance."

In "The Five Pound Note," an Imp two-reel drama to be released on March 12, he enacts the part of an English costermonger. And although the picture was mercilessly dissected by Stuart Paton, himself an Englishman, there is not one false note struck in the film although all the action was staged right here in New York and on Long Island.

In the accompanying photograph Baggot is seen leading a patient little donkey attached to his coster cart, on which are stacked up vegetables of the sort which decorate the stalls of London green grocers. Frame and plaster houses of Elizabethan design are seen in the background. Baggot is in coster attire.

Surrounding his cart and Jenny mule are his friends, upper-class Englishmen, who have bet him that he cannot earn a pound note by honest work. These friends come to taunt him as he is at work and throw his green goods about. Another English coster, with whose daughter Baggot later falls in love, comes up to assist his fellow coster against the bloomin' toffs who are apparently intent upon wrecking Baggot's stock of wares.

Some of the back-alley scenes in "The Five Pound Note" were taken down underneath the Brooklyn Bridge, where there are so many out of the way little streets which remind one much of the quaint wandering lanes in the vicinity of Whitechapel and Bow Bells.

During the projection of the picture in the Universal Pompeiian room President Laemmle offered $5 to any one present who could discover an anachronism. Joe Brandt, the Universal's professional globe-trotter, belligerently arranged his lemon-colored screen glasses on the bridge of his nose, intent upon securing that $5 but, alas, he as well as every one else present failed to detect any false "color" and the $5 was turned over to the office boy's Yuletide fund.

"THE LADY OF THE CYCLAMEN" (Selig).

A Selig drama, in two reels, "The Lady of the Cyclamen," telling a story of the ways of the infinite, will be released Monday, March 8. Edward J. Le Saint produced the drama from the scenario written by Maibelle Heikes Justice.

Scene from "The Lady of the Cyclamen" (Selig).

This production is interesting in many ways and is particularly notable for the unusual ending which has been advocated by so many film critics.

Stella Razeto, Guy Oliver, Lamar Johnstone, and others take leads in the beautiful pictureplay.

"A WOMAN WENT FORTH" (Lubin).

Shannon Fife has written another very intense story and succeeded in getting it cast by a very talented pick of the Lubin players. Great care has also been exercised in the setting which is beautiful and in excellent taste.

Scene from "A Woman Went Forth" (Lubin).

The cast includes Ethel Clayton, Joseph Kaufman, Florence Hackett, Jack Delson, Clara Lambert and a number of others.

NEW OFFICES FOR SELIG.

The executive offices of the Selig Polyscope Company will be moved, early in April, from the present location, 20 East Randolph Street, to the Garland Building, corner Washington Street and Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill. The continually increasing business of the Selig Polyscope Company makes it almost impossible for the employees in the executive departments to longer occupy the present location which for some time has proved too small to accommodate heads of departments, clerks, publicity men, projection room, etc. The new executive offices will be expensively furnished and the windows will overlook Lake Michigan. Other than the private offices of William N. Selig, president, and J. A. Berst, vice-president, there will be commodious quarters assigned to departmental heads and other employees. The furnishings of the new offices will compare favorably in beauty and conveniences with any similar offices in this country. Friends and patrons of the Selig Polyscope Company will be cordially welcomed to the new executive offices early in April.

ALLIANCE TO OPEN CAMPAIGN IN NORTHERN NEW JERSEY.

The Alliance Films Corporation is preparing to add still another office to its large list of exchanges. The new branch will handle the Alliance Programme in Northern New Jersey and will have its headquarters in the Strand Building in Newark. L. P. Goldbaum who recently resigned as auditor of the Alliance home office will be in charge. S. T. Baron will be associated with him in the management of the new exchange.

President Cobe in line with his policy of rendering the greatest service to the exhibitor intends to make this exchange the most complete and finest equipped in the New Jersey Territory.

Mr. Goldbaum while a new recruit to the ranks of exchangemen, has been for several years connected in executive capacities with a number of film concerns and understands the motion picture field thoroughly.

Notes of the Trade

THE SPEED Controller Company, Inc., have shipped a total of nine of their arc controllers for use at the Panama Exposition by the government and other exhibits.

Harry Grelle, manager of the Grelle Feature Film Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., was a visitor in New York the past week and secured the Sterling Camera & Film Co.'s feature "The Land of the Lost" for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Miriam Cooper and Elmer Clifton are featured in the one-reel Majestic-Mutual release "His Return." The production was made by R. A. Walsh, who has given this charming romance adequate settings and treatment.

The Victor Company, with Ben Wilson, were taking some scenes on Ellis Island for their latest play, "Ladder of Fortune," when, without any warning, an officer grabbed Ben by the arm and marched him off to the detention room, where he was held as an "escaped immigrant." His make-up was so perfect that even the authorities were fooled—and then they all had a good laugh.

Max Westebbe, although a German by birth, has been doing wonderful work for the past few years for Hepworth Limited, of London, and up to the beginning of the European war was in their employ. The conditions at present make it impossible for him to continue longer in the services of an English company in England, so Mr. Westebbe is in New York and very anxious to make connections here.

Director Eugene Nowland, Edison, has received the following unusual compliments regarding two educational films which he made for the New York State Department of Health; the letter comes from Mr. C. E. A. Winslow, Director of the Division of Publicity and Education: "I want, on behalf of the department, to express to you our warm appreciation of the admirable success that you have attained in the preparation of our two moving picture films, 'Bringing It Home' and 'In His Father's Footsteps.' These are by far the most effective public health educational films that have ever been prepared and this result is, of course, due to your skill and to that of the excellent cast which you provided. When 'In His Father's Footsteps' was shown at Jacksonville at the American Public Health Association meeting, Dr. Havens Emerson, Deputy Commissioner of New York City Health Department, said to me, 'As a hardened medical man of twenty years' practice, I want to tell you that I had tears in my eyes.'"

Barry O'Neil has begun the filming of Clyde Fitch's powerful society drama, "The Climbers." The scenario for this was made by Clay M. Greene. Miss Gladys Hanson has been engaged especially for this production, and she will be supported by a strong cast, which includes George Soule Spencer, Jack Standing, Charles Brandt, Ruth Bryan, Rosetta Brice, Peter Lang and Ferdinand Tidmarsh.

Kathlyn Williams, one of the star actresses of the Selig Company, was successful on the stage before entering upon motion picture work.

Margaret Thompson (Mrs. Eugene H. Allen in private life), leading woman of the Domino company, shows that she knows something about the ways of the west in "Satan McAllister's Heir," a release of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. She is called upon in a number of scenes to mount and ride a spirited western horse, and she responds nobly, considering the fact that she is not a product of the plains.

A wonderful three-reel feature photoplay, with Hobart Henley, Matt Moore, William Welsh and Dorothy Phillips, has been released by the Imp-Universal Company, without any title. Any picture fan who sends in a title with a fifty-word explanation has a chance of winning $50, as a prize contest editor will award the above-mentioned amount to the person suggesting the most appropriate title.

A postal card received from Miss Eleanor Woodruff post marked Bracketville, Texas, states that the perils that befell Pauline has nothing on the excitement that she is running into in her present work. Between dodging cactus and Mexicans, the daily life of a picture actress is just one thrill after another.

Charles Ray had a narrow escape from injury the other day on his way to work at Santa Monica. The axle of his car broke and the car turned turtle, but Ray jumped and was not even scratched—it is his bank balance which has suffered most. Ray has been singularly unfortunate with his automobile and has had more than his full share of trouble, but he says he is thankful that he has never been hurt and believes he bears a charmed life—so mote it be. Ray is taking the lead in an Oriental picture in which he is a young officer, and is giving an artistic presentation as usual.

Violet MacMillan, the lately acquired leading woman of the Kay-Bee company, gives a fine portrayal of an innocent country lass who is lured by the circus in "The Phantom on the Hearth," a release of the New York Motion Picture Corporation as a part of the Mutual Program March 18. Miss Mac Millan's interpretation is sweet and graceful throughout the picture, and it is regarded as one of the finest pieces of work she has ever done.

Mary Fuller is now playing in a new photoplay by Elaine Sterne, the prize-winning author, entitled "The Duke and the Dinner." Not an inkling of the plot can be derived from this title, but it is known that the climax comes as a unique surprise. Miss Fuller is very enthusiastic about this production and is anxiously waiting for its completion. Lucius Henderson is the director.

Emmett Campbell Hall, the Lubin scenario writer, happened in at the Lubin studio this week with a kitful of new photoplays and, incidentally, to look things over. Hall, unlike many of the other Lubin writers, does scarcely any writing at the studio. He lives in Glen Echo, Maryland, and spends practically all of his time there writing. Periodically he emerges from his retreat, always accompanied by a number of new photoplays.

Disregard Indictments

Lexington Exhibitors, Led by J. H. Stapmer, of Orpheum, and Other Well-Known Picture Men, Disregard Order for Sunday Closing and Many Are Reindicted —New Indictments Against Nelson Van H. Gurnee, of Ada Mead Theater, and Manager Burton, of the Gem.

By G. D. Craine, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE "scrap" between the city authorities of Lexington, Ky., and the moving picture exhibitors over Sunday closing is going merrily on. A number of the exhibitors, who were recently indicted by the Grand Jury on Saturday, opened their houses on the following Sunday as usual. No attempt was made by the authorities to close the houses, arrest the proprietors or interfere in any way with the shows. County Attorney Hogan Yancey announced last week that the indictments would be withdrawn if the exhibitors would agree to close their houses between the hours of 7 and 8.30 o'clock Sunday evenings. J. H. Stamper and other well-known picture men promptly declined to close at any time on that day. Following the action of the motion picture men re-indictments were returned against John H. Stamper, Jr., owner of the Orpheum theater, and the Colonial Amusement Company and the Star theater. Nelson Van Hoten Gurnee, proprietor of the Ada Meade theater, was indicted for the first time as he was not in town at the previous inquiry. Manager Burton, of the Gem theater, conducted exclusively for negroes, was also indicted for the first time.

LOUISVILLE FILM BUSINESS BEING CENTRALIZED

Three Big Companies Lead All Others in Commanding Louisville's Picture Trade.

The moving picture business in Louisville is now getting around to a point where it is practically owned and controlled by limited interests. These interests are the Switow Amusement Company, the Broadway Theaters Company and the Princess Amusement Company, which is clesely allied to the Majestic Amusement Company. At the same time the Switow and Broadway companys' interests are also closely allied. A deal has just been made whereby the Novelty theater, which was operated as an opposition house to the Alamo theater, owned and controlled by stockholders in the Broadway Amusement Company and the Switow Amusement Company, has been purchased from D. Levenson by M. Switow, who is president of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company and the Switow Amusement Company. Mr. Switow has announced that the house will be done over at an expense of about $5,000 and will be operated by the Switow Amusement Company. D. Levenson will probably return to his former home at Shelbyville, Ind. W. T. McLane continues as manager of the Novelty.

KENTUCKY FILM CORPORATION TO PRODUCE PICTURES.

The Kentucky Film Corporation has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000, divided into 5,000 shares of the par value of $5. The company's object will be making motion picture films, operating motion picture houses, and dispensing pictures to other show houses. The incorporators and their holdings are: Elizabeth Schaffer, who is named as president, 835 shares; Emma Meffert, vice-president, 835 shares, and Otto Schaffer, secretary-treasurer, 835 shares. The corporation is authorized to incur an indebtedness not to exceed the amount of the capital stock. The company expects to establish a complete production studio at its temporary quarters, 310 East Gray street. A quantity of machinery and equipment is now on the road. When the equipment is installed it will be the first plant of its kind operated in the city. Comedy films and the lighter forms of dramatic plays will be produced, featuring the two juvenile motion picture actresses, Otis Elizabeth and Mary Pauline Shaefer, who are well known to the Louisville public. A cut was recently reproduced in one of the local newspapers representing the two children in one of their acts, a burletta on Salome.

PROJECTING MACHINES AS PRIZES

Louisville Evening Post Starts Contest —Offers Six Projectors to Educational Associations.

The Louisville Evening Post, one of the strongest supporters of the moving picture industry in Louisville, has inaugurated a new "stunt" whereby six pathescope machines will be given to parochial schools and Parent-Teacher Associations through a contest which is being run in the paper. A coupon good for twenty-five votes is issued in every copy of the papers, which when signed and filled in with the name of some association or school will be credited in the contest. With every paid-in subscription to the paper the subscriber will also be entitled to a number of votes ranging from 1,000 to 6,000, according to the number of months the subscription is to run. The six machines are valued at $175 each. Four machines will be given to the Parent-Teacher Association getting the most votes, and two machines will go to the parochial schools.

LOUISVILLE BRIEFS.

M. Switow, president of the Switow Amusement Company, of Louisville, and James Button, a real estate dealer, have a deal on whereby they expect to convert a large livery stable owned by G. D. Wilson in Lexington, Ky., into a motion picture house. An option has been secured on the property, it is stated. The property is on East Main street opposite the Union Railroad station. F. J. Manley, a Lexington architect, has been consulted concerning the alterations which would be necessary for converting the building into a theater.

The New Albany Theater Amusement Company, which operates the Kerrigan theater in New Albany, Ind., is negotiating with J. C. McManus for the purchase of the Home theater on Vincennes street, near King. If the deal is consummated the company will tear down the present building and erect a new theater to cost about $25,000.

Through the efforts of the Parent-Teacher Association, of the Duncan street school, of Louisville, an educational picture show was recently held at 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon after school was over for the day. The meeting was held in the schoolhouse and a large attendance is reported.

Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Board of Censorship, was recently in Louisville and delivered an address before the Louisville Board of Censors, who censor all pictures shown at the Mary Anderson theater, which are shown on Saturday mornings to children. The meeting was held in the Young Men's Christian Association headquarters.

Miss Aline Sandifer, ticket seller at the Colonial theater, of Lexington, a daughter of Mrs. Addie Sandifer, of Lexington, and J. D. Durfey, a musician at the Orpheum theater, were recently married at the residence of the Rev. Charles Lee Reynolds, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Lexington.

Mary Pickford scored another big triumph at the Majestic theater in "Mistress Nell," the Famous Players Production.

Mrs. Leslie Carter made such a hit in Louisville a few weeks ago in "Du Barry," that the management of the Alamo theater ran the pictures under a return engagement after having numerous calls for a return of the celebrated pictures. The three-part Lubin production of "The Regenerating Love" and "Heart Beats," a two-part Reliance production, were other big hits at the theater.

Fred Sheldon, of the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, recently made a trip to Chicago to purchase additional films. Business is increasing steadily with the concern and a good many new comedies and features are being purchased. Charles Pressy, president of the company, is now in Tampa. He will shortly make a trip to Jacksonville, and expects to be in Louisville about April 1.

James Hoagland and Robert B. Gordon, two electricians working on the new Hilltop theater, were recently injured by falling twenty-five feet to the ground when a scaffold let go. The accident was a very peculiar one and was accounted for by a blast of wind when the fire doors of the engine company next door were thrown open when an alarm was sounded.

M. A. Jablow, manager of the Hippodrome theater at Second and Market streets, recently started a popularity contest which has done much toward improving business at the theater. With every ticket purchased, a coupon is given which is good for twenty votes. The number of contestants finally dwindled until only about twenty now have any chance at the three prizes hung up in the contest. The pictures of these twenty contestants and their names are flashed on the screen in order at every performance. The prizes consist of a diamond cluster ring, a watch bracelet and a lavalliere, the three prizes having a cash value of $185.

Manager Joseph Goldberg, of the Olympic theater, at Preston and Market streets, has attracted a good deal of attention with Robert Seymour, 15, known as "Louisville's Blind Boy Genius." For several months young Seymour, who is totally blind, has been entertaining the patrons of the theater with vocal and instrumental solos. Arrangements were recently made whereby the blind boy gave several selections at the first installment of "Runaway June."

The Co-operative Photoplay Theater Company, of Hopkinsville, Ky., was recently incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000. The stock is divided into 1,000 shares of the value of $100 a share. The company is empowered to buy, lease or sell property and to do all things pertaining to the operation of moving picture shows. The life of the company is set at twenty-five years. The incorporators are J. L. Shrode, S. L. Peace and Miss A. D. Davis.

WISCONSIN NEWS LETTER.

By Midwest Moving Picture World Special News Service.

MOVING picture theaters in Marshfield now pay the same license fee as the saloons. The city council passed an ordinance increasing the rate from $50 to $200 a year. The Unique and the Adler opera house contemplated raising the admission for children from five to ten cents to make up the deficiency.

The moving picture show at Plainfield was destroyed by fire.

Max Nathan has sold his interest in the Virginian theater at Kenosha to his partner, Al Meis, who is now in sole control. Nathan will engage in the picture business in Southern Illinois.

J. E. Kubat, a former clothier of Chippewa Falls, has purchased the Empire theater at Chippewa Falls from Newton Cannon.

J. V. Hogan and Edwin Lord of the Rex theater at Beloit installed a new Powers 6A machine in the high school at that place.

Workings of the Moose lodge were demonstrated in film at a "Moose Night" at the Auditorium in Stoughton.

JACKSONVILLE NEWS BRIEFS.

By Leon Louiso, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AFTER completing the Alice Joyce series, Miss Alice Joyce has left for New York City. Miss Joyce finished up in "The Face of the Madonna" this week. She intends to take a few weeks rest. Information as to what she would do after that was not given. Miss Dorothy Benard, who recently came down to Jacksonville, will take the leading parts in productions under the direction of Director Kenean Buel. Miss Benard is a well-known player. She will commence work at once.

Auriema, a female impersonator, who has been working at the Grand theater here, worked in some scenes in one of the Kalem pictures this week. The scenes were taken with a theater audience, and Auriema introduced a part of his act into the picture.

Some of the members of the Kalem company are busily engaged at extra spare moments in studying French. A class is held at the Kalem house, regularly, and some of the members of the class are quickly mastering the language.

Miss Alice Hollister was the recipient of an amethist ring from Geo. K. Hollister a few days ago. The set is about an inch in length and is of oval shape. Miss Hollister prizes the gift very highly. It was imported from Burma.

Storm V. Boyd stage manager of the Kalem studio will have charge of arrangements and decorations for the big open air dance which will be given here on one of the downtown streets. The affair is being given to boost the Florida State Fair in Jacksonville.

Mr. J. Howard, president of the Bijou Amusement Incorporation, of Wilmington, N. C., was in the city recently. He is spending a part of the winter in Florida. He was a visitor at the Universal office.

A new theater is under course of construction in the colored folks section of the city. The theater is being put up by the Strand Amusement Company. The capacity will be 1,300 and the opening is set for March 29.

The Republic theater will soon begin presenting Shubert-Brady films, under the World Film releases and the entire releases of the Alliance program. Signor Di Maria, baritone singer, will be the added novelty number for the next week.

BRIEFS FROM SOUTHWEST.

By Midwest Moving Picture World Special News Service.

A FILM exchange for the schools of Arkansas or a Bureau of Visual Instruction is advocated by Dr. J. R. Jewell, Dean of the College of Education, University of Arkansas, at Fayetteville. Doctor Jewell is citing the extension work of the University of Wisconsin, which has machines, films and slides in a great many schools of that state.

Arrests for operating moving picture theaters on Sunday were made at Little Rock, Ark. In each case the manager and an operator were arrested. They were: Gem, Saul Harris, manager, and Ernest Garrett; Royal, A. E. Hanger and Ben Smart, and Palace, T. A. Arnold and C. L. McGowan.

The Majestic theater at Paragould, Ark., operated by M. F. Block and H. J. Whitsitt, was destroyed by fire. Loss on the equipment was about $3,700.

The Garrick Theater company of Dallas, Tex., has been incorporated with capital stock of $6,500. The incorporators are C. W. Hartman, H. F. Hartman and L. B. Alford.

A. S. Mims, recently of Waxahachie, has been made manager of the Odeon theater at Fort Worth, Tex.

A room in the Holland block at Orange, Tex., is being converted into a moving picture theater.

Newsboys who were guests of Manager Healey of the Healey theater at Fort Worth, Tex., were asked to bring their mothers to see "Are They Born or Are They Made," the Jack Rose (Becker trial fame) picture.

Nashville Strand Opens

New Theater Has Screen Towards Entrance and Exits—In Case of Fire in Booth Spectators Will Be Moving Away from Danger Zone—Owned by Dixie Amusement Company—Who Its Officers Are and Kind of Pictures It Provides.

By G. D. Craine, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Dixie Amusement Company, of Nashville, Tenn., is going a step farther than any of the other Nashville theaters in an attempt to promote "Safety First" and reducing the firehazard in the moving picture house. The company has just completed the "Strand," a new theater at 235 Fifth avenue. In this theater the seats are reversed and the moving picture machine is placed at the rear of the theater, with the screen at the entrance. Patrons are thereby given seats at the entrance to the house as they enter, and in case anything were to go wrong in the operating room the patrons would not be cut off from the main exits at the front of the house, as the most dangerous place in the building would be behind the audience. Various attempts have been made in the past to reduce the fire hazard in picture theaters. Among the most important of these trials was that of throwing the pictures on the screen from behind. This plan never proved satisfactory, however, and was finally abandoned by the exhibitors who tried it out. The officers of the company operating the new theater are: Hugh M. Waddle, president; Roy C. Shelton, vice-president, and Hiram A. Waddle, secretary-treasurer. The new theater is exceptionally handsome and money was lavishly spent in decorations and equipment. It will show World Film productions and also Box Office Attractions. The initial performance showed "Mignon," with Beatriz Michelena, the noted star in "Salomy Jane," and "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Other productions booked for the first week's run were "The Thief" and "Lew Fields' Comedy Success."

EYE STRAIN QUESTION.

Optical Journal Starts Discussion in Nashville—Simple Remedy for Irritated Eyes.

Tennessee exhibitors have been much interested in a recent article published by the Optical Journal and other publications. This article was written by Samuel Samuel and suggested that moving pictures be tinted yellow instead of white to take strain away from the eyes. The article in question was as follows: "The enormous increase in the number of optometrists now practising can probably be attributed more directly to the moving picture shows than to any other cause. The constant flicker taxes the focusing muscles (ciliary); the marvelous photographic plate (retina) in the back of the eye has to telegraph messages to the brain far more frequently than usual, and last, but not least, is the effect of the white glare of the screen. As the optometrist well knows, this light is especially rich in short ultra-violet rays which are the most active and intense and consequently most irritating. Every person who frequents the shows should visit an optometrist and purchase a pair of large amber lenses, preferably in spectacles. I prefer an amber tint, as it filters the light better than smoked or blue glass. As thas suggestion will not be followed by everyone, I hereby suggest that pictures be shown in yellow only, where white was used before. A law to this effect should be enacted." The moving picture men will not argue with Mr. Samuel regarding the greater part of the article, but it is certain that Mr. Samuel would find there would be a great deal of opposition to the plan on the part of the producing companies, the Kinemacolor Company and other concerns if any agitation was brought forward concerning "yellow only." We may add the tired focusing muscles due to dust infection from the street are apt to catch conjunctivitis, inflammation or "cold in the eye." A harmless remedy for this is a 30 per cent. solution of argyrol, one drop in each eye. Any druggist has this in stock.

SATISFIED TO LET THEM TRY IT.

J. B. Goring, of New York, was recently in Knoxville, where he negotiated with the owners of Straub's theater for an arrangement whereby the theater could be used for an indefinite run by a stock company. It is proposed to run every evening and two matinees weekly. The motion picture men felt satisfied that the plan will not be successful if adopted in Knoxville. The moving picture houses have taken such a hold upon the public and are showing such high class productions that old style stock company productions stand very small chance of making good.

LOCAL CENSORSHIP DEAD FOR PRESENT.

Following the second failure of Mayor Thompson, of Chattanooga, to put through his censorship plan, the idea was dropped for the time being at least, and the exhibitors do not expect to be troubled with censorship. The Pastors' Association is very strongly in favor of censorship and is keeping after the Mayor and other city officials in an attempt to have all pictures passed by a local board of censors.

TENNESSEE BRIEFS.

S. I. Connor and Otto Gilmore of the Tennessee Commission to the Panama exposition, took pictures of the Ward-Belmont and City High Schools in Nashville. The pictures were shown the next afternoon on the screen at the Princess theater and on the following Saturday morning. They were taken by Mr. Gilmore and later developed with equipment belonging to the Crescent Amusement Company. A tour of the state has been commenced and the films will be widely seen here and later at the Panama exposition if the legislature of the state acts favorably on a $25,000 appropriation bill on March 15.

J. E. Bernstein, of the Monarch Film Company, of Memphis, Tenn., left recently for Louisville, Chicago, Indianapolis and other Northern cities, where he expects to purchase a number of films for use in the Memphis exchange. He also is interested in the Monarch Machine Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, and handles the machine through the Memphis exchange.

Considerable interest is taken in the operations shown at the immense stone quarries at Knoxville, Tenn., taken for use at the exposition.

E. J. Pearson, of Memphis, Tenn., was recently awarded the contract on the new motion picture show house to be erected at Lamar and Waldran streets. Hanker & Cairns are the architects.

The fifth episode of "Runaway June" was recently shown at Majestic theater No. 2 in Memphis. Majestic No. 1 recently showed Marguerite Clark in "The Goose Girl," the Lasky-Paramount feature, for three days. Charlie Chaplin in the Essanay production, "His New Job," a comedy, was recently shown at the Empire theater No. 1. Empire theater No. 2 is playing a good deal of comedy, including Keystone and Thanhouser productions.

ILLINOIS POLITICAL DOINGS OF INTEREST TO EXHIBITORS

Clinton Commissioner Criticises Theaters—Sunday Opening in Danville and Galesburg.

By Frank H. Madison, Moving Picture World Special Correspondent.

THE alleged lack of safety precautions in moving picture houses in Clinton was given an airing at a recent meeting of the City Commission. Commissioner Kirk and Fire Chief Smith said aisles were crowded in some houses. The fire chief said that one manager gave a cynical reply when asked to stop the practice. The City Attorney was instructed to seek a statute on which prosecutions might be based.

Exhibitors and others in Danville have been agitating the Sunday opening question and petitions have been circulated asking that the matter be placed on the ballots at the regular election April 20.

The petition filed at Galesburg, to have a referendum vote on the Sunday picture show, bore 2,000 signatures, thereby ranking as the chief issue of the election. The opponents of the Sunday show retained an attorney to investigate the petition.

AMERICAN EXHIBITOR SUCCEEDS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Levin & Bayard, owners of the Varsity theater at Champaign, are making a success of their Majestic theater at Cape Town, South Africa. Mrs. Levin and children have been making plans to join Mr. Levin, who has been there a year. The house at Cape Town, seating 1,000, is modeled after American houses and boasts a mirror screen. It cost $22,000.

GOVERNOR OF ILLINOIS LIKES "THE SPOILERS."

Illinois exhibitors have been taking advantage of the testimonial written by Gov. Edward F. Dunne after he saw "The Spoilers." This picture is unquestionably one of the strongest features shown in Illinois and the fight scene one of the most mentioned incidents of a photoplay. One of a party of business men, discussing the film, in the presence of a representative of The World, said the realism of this battle had led him to make four trips to a theater where it was showing.

MARK TWAIN COUNTRY TO BE FILMED.

That portion of the Mississippi River, made famous by the writings of Mark Twain, and some picturesque wilds, heretofore little known, will be exploited by a new producing concern, the Mississippi Valley Film company, with headquarters at Quincy. In addition to some experienced moving picture men, whose identity is to be announced later, Perry C. Ellis, a prominent Illinois editor, and Peter Pinkelman, the Quincy exhibitor, W. B. Sheets and Sid H. Lancraft are interested. Some of the productions will have settings at Hannibal, Mo, "Lover's Leap" and the Mark Twain cave. Arrangements were made to open an office in Quincy.

LOCAL PICTURE PAPER AT GALESBURG.

"The Spotlight," a local moving picture and amusement publication, by the Lane Company, Inc., was scheduled to make its first appearance at Galesburg February 19.

ILLINOIS BRIEFS.

Grand Army men of Rockford were the guests of the Palm for a showing of "Seven and Seventy."

John W. Ruskin, of New York, was in the Tri-Cities, Rock Island and Moline, Ill., and Davenport, Ia., for three weeks with his animal life films.

The Indian Film Corporation, of Chicago, has been incorporated with capital stock of $1,000 to do a motion picture business. The incorporators are Mellen C. Martin, Dwight V. Green and Herbert Bebb.

Fred Suntken has been making arrangements to open a moving picture show in Sibley, giving one or two exhibitions a week.

Negotiations failed and J. W. Askew did not secure control of the Remington theater at Kankakee, which he planned to operate as a picture house. Mrs. Julian Remington and Sydney Stein, who have been operating the Gaiety, were reported to have made preparations to again secure control of the Remington.

Walter Wyne, a banker of Vermont, Ill., and his son Joseph have secured control of the Cort theater at Monmouth and reopened the house.

Fowler & Stults opened the Princess at Monmouth with the Universal feature, "Damon and Pythias," a new mirrored screen, a new Powers 6A machine and a three-piece orchestra. H. F. Turner of Macmb will be operator.

The Photoplay Amusement Company of Lovington has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,500, to do theater and moving picture business. The incorporators are J. M. Shepherd, B. J. Silver and Homer Shepherd.

Carl Dusidecker and W. E. Berry sold the moving picture show at Tremont to James Cooney, who has had a new home fitted up for the show.

Plans for the third moving picture theater—in the old Ditz building—at Rock Falls, have failed.

Secretary of State Stevenson at Springfield has issued a charter to the National Free Movie Ticket company of Chicago, with capital stock of $10,000, to issue free coupons for advertising by merchants. The incorporators are George Remus, Leonard B. Gratz and Arthur A. Karg.

E. Degenhardt and E. L. Fraser are now operating the Palace and Princess theaters at Mendota jointly. What theatrical and vaudeville attractions are booked will be shown at the Princess, the Palace operating exlusively as a picture house.

The Palmer school at Springfield is using moving pictures one night a week.

Joseph Bernstein has sold his interests in the Gem and Savoy theaters on Hampshire street in Quincy to Anton Padavic, who now is in sole control.

The Princess theater at Rockford has again been closed. Lack of business is blamed.

George A. Sharrock has sold the Dixie theater at Vandalia to a Mr. Myers of White Hall.

The American Commercial Film Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with capital stock of $15,000 to do a general advertising, amusement, educational, manufacturing and sales business. The incorporators are Herbert Deeming, Charles A. Pfitsch and Louis Thuringer.

D. C. Crouch, having sold a cigar store at Pekin, will devote his time to making local snapshots for moving picture houses throughout the country.

The Star theater at New Holland is being remodeled.

Too many scarlet fever cases in Decatur threatened to close the moving picture houses.

Thomas O'Dowd has added the opera house at Mt. Olive to string of shows which includes Nokomis, Hillsboro and Taylorville. Pictures will give way to reller skating on Saturday nights.

Dreamland theater at Clinton has gone out of business.

The Varsity theater at Havana has ended a six-year career.

The stage employees' local at Rockford was given a six-reel and special orchestra benefit at the Orpheum.

The new West theater at Galesburg will use a Bartola which will be played by Miss Alma Burgman, of Fort Madison, Iowa.

Feature shows, four reels long, avoiding local and theatrical attractions, is the new policy of the Opera house at Aleda.

"Be one of the 400" was the slogan of the Majestic and the Register at Albion for "The Christian." It took that attendance to let the combination out on its most pretentious picture venture.

DETROIT CONDITIONS PLEASE FIRE MARSHAL.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE deputies of the State Fire Marshal's office who completed their inspections of moving picture theaters on Feb. 11 were well satisfied with local conditions. In only a very few instances did they find anything about which to complain. The changes which they recommended will gladly be complied with.

McGRATH TAKES CHARGE OF THE MAXINE.

Ed V. McGrath, manager of the Maxine theater, Baldwin and Mack avenues, has been subject to a lot of friendly joshing since he took hold. Hundreds of people have confused him with the well-known professional singer, Eddie McGrath, whose specialty is to sing in motion picture theaters, and in consequence he has received numerous letters of congratulations. Mr. McGrath, before coming to Detroit to manage the Maxine, was manager of a theater in Hamilton, O., and has been in the theatrical business for the past 14 years, most of which time he spent in the legitimate end. He is very enthusiastic about the future of the Maxine and has under way a number of novel improvements which he will put into effect before long. Since its opening, the Maxine has played to capacity most of the time. The program is changed daily and at present is booked exclusively by the General Film Co.

SPIEGEL TALKS ABOUT STRAND.

Max Spiegel, secretary of the Strand Theater Corporation, operating the Strand theater in New York City, was in Detroit on Feb. 16. A representative of the Moving Picture World spent an hour talking with Mr. Spiegel, and listening to his wonderful description of the Strand and the reasons why it was so successful. "The Strand looks after details, watches the little things and gives that which would make any enterprise successful—quality and service. From our orchestra to our ushers we do things with precision. I have often been asked, 'Could such an enterprise pay in smaller cities?' and I say, 'Yes.' It would not be necessary to build a theater as large, but if the same plan of management, of production and of service, as well as luxurious furnishings, were carried out in houses in other cities, they too would soon be playing to capacity business practically all the time. People do not mind paying a few cents more if you give them the goods, and that's what we do at the Strand."

SHORT DETROIT ITEMS.

It is understood that David L. Stott, millionaire flour merchant and owner of the Broadway theater, is endeavoring to have introduced into the state legislature a bill permitting upstairs theaters to operate, where the building is of fireproof construction. Should Mr. Stott be able to have such a bill enacted, it is understood that he would remodel the Broadway theater building in such a way as to have retail stores on the main floor with the theater proper upstairs.

About 100 persons—clergymen, teachers, police officials, representatives of women's clubs and the press—gathered at the Washington theater at noon, Feb. 12, to witness a private exhibition of the latest Bosworth production, "Hypocrites." Everything possible was done by the management to give the presentation an atmosphere of reverence. Hymns were sung off stage and the pipe organ played church music. There was a flutter of hand-clapping at the end of fourth reel, and the consensus of opinion among those present was that there was nothing objectionable in the film. John H. Kunsky, lessee of the Washington, has decided to start an indefinite showing of this picture at that playhouse on Sunday, Feb. 28. It will remain as long as it proves a profitable attraction.

The Wayne Amusement Company, Detroit, has incorporated for $5,000 to operate and lease theaters. The principal stockholders are A. C. Stellwagen, Karl D. Haller and Hubert G. Haller.

The Broadway Feature Film Co., Detroit, has been organized with a capital stock of $10,000 to handle high-grade features. The principal stockholders are: Edward P. Butcher, Edgar I., Harry L. and Martha Garson. Harry L. Garson recently took a five-year lease on the Broadway, which is to be completely remodeled.

NEBRASKA NEWS LETTER.

By Midwest Moving Picture World Special News Service.

OFFICIALS of the Y. M. C. A. at Beatrice have adopted the noving picture to keep young men out of harmful places on Sunday afternoon. Collections have been suffcient to pay for the rental of such films as "Judith of Bethulia" and "The Passion Play." The Lyric theater is used for the purpose.

Moving pictures were on the program of the convention of the Nebraska Retail Hardware Men at Omaha.

The Sunshine club at Falls City put on a home talent program in connection with the photoplay bill at the Electric theater.

The new Gem theater has been opened at Ogalalla.

R. M. Shales has sold his half interest in the moving picture theater and airdome at Plattsmouth to J. C. Peterson, Jr.

R. W. Small of Fremont has been making arrangements to open a picture show in the Fenton block at Wymore, which formerly was used by the Lyric theater.

IN MISSOURI.

Sir Douglas Mawson was induced to come to Kansas City last week and give an illustrated lecture in Convention Hall under the auspices of the Missouri Valley Historical Society. The pictures showed the life in the Antarctic regions, the most dismal and dangerous trap for antarctic explorers to enter. Among others that were shown were moving pictures of Royal penquins waddling about in their cheerless rookery. Sir Douglas' pictures show the long sled journey which his party made and of which he was the sole survivor. Kansas City society attended the lecture; many boxes were sold. The seats for this lecture and pictures sold for 50 cents and $1.00 each.

The Missouri State Protective Bottlers' Association met at Joplin, Mo., for their annual convention. A feature of the convention was a night performance of moving pictures furnished by the Crown Cork & Seal Co., at the Club theater. The reel contained pictures of every stage of the making of corks.

The Aladdin theater at Springfield, Mo., is running two of the big feature moving picture plays. The eighth installment of the "Hazards of Helen" and the eleventh number of "Zudora" will be shown this week.

"The Master Key" was shown at the Broadway Odeon and the Annex theater, Columbia, Mo., last week. The two theaters advertise that every number on the program gets better. They have been securing the best attractions possible for their shows.

"It's No Laughing Matter," the four-part Bosworth feature, was shown at the Star theater at Hannibal, Mo., last week, to good houses.

"Fatty and Mabel in Simple Life" was shown at the Tucker theater at Pleasant Hill, Mo., last week. Fatty hardly needs to be introduced to his audiences, for Roscoe Arbuckle is nearly as well known as John Bunny in little and big Missouri towns.

Picture Made Good

Kansas City Newspaper Wanted to Be Sure Exhibitor's Glowing Advertisement Would Fulfil Its Promises—No One in City Had Seen the Film—Interest Held Strongly by Reported Conversation of Paper's Advertising Man and Theater's Manager.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

ONE day last week the conversation was overheard between a moving picture theater manager, of Kansas City, and an advertising solicitor for one of the daily papers that is very careful about the veracity of advertisers' display. The manager had arranged for advertising five reels of pictures that neither he nor anyone else in that neighborhood had ever seen. The advertisement was a big display and claimed many things for the films that the average man would bet 10 to 1 were not in the films. The manager was anxious, for the film had not arrived in time for him to review them and then arrange for another picture and renounce the statements of his advertisement, if the films had been disappointing. The newspaper man had been instructed not to accept the advertisement in the manner that it had been written unless it could absolutely be verified.

The manager said: "Well, every paper in the cities in which these films has been shown, praised them immensely and they would not have done that unless they were just as represented."

The newspaper man responded: "I know that they did and they also say that they drew record houses everywhere, but no one in this city has seen them, no one can vouch for them and the ad will be on the street in the afternoon papers in just two hours and the pictures have not arrived so that you can review them. Suppose they are not what you have said they were?"

"Well we can get another five-reel feature in time for the show and will have to announce that the other picture cannot be shown," said the manager.

"Yes, but your ad will bring a thousand dollars the first day, a thousand of dollars worth of people that expect to see something wonderful. They would all be disappointed and would look upon your ads with question in the weeks to come. My advertising manager will probably fire me and the reputation for truthfulness of the advertisements of the paper which I represent will be hurt. What are you going to do then? asked the advertisement solicitor.

"Well, it looks as if I would have to quit the moving picture business, or you and I suddenly take that vacation we were talking of to San Antonio, that is all that I can see to do," said the moving picture manager. "And anyhow the ad will not bring more than a nine hundred dollar house the first day. On Tuesday, if the pictures are O. K., we will probably have a thousand dollar audience and continue to have one the rest of the week."

The advertisement was run and the men did not have to take an earlier vacation than they had arranged for.

BUNNY IN KANSAS CITY.

Interesting Account of John Bunny's Act—Will Stay in Vaudeville Two Years.

The celebrated picture comedian, whose face is perhaps better known than that of the President of the United States, John Bunny, heads his show of sixty people at the Grand theater this week. When Bunny arrived in Kansas City he caused unusual mirth among every one he came in contact with, for Bunny is an actor on or off the stage—or should it be on or off the screen? The press agents have been advertising that he turned the tables and deserted pictures for the stage, but Bunny says, "No"; he is going to return to pictures after he has filled his two years' stage engagement and has advertised his films. Bunny says that being funny is not funny; it is a business and he must study and work hard to make the people laugh. His stage entrance is a most novel one. Moving pictures are shown on the screen. "Where is Bunny? A Movie Hunt."

Bunny is at his hotel in bed. At the theater where it is time for his appearance the stage manager is excited because of his star's tardiness. The pictures show the manager's rush to a taxi and hurry to the hotel. He goes to Bunny's room and takes him to the taxi in his pajamas and a bath robe, carrying Bunny's makeup in his hands. Bunny dresses in the taxi on the way to the theater. The manager rushes him through the stage entrance. The film here stops and Bunny himself is standing face to face with the audience. Even though his jokes are old to theater goers of Kansas City, his actions cause much laughter. The Grand had not had very large audiences all season, but for this show the advance sale of tickets broke all its records this year and the house was packed at each performance.

The management of the Willis Wood theater, Kansas City's elaborate picture theater, secured John Bunny during his week of engagement at the Grand theater, to appear at 1 o'clock every afternoon in person.

MISSOURI NOTES.

The Empress theater at Kansas City, a vaudeville house, has again made arrangements with the Pathe Exchange incorporated, to show the Pathe weekly films.

It is said that E. E. Richards, manager of the Twelfth Street theater, Kansas City, will try to secure the war pictures that are being shown at the Willis Wood this week for his next week's attraction. The Mutual, "A Fool There Was," had a good run there last week.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the Pathe Exchange, incorporated, at Kansas City, is too busy to even talk. His assistant says that the "Tipperary" picture has proved very popular and is much sought after in Kansas City and its immediate territory. A bulletin in Mr. Edwards' office gives the standing of the salesman working from the Kansas City house. Mr. Edwards' name heads the list by more than $300 worth of bookings and that of Howard Jameyson, whose headquarters are at Wichita, Kan., heads the others by more than $200. Mr. Jameyson is rapidly making good as a moving picture booking agent. He recently took the position with the Pathe Co., and was new to the work having been in the newspaper business.

T. C. Goodnight, proprietor of a department store at Hannibal, Mo., has announced his intention to leave Hannibal and embark in the moving picture business at Warrensburg, Mo. Mr. Goodnight has been in business in Hannibal for more than ten years. The stock in his store is being invoiced and will be placed on sale by his brother, A. T. Stewart, of Macomb, Ill., formerly of Hannibal.

The Jefferson theater at Springfield, Mo., entertained more than 2,000 Woodmen with a thousand-foot film depicting the journey of a Missouri man to Colorado seeking health, and his final cure at the sanitarium at the home of the Modern Woodmen of America in Colorado.

The Willis Wood theater gave part of its earnings last week to the Second District of the Missouri Federated Women's Clubs. A special program of music and photoplays were given for the benefit of the philanthropic work of the federation; the proceeds from tickets sold by club women were contributed.

Atlantic City's Sunday

Arrests Follow Sunday Opening of Amusement Places Along Board Walk in Seaside City—Church People Demand Old-Fashioned Sabbath Observance Believed In by Their Fathers—Even Delivery of Groceries and Supplies May Be Prohibited.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

TELEPHONIC arrests were ordered recently by Director of Public Safety Bartlett, of Atlantic City, N. J., in the cases of Board Walk theater managers who defied his anti-moving picture, vaudeville and burlesque edict and played to large Sunday night houses. Chief of Police Malcolm B. Woodruff lodged complaints upon information transmitted to him by detectives who attended shows in all of the Board Walk amusement places. Two managers directly affected by Director Bartlett's decree received telephonic notice to appear at City Hall and acknowledge service.

Recorder Edmund C. Gaskill, Jr., upon whom the liberal element, 10,000 of whom have signed petitions pleading for Sunday amusement, are pinning their faith, declined to intimate what course he will pursue. Liberal Sunday advocates, however, were visibly disturbed over the Recorder's action in fixing a night for the hearings of the theater managers.

Militant churchmen also are preparing to drop another bomb into the camp of the badly worried liberal-Sunday forces. Suspension of Sunday deliveries of meats and provisions, ice and other supplies, after a reasonable hour in the morning, is to be the next ultimatum in the slowly but surely developing movement for what the church forces, led by laymen of undoubted standing, call a rational observance of the Sabbath at the shore.

"Churchmen in Atlantic City have been exceedingly reasonable in their demands," said Dr. Blair Stewart, churchman and prominent member of civic organizations. "They are reasonable in asking the authorities to suppress burlesque, which is objectionable on week days and doubly so on Sundays. Atlantic City got along without vaudeville and moving pictures on Sunday for nearly half a century and doesn't need it now. In asking the authorities to prohibit deliveries of supplies and the collection of garbage on Sunday after church hours, a large number of citizens will be entirely reasonable and within their rights.

REAL WEDDING IN LUBIN STUDIO.

Three Cameras Film Marriage of Edyth Anderton to Clarence Elmer.

A novel wedding took place in the big studio of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, 20th street and Indiana avenue, on Saturday, February 13, when Clarence J. Elmer, one of the leading men of the company, married Miss Edyth Stroud Anderton, another photoplayer, before three motion picture cameras. Several hundred guests were present and the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Edward E. Sibole, of St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church. The wedding was staged by Joseph W. Smiley.

Mr. Elmer is best known for his work in the title role of the Patsy Bolivar series of comedies. Miss Anderton is a daughter of W. G. Anderton, of 905 North Broad street. Elmer met Miss Anderton while they were playing in the "College Widow." The wedding picture was incorporated in a studio romance written for the young couple by Shannon Fife.

Lillie Leslie, who in private life is Mrs. Joseph W. Smiley, was matron of honor and Dorothy De Wolf was the flower girl. The cowpunchers at the Lubin farm at Betzwood attended the wedding in a body, attired in their best western regalia.

OTHER PHILADELPHIA ITEMS.

The Active Real Estate Company has sold to John W. Webber the moving picture theater at the northeast corner of Ridge avenue and Natrona street. The lot is irregular in depth and has a frontage of 83 feet. The property is subject to a mortgage of $65,000.

A new feature film exchange, known as the Big Four, recently opened headquarters at 1327 Vine street. Among those interested in this project are men well known in theatrical circles. The company consists of F. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, president; M. W. Taylor, vice-president; James H. Simpson, treasurer; T. M. Dougherty, secretary, and William J. Gane, general manager. Several notable features are to be announced and released shortly through this concern.

The Tioga, a photoplay house recently opened to the public, has changed hands, and will now be under the management of T. B. Howard and C. Stamper. Mr. Stamper, who has had wide experience in the field of moving pictures, will undoubtedly keep interest to the highest pitch by inaugurating a program showing the finest feature films produced. The announcement for the coming week consists of a selection of high-class screen dramatizations containing many well-known stars.

A new and up-to-date moving picture house was recently opened at Front and Allegheny streets, under the management of J. Ridgeway. Mr. Ridgeway announces that he will run nothing but the best of pictures and that he will do everything possible to insure the pleasing of their patrons.

VALUE OF SUNDAY SHOWS TO WHOLE COMMUNITY

Birmingham, Ala., Considering Sabbath Picture Shows—Comments on Value of Them.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World News Service.

THE proposal to open the Sunday shows in Birmingham, Ala., brought out a number of prominent advocates and good arguments. Some of them are:

G. A. Hegeman, advertising writer—"The 'masher,' that contemptible remnant of what was once a man, is recruited from the curb-stone gang, which is made up of young men who have nothing to do on Sunday afternoons. These young men would gladly spend their afternoons on Sunday in moving pictures in preference to standing on street corners and passing derogatory remarks about every young and pretty woman who passes. They would see good pictures, pictures that would point a moral forcefully and they and the city would be far better off."

Ellis C. Hollums—"A prohibition law goes into effect July 1. That there will be blind tigers will be a foregone conclusion. * * * The best way to stop the selling of whiskey illegally in Birmingham will be to open the moving picture shows. The blind tiger draws most of its trade on Sunday from that element which is at a loss for something to do to pass the time. If the motion picture shows were permitted to remain open in the afternoons the bulk of the trade for the 'tigers' would visit these shows and get more real enjoyment than ever could be secured by the swallowing of a large package of alleged whiskey made of red pepper and a vicious mixture of chemicals."

Editor of Age-Herald—"Persons who have religious scruples against Sunday concerts or Sunday moving pictures should govern their conduct accordingly, but they should not try to interfere with those who see no desecration and no harm whatsoever, but on the other hand, good in these innocent and humanizing amusements."

Arthur Elliott, labor leader—"There are hundreds of workingmen in Birmingham who have not the time to visit moving picture theaters during the week. These men pay taxes and vote and are entitled to some consideration."

H. D. Cullen, secretary Ad Club—"A board of censorship would be a good way to handle the proposition and I am of the opinion that under such conditions moving pictures in Birmingham on Sunday would be a real blessing.

Oliver Cox, secretary Rotary Club—"That the moving picture has proved to be one of the greatest moral forces in our modern life there is no doubt and I can see no good reason why the owners should not be permitted to operate on Sunday."

SO. ATLANTIC STATES BRIEFS.

Local censorship of moving pictures will not be included in the program of the Civic club of Charleston, S. C., as had been announced. This matter and a plan to introduce films into the schools of the city had been presented to the club, but the calendar was filled.

Albert Walker of Chester, S. C., has been made manager of Dreamland theater in that city.

The Stringers have opened their new moving picture theater at Gainesville, Ga.

An attendance of 1,160 for the first episode of "Runaway June" broke the record at the Bijou theater at Laurel, Miss.

INTERESTING KANSAS NOTES.

By Kansas City Special Moving Picture World News Service.

ACCORDING to the city librarian, Miss Cossitt, the town of Wichita, Kans., has gone drama mad. Club women, school teachers, college students, housewives, music and vocal teachers are putting in all their spare time reading modern drama. The reason for this sudden demand for books on modern drama at the library is that Wichita women are writing for the pictures.

The Delano Building at Strong City, Kan., is being remodeled by J. E. Sheets, Jr., and Neil McCallum for a new photoplay house. The floor will be elevated and a theater front put in. The plans for seating capacity are to accommodate 200 people.

The Victor theater in Kansas City, Kan., has contracted with the relief committee of the Shriners' Club to donate half the preceeds of all the five-cent tickets sold by the organization for the benefit of the poor until the first of April.

The Ruby theater at Hutchinson, Kan., which has been operated for the negroes, was closed last week. It is said the manager could not make both ends meet. Mr. Thomas, who owns the fixtures, intends to reopen the show within a few weeks.

Fred Savage, owner of the Iris and De Luxe moving picture theaters at Hutchinson, Kan., has purchased the Elite theater from O. W. Clouse, who has been conducting moving picture and vaudeville shows this winter. This addition makes Mr. Savage the moving picture magnate of Hutchinson. The Elite will be closed for remodeling, said Mr. Savage. It will later be known as the Rex theater. "I have no thought of converting it into a vaudeville house," said Mr. Savage. "I do not believe the people want this. However, the stage will be fixed so we can book an occasional good act or two." A good general film service will be used, according to Mr. Savage.

Lee L. Wilson, who has been doing some work toward the erection of a vaudeville house at Hutchinson, Kan., says that thirty-five hundred people pay to see the moving pictures at Hutchinson every day. He believes that he can force the six moving picture theaters at Hutchinson to cut their prices by opening a ten, twenty and thirty cent vaudeville theater there, or perhaps force some of them out of business. The moving picture men do not seem to be worried over this new opposition and do not believe it is possible for a vaudeville theater showing the ten, twenty and thirty-cent class of entertainment to force them out or even make them cut their prices.

FILMED LEGISLATORS AT TOPEKA.

For the first time in the history of the State of Kansas the legislature now in session at Topeka posed for the moving picture camera last week. The film will be used to show their constituents that the legislators were on the job.

CUT-THROAT METHODS IN IOWA.

By Midwest Moving Picture World Special News Service.

ROTTEN tactics by an opposition house are reported by an Iowa exhibitor. On the night he was to show a big feature at a let-live admission, a competitor came out with an announcement that his house would show the same picture later at a lower price. The advertisement was sent to the exchange, which immediately wired that the competitor had not booked the picture. The exchange suggested a rebooking to combat the unfair methods used to kill the first-time business. This was done.

OTHER IOWA NOTES.

A. A. Hatcher, formerly of Houston, Tex., has been made manager of the National theater at Sioux City.

C. J. Morrison has purchased the moving picture theater at Tabor.

Rath & Ramsey of the Star at Washington are using the premium catolog plan.

A. H. Blank and S. E. Greenebaum, who operated the Casino theater at Davenport the last year, will spend $50,000 in remodeling for use as a photoplay house building on Third street between Brady and Main streets.

N. L. and B. L. Hicks of Marshalltown have purchased the Princess theater at State Center from A. Nolta.

A. W. Bossen of Clinton bought the site of the Family theater at Clinton, which recently was damaged by fire and will replace the damaged structure.

Al Yeager, operating picture houses at Mt. Carroll, Ill., and Morrison, Ill., bought the Parkside theater at Lyons from the Lyons Investment company and the three theaters will make up a circuit.

The Casino theater at Clinton has been sold to O. M. Anderson of Superior, Wis. Mrs. Anderson will help conduct the house.

C. W. Melcher, seven years with the Olympic and Majestic theaters at Sioux City, and Frank E. Leonard have bought the Hawarden theater at Hawarden from F. F. Fogel and Enbretson. Leonard will have charge of the house, which has been re-christened the Lyric.

Perry Luengen of Colfax has bought a third interest in the business of Frank P. Lemen and Harry De Baggio, operating the Lyric in Newton and the Star and Union in Colfax. Plans were made to incorporate as the Real Amusement company and to acquire another house in another city to complete a special feature and possibly vaudeville circuit.

The Isis theater at Cedar Rapids will get fifteen cents in the evening for five and six-part Paramount features.

The Modern Woodmen and Royal Neighbors of American lodges are building an opera house and lodge hall at Jolley.

E. E. Drake's opera house at Ainsworth was destroyed by fire.

A new moving picture show has been opened in the Woodman hall at Osage.

Relief by the courts was granted to A. S. Kirkhart and T. F. Brennan and the Log-Den moving picture theater at West Eighth and Walnut streets was opened for business, with R. E. Curry appointed as temporary receiver. A petition was directed against William Prinz, Jr., and Mathilde J. Kinneberg. The petition declared that Prinz leased the theater and left for parts unknown. Meanwhile the theater, worth $10 a day rental, was idle.

Collecting Ticket Tax

Montreal's Proposed New Ticket Tax Presents Difficulties—One Cent on Each Admission Is New Rate and Puts Heavy Burden on Cheap Tickets—Not Easy to Collect the Tax—Methods of Doing It Proposed—Amounts That It Is Expected to Bring In.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THROUGH the successful opposition of several big Montreal theaters, the clause in the Montreal bill relating to the taxation of Montreal places of amusement for charitable purposes was amended in two respects: a special proviso was inserted assuring that the public and not the theater proprietors would pay the tax, and the rate of taxation was changed from five per cent. of the admission fee to a more general one of one cent on every ticket.

The houses which put up the opposition were the large "legitimate" theaters, and the moving picture-vaudeville houses. Mr. S. W. Jacobs, K. C., representing three big theaters, attacked the clause on several grounds. He claimed that houses were already over-taxed, and that it would be extremely difficult to have a patron pay a small extra fee. He then pointed out that the showmen would be compelled to corner all the copper in circulation. The clause will become law when it passes through both houses and receives the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor.

Suggestions are made as to the best method by which the city could collect the tax should the bill pass, and two or three schemes are discussed tentatively. One idea is that the proprietors of amusement houses might buy their tickets from the city and so pay the money to the treasury. Another scheme is that the city might sell to the public books of twenty-five tickets, one of which would be presented by the patron of an amusement every time he entered. But it is realized that this collection will be a matter calling for long discussion, and the method to be adopted is not at all certain.

A report prepared by J. N. Gouvreau, an inspector in the building department, shows that the total seating capacity in Montreal is 53,000, that a minimum of 64,000 people patronize amusements, and that the tax if levied will yield an annual total of over $250,000.

As in the case of the charity tax, there was opposition in the Private Bills Committee to the adoption of the eighty-five cents a seat clause. Ex-Alderman Gauvin opposed the clause and he told the committee that it had been placed in the bill by a Montreal alderman who was interested in small picture shows. He said that some of the aldermen were against the clause, but had voted in favor of it because they did not wish to offend their colleague. Ald. Turcot, a member of the committee, repudiated this statement and said that the aldermen had favored the clause because they recognized that it was in the interests of the city.

Mr. Leon Garneau proposed that the tax of eighty-five cents a seat should be limited to a maximum of $500. There was immediate opposition from City Attorney Laurendeau, who said that this amendment would protect the large theaters and reduce the revenue of the city. Ald. Macdonald emphasized the fact that the city of Montreal wanted more revenue to carry out its obligations during the war.

Mr. Garneau's amendment was lost and the motion was then carried.

MAY CLOSE SUNDAY SHOWS.

The Lord's Day Alliance has been occupying a good deal of the attention of local showmen because of that organization's objections to the Sunday musicales now being held at His Majesty's theater, the large West End house. The Federal law provides that action cannot be taken against the violators of the Lord's Day Act without the permission of the Attorney-General of the province in which the offence was committed. Furthermore, action cannot be taken until sixty days after the violation of the act. The Alliance intends to make a test case of the affair, unless the city takes the initiative and prosecutes first. Should the case result in favor of the Alliance, then proceedings will be taken to close up all moving picture houses on Sunday.

WAR BUDGET DUTIES.

New War Tax Now Effective—Each Reel Cost $25 to Import—Poster Tax.

The new War Budget taxes came into effect last week. The former customs duty on films imported into Canada was 25 per cent. of the value of a reel; the value of film is considered by the customs officers to be 8 cents per foot, or $80 a reel. Posters were formerly taxed at the rate of 15 cents a pound. The new tax increases the burden. In addition to the present 25 per cent. duty on films, importers must pay an additional 7½ per cent. on every reel. The new rate for posters will be the former duty of 15 cents a pound, plus 7½ per cent. on the value of the posters.

Coming in the midst of a depression of business, the customs duties will affect the exchangemen severely, and this new burden will be very discouraging. The present state of the Dominion's finances due to the heavy expenses necessitates that a special duty be placed on nearly all things imported into the country. After all, Canadians are doing their best to support the moving picture industry, and film men do not complain of the extra duty. This is a just tax; but there are other taxes not so fair.

BRIEF MONTREAL NOTES.

Mr. Foster, of the local Famous Players office, got back in town last week from a flying trip through Ontario. Asked how business was, he flashed a bix bundle of contracts.

Manager Herring has set out on the warpath to boom up his Wednesday trade. His house, the Mount Royal, changes program three times weekly, Wednesday being the odd day. He is putting on some special features on this day, and is engaging some musical attractions.

Theo. Tabah has sold his interests in the King George theater, and has joined the local World Film staff. The World Film office saw some stirring scenes last Saturday, when "Money" was condemned at the last moment by the censors. It was due to be shown at the Strand on Monday, and press agent Ed. Michel had to hustle around the newspaper offices to change his copy for the Sunday editions.

Geo. Rotsky arrived back in town last week from Toronto, where he had been arranging bookings for "Runaway June." He reports good results. He is again with the local Mutual people. Glen Kerr now attending to the interests of "Runaway June" in Eastern Canada.

H. A. Vineberg is back at the helm of things at the Globe theater, having been on a short vacation to Atlantic City.

A private exhibition was given last week of the Conness-Till's first release, "On the King's Highway." It will be followed by other two and three-reel subjects. These three have been chosen for early release: "Canada in Peace and War," "The Better Man," "Motto on the Wall." This company's product should go well before a Canadian public, due to the "Made-in-Canada" slogan. The B. C. Feature Co. handles the product.

Good Advice to Censors

Minneapolis Women's Welfare League Told by Dr. Robert Gilman How to Treat Exhibitors—Would Be Effective, and Results Would Be Gratifying to All Patriotic Citizens—Poster Question Taken Up and Censorship of Paper Advocated.

By Frank H Madison, Northwest Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CO-OPERATE with exhibitors, give them a chance to control their pictures and then establish a "white list" of houses that show good films. This was the advice of Dr. Robert Gilman, formerly of the National Board of Censorship to the Motion Picture Committee of the Woman's Welfare League at Minneapolis, Minn.

Mrs. Frederick Lee Ackerman of the National Board, who also addressed the committee, gave some good advice in addition to describing the work of her organization. Legislation will not control pictures, she said. She recommended that the Minneapolis women organize along the lines of the National Board with an advisory board. The National Board will supply weekly a list of the cut-outs and any conflict with these could be remedied. The club women also were told they would find the moving picture men willing to cooperate. Mrs. Ackerman found poster displays in Minneapolis which were declared shocking. Doctor Gilman also suggested city control of this advertising.

GOOD CRITICISM OF COMIC FILMS.

The following criticism from a Northwestern paper is given because it expresses a trifle more pungently what other editors have been trying to say about the comedy tendencies in pictures. "All the time better pictures are being produced—and worse ones. There are some moving picture productions which are as enjoyable as anything the so-called legitimate houses have to offer. There are some which are so rotten they smell to heaven. * * * If it has gotten to the point that it is necessary to suck a woman's skirts into a vacuum cleaner, making a vulgar display, to dress an alleged comedian vulgarly, and to kick the members of the company, men and women, alike, in order to get a laugh out of the audience, we may as well admit that the motion picture producers are falling upon evil times. The laughs which followed these silly antics were few and far between. Take the production off the screen and put it on the stage with the language which would go with it, and it would play only at the cheapest kind of theaters and before the cheapest kind of people."

LEADVILLE OPERATORS HAVE ORGANIZED.

Moving picture operators in Leadville, Colo., have joined the Denver local of the I. A. T. S. E. There is a rumor of a demand for standard wages as the result of their becoming unionized.

ARROWHEAD MOTION PICTURE COMPANY SUED.

Frank B. Stephens and Benner X. Smith filed suit to collect $2,600 against W. B. Kelling and others as directors and stockholders of the Arrowhead Motion Picture company at Salt Lake City, Utah. They alleged this sum was due creditors of the company.

NORTHWESTERN BRIEFS.

The Empress theater at Missoula, Mont., got in on a "ghost" stunt put on by a local paper, which has been unusually well handled. The "mystery" was featured for a whole page by a clever writer. A sort of a double exposure photograph showed Mrs. Ghost and her child on their way to the Empress to see a photoplay.

An ordinance allowing Sunday evening moving picture shows has been up before the city council at Austin, Minn., and its passage seems likely.

Nothing but an overwhelming demand will bring vaudeville to the Avenue theater, 216 East Yakima avenue, in North Yakima, Wash. Fred Schaefer is the new manager.

U. W. Rayburn of Walla Walla, Wash., has opened a two-nights-a-week show at Washtucna, Wash.

Frank Greer, proprietor of the Lyric theater at Olympia, Wash., has been dismantling that house to occupy the Acme, which he purchased from E. A. Zabel and Mrs. L. E. De Grace.

J. N. Ristey, owner of the opera house at Spring Grove, Minn., has started a three-nights-a-week picture show.

A new moving picture house has been opened at Bottineau, N. D., by F. S. Key of Willow City.

F. F. Williams of Waterville, Minn., has purchased the Rex theater at Winthrop, Minn., from Alfed J. Johnson.

John Crabtree has sold a half interest in his picture show at Murdo, S. D., to Henry Hunt.

The Lyric theater at Atwater, Minn., has been sold to Gust Swenson of Anoka.

T. H. Onstad of Sacred Heart, Minn., has been contemplating opening a moving picture show at Milaca, Minn.

The Olympia at Sioux Falls, S. D., has installed a five-piece orchestra.

The Yankton theater, Yankton, S. D., became a nightly feature house—at 10 and 15 cents—February 22.

Michael Tollefson has opened a moving picture show in the opera hous at Washburn, N. D.

B. F. French has opened a picture show at Plaza, N. D.

D. C. McKenzie renewed his request for a license to operate a moving picture theater at 156 North Fairview avenue in St. Paul, Minn.

George Reizner, operating two picture houses in South Bend and Raymond, Wash., has leased the Grand Opera house at South Bend for two years. Theatrical attractions will continue. W. P. Cressy, who has been manager of the Grand, will continue as manager and also will have charge of the Lyric picture house in South Bend. W. T. Marcussion will manage the New Lyric, photoplays, at Raymond.

John Bunny addressed students at the Minnesota School of Agriculture at St. Paul. This school has a weekly picture show of its own.

Brooking Brothers sold their moving picture show in the Odd Fellows' Hall at Belgrade, Mont., to C. A. Kinsey and Chester Phelps.

G. W. Trone, of Manhattan, Mont., rented the town auditorium at Belgrade, Mont., to give twenty weekly shows with "Zudora" and other films.

O. V. Hall and Roy Parks were reported to be contemplating opening a moving picture show at Blaine, Wash.

A. I. Bideler and M. A. Dunklee of Union, Ore., who purchased the Isis and Theatorium at Ellensburg, Wash., will operate under the name of the Photoplay Theater company. Dunklee will be secretary and treasurer. New music and fixtures will be placed in the Theatorium.

Thomas Grindley has returned to the Bell theater at Chehalis, Wash., as manager.

Penn school neighborhood residents in St. Paul, Minn., appeared before Mayor Nye to protest against a proposed moving picture theater in that locality.

James Barlow sold his interest in the New Grand theater at Grand Rapids, Minn., to Fred Bentz.

W. C. Nelson has commenced the erection of a two-story, 50x140, reinforced concrete moving picture theater, seating 1,200 on First street between Oak and Laurel in Port Angeles, Wash. It will have a pipe organ. It will cost about $20,000.

S. H. Elliott planned to open, about March 1, a moving picture theater on Main street in Lebanon, Ore.

Moving pictures are being used by the University of Minnesota at St. Paul to instruct classes in salesmanship.

A half interest in Kingery's moving picture show at Forbes, N. D., has been sold to J. C. Hamilton, of Leola.

Hiram Phippen has opened a moving picture show at Carey, Utah. Fumes from his gasoline engine overcame him and a physician was necessary. Patrons also were affected.

P. H. Tallman, manager of the Cozy theater at Long Prairie, Minn., is reported to be contemplating erecting a new moving picture house at that place next summer.

COQUILLE TAKES MARDI GRAS PICTURE STORIES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southern Newspaper Bureau.

The Coquille Film Company was one of the busiest in the country during Mardi Gras week, working on two films written around the Mardi Gras. Both scenarios were written by New Orleanians and are said to be full of the Carnival atmosphere. One is a one-reel comedy, "Carnival in Black and White," by Miss Caroline Wogan; the other, "The Man Who Lost," a three-reel drama, is by Miss Amanda Buckman. Both Miss Wogan and Miss Buckman have written a number of successful scenarios and these two are said to be at least up to par.

The Carnival this year was as great a celebration as ever, offering as always endless possibilities for picturization. It is not only crowds and pageants that make the Carnival what it is, either, neither from the tourists' viewpoint nor from that of the producer. It is the spirit of the season that secured for New Orleans the title: "The City Care Forgot."

The dramatic possibilities of this spirit, or its comedy possibilities, are indicated in an excerpt from an article on Carnival: "The spirit of Carnival is a mad-cap whose face is smeared with lees of wine, and New Orleans is the habitat of that spirit." It entails a gigantic expenditure of money and youth and strength.

FILM OF RECLAMATION PLANT.

Pathe has filmed the ceremonies attendant upon the opening of the Hero pumping plant which is to drain 39,000 acres of land within fifteen minutes of New Orleans. This event is considered to be of more than usual importance in that it shows the way for reclaiming 10,000 more acres of land almost as valuable. Pathe, in connection with the pictures of the formal opening, is showing scenes in the fertile country which is being reclaimed, and the first move of the big pumps, the largest for the purpose yet constructed.

President Wilson at Washington pressed the button which set these in motion. The picture will show the president pressing the button and the result of this action some thousand miles away. Pathe's picturization of the event was arranged through the New Orleans Association of Commerce, aboard whose yacht, the "Destrehan," E. M. Steen, Pathe's New Orleans representative, was taken through the reclamable lands, a part of which are drained by the Hero pumps, and including the historic Barataria region, the haunt of the pirate Lafittes.

LYRIC SOLD AT AUCTION TO NETTIE FRANK.

The Lyric theater, New Orleans, more recently operated as a moving picture house, was bought in at auction February 10 by Mrs. Nettie Lehman Frank, a part owner, who forced it to auction to secure a settlement. The price paid was $24,000. Lew Rose, who has theatrical interests in New Orleans, bid $23,000. The Lyric at an earlier stage of its history was a beer garden, but returned to the legitimate when the Louisiana Legislature made the beer garden license $10,000 per annum. It has been in pictures for some time. The price was considered low, in view of the fact that the property is assessed at $50,000, but, according to others, it was fair inasmuch as the recent trend of the business center has left it somewhat on the outer edge.

NEW ORLEANS HEARS LECTURE BY EUGENE BRIEUX.

Eugene Brieux of the Immortals (The French Academy), author of "Damaged Goods" and "Maternity," among other things, speaking in New Orleans during Carnival on the drama, summarized all dramatic formulae in the two epigrams of Brunetiere and Goethe: "A drama is a will that is developing" and "a drama is an emotional event taken at its crisis." Mr. Brieux spoke in French, the event taking place at the Association of Commerce auditorium.

NOVEL PICTURE HOUSE TO BE TRIED IN NEW ORLEANS.

New Orleans will have a first class picture house run on the highly novel (to New Orleans) Berlin plan, if negotiations now being carried on by George Joesten go through. Mr. Joesten, until 1910, held a half interest in the Lichtspiele ("Lightplace") theater, Berlin.

The Lichtspiele seats 600 people, he says, and seats them comfortably; on the American plan 1,000 seats would be placed in the space taken by the 600. The admission charge is from six cents to twenty-five cents every day, the price depending upon the part of the house. The Lichtspiele also has several boxes wherein wine is served from a restaurant adjoining and under the same management.

FICHTENBERG LAEMMLE'S GUEST AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Mr. Fichtenberg left New Orleans on March 4 for Universal City and the Exposition, to be gone two months. He will be one of the hundred guests aboard the Universal special which goes out of Chicago over the Santa Fe on March 8. Mr. Fichtenberg spent a few days at French Lick with Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, when he was en route to New York.

A. CARLOS AND FAMILY RETURN TO NEW YORK.

A. Carlos, general representative for the Box Office Attractions Co., who was in New Orleans with his wife and daughter for the Mardi Gras, has left for Atlanta and New York. The Carlos saw the Mardi Gras for the first time this year and were enthusiastic in their comments on it. Miss Gertrude, Mr. Carlos's daughter, will return for the Carnival next year, she, with her parents, having made some very pleasant social connections, taking in a number of the larger masked balls.

STEENE FLIES WITH IT NOW.

Some weeks ago, through the New Orleans Association of Commerce, it was suggested that E. B. Steene and an aviator booking passenger service on Lake Pontchartrain, get together and they did. Already Mr. Steene has made several flights, one over the city. This one was recorded in several hundred feet of film for the patrons of Pathe's weekly. It will be released at an early date.

TRIANON GETS NEW ORGAN.

Pearce's "Trianon," New Orleans, will install an organ according to recent announcement by J. E. Pearce, Southern manager of the Pearce interests. Arrangements have been completed with the manufacturers and the work of installation will be done as soon as the instrument can be asembled here. It will cost about $10,000. This improvement will put the "Trianon" just about on a parity with the "Tudor," another of Pearce's New Orleans theaters, which just now is about the finest in town in the way of an all picture house. Both houses are on Canal street on property which has long been thought too expensive for "legitimate" theaters.

GULF STATES BRIEFS.

The Southern Paramount office is now in charge of Louis E. Loeb, who recently arrived in New Orleans with orders to give exhibitors in the Southern territory every advantage, with particular reference to Paramount publicity service, enjoyed by Paramount exhibitors elsewhere. Previously the Paramount's highly systematized publicity has not been easily accessible to exhibitors in the Southern territory.

J. J. Fabacher, special traveling representative of the United Program Film Service of Louisiana, after making an extended trip over that state, Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi, told the World's representative that he finds business is better in Vicksburg, Miss., than in any other town he has yet visited. There is reason for this, he claims, with such men as Herman Fichtenberg and Josiah Pearce & Sons at the head of theaters in Vicksburg; which direction gives the public the cream of the film world.

Shreveport, La., was in the midst of a "dollar day" campaign inaugurated by merchants of that city recently, in which the Saenger and Queens theaters joined by offering as a special inducement to those who brought in a dollar, two dollars' worth of tickets. "Julius Caesar," George Kleine's six-reel masterpiece, ran for two days at ten and twenty cents to crowded houses. The Hippodrome, another enterprising Shreveport house, entered into the spirit of the game by offering a combination ticket good for twenty admissions for a dollar, and this is a ten-cent house.

The "Lyceum," Monroe, La., is another one of the progressive theaters which all over the country are inaugurating a telephone service for their patrons. They advertise extensively that to find out particulars about any special picture, one has only to telephone the theater and questions will be cheerfully answered.

Sugar's theater, Monroe, La., showed recently two Paramounts, "Wildflower" and Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate," to crowds that packed the house at ten cents. Both pictures ran two days.

In DeRidder, La., the Bijou gave matinee performances and very generously donated all the receipts to the fire department. The firemen sold tickets on the streets to help the good cause along.

R. L. McChesney, secretary of the Contractors' and Dealers' Exchange at New Orleans, has returned from Columbus, O., where he showed the National Association of Building Exchanges motion picture views of cotton activities and views of the New Orleans docks. Mr. McChesney says that, although the pictures were shown at 9 a. m., after a lengthy business session had been held all night, there was a large number of members on hand.

C. B. Bonstelle, inspector for the Bureau of Explosives, has been in New Orleans for several days conferring with the various film exchanges on the boxing in which their films are being shipped. The new all-metal type which is shortly to displace the older types is already being used by a number of the larger film houses.

The Hybar Film Corporation, Arthur Hyman president, has opened offices in New Orleans with Louis Dolohonde, well known New Orleans exhibitor, as manager. The New Orleans address of the company is 201 Weis Building.

Mr. Dolohonde has leased his theater, the "Pleiades," one of the best of the suburban houses, to R. Owen, formerly lessee of the Ivy. The Pleiades' seating capacity is to be enlarged from 400 to 600.

The Apex, which recently opened offices in New Orleans with E. A. Simmonds as manager, has announced that it will put a man on the road to cover Louisiana, Mississippi and Southern Arkansas out of the New Orleans office.

"Your Girl and Mine," a suffrage film, was presented in leading moving picture houses of New Orleans, February 12 and 13, under the auspices of the Era Club, one of the leading suffrage organizations in the country.

Residents of Augusta, Ga., recently received instructions through the daily press of that city to "look pleased" when they came down to work a certain morning. The secret was out when it was explained that the moving picture organization wanted to film the street crowds for exhibition in Augusta houses. Three thousand feet were filmed.

The addition of orchestral music at the Modjeska theater has pleased the public of Augusta, Ga., immensely, and the patrons of the Modjeska have shown their appreciation of this much needed innovation in the movie business. Several brilliant film features made several of the most successful weeks the theater has ever experienced.

"Will O' the Wisp," and Wilton Lackaye in "The Pit," both Box Office Attractions, packed the Empire theater of Montgomery, Ala., recently, and so great were the crowds that the management announced through the newspapers that they wouldn't guarantee a seat unless "1700" was 'phoned 'way in advance.

Manager Fiedler, of the "Majestic," Little Rock, Ark., recently inaugurated a plan that has put his theater in good with the street railway company. At at matinee show Manager Fiedler invited close to one hundred employees of the railway company to see the show as his guests.

Isadore Friedman, McGehee, Ark., closed a deal February 2 with J. L. Allen for the AmuseU motion picture theater at Monticello, Ark. J. A. Barthet will be manager.

The "Majestic" and the "Vampire," two suburban houses, are dark. When they will be reopened has not been announced. Both were in sections crowded with exhibition houses.

M. D. Martin, according to announcement from the New Orleans office of the Pearce interests, has been made manager of the two Pearce houses "Dreamland" and "Bijou" at Vicksburg.

F. G. Wallace, special representative handling the Williamson submarine pictures for the Universal, has left with the pictures for Beaumont. The pictures had an excellent run at the "Lafayette" in New Orleans.

The Universal is booking "Damon and Pythias" in New Orleans.

John Depinet, formerly an exhibitor, has been made manager in New Orleans for the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., which will shortly announce the location of its New Orleans office.

D. Silverman, Southern representative for the Alco Film Company, was in New Orleans booking "Tillie's Punctured Romance," for which Alco has bought the exclusive Southern rights.

The Hybar Film Company, which recently opened offices in New Orleans, reports that business is fine. Louis Dolohonde, the manager, is very busy getting the new office into shape.

R. E. Seeling, of Los Angeles, director general of sales for the World Film Corporation, was in New Orleans.

R. M. Savini, president of the United Program Film Service, of Louisiana, who was in New Orleans for Mardi Gras, has returned to the Atlanta office.

The "Bijou Dream," the "Princess" and the "Opera House," picture theaters of Greenville, Miss., have all been brought under one management by a recent merger to which S. B. Ford, W. F. Elkans and Will Isenberg, each controlling one of the theaters, were parties. The "Princess" will be eliminated under the new arrangement, it being the belief of the syndicate that Greenville can be given its pictures from the two theaters more profitably than from the three.

Adopting Safety Methods

San Francisco Exchanges Forestalling Demands for Drastic Municipal Regulations—Are Adopting Safety Methods in Handling Film—Besides Fireproof Storage, the Handling and Packing of Film in Transit Is Being Reformed—Getting Exhibitors to Follow Suit.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE splendid fireproof vaults built by the California Film Exchange in its new home on Golden Gate avenue have attracted general attention and several concerns are now building improved storage facilities, or are planning to. As noted several weeks ago, the Golden Gate Film Exchange has begun work on its film vaults.

Film exchanges generally are now also paying increased attention to the packing of film shipped by express and heavy metal containers are now in use. The Pathe Exchange, Inc., 67 Turk street, has just sent notices to all of its customers in this territory calling attention to the fact that all shipments made are packed and marked and in proper condition for transportation according to the regulations prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and asking that the exhibitor pack the films in the same manner in returning them in order to insure their prompt return and to prevent their destruction. A warning tag to this effect is also being affixed to all of the shipping cases sent out.

At the present time there are no drastic municipal regulations regarding the storing or handling of films and it is to prevent the passage of any measures that might prove a hardship to the trade that improved methods are being voluntarily adopted.

FRANK L. HUDSON LEAVES PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

Frank L. Hudson, who has been district manager for the Eclectic Feature Film Exchange and the Pathe Exchange, Inc., since the Coast field was entered last spring, has resigned his position and the office of district manager has been abolished. The San Francisco branch, which was under the direct management of Mr. Hudson, is now in charge of Harry Oviott, formerly road man out of the Los Angeles office. Mr. Hudson has received several flattering offers from other concerns, but is planning to enter the business field on his own account.

MANY EXPOSITION SHOWS

Visitors to Exposition Find Plenty of Instructive and Entertaining Pictures.

There has been a rush of late on the part of exhibitors at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to install moving picture projection apparatus and the supply houses have had all of the work of this character they have been able to handle. Edward H. Kemp is installing some very interesting equipment in the Southern Pacific Building, a considerable portion of which was made to special order. He is also supplying automatic slide machines for U. S. Government exhibits in six buildings. Edison machines are installed in the Southern California Counties display, and Simplex machines, with a Wagner converter, are being placed in the California Viticultural exhibit. The United States Government will have three moving picture machines in operation, the display being in charge of J. C. Boykin, assisted by operators Lee Loudy, William Lewis and Frank Sevier.

L. W. Atwater, sales manager of the Nicholas Power Company, is here superintending the installation of an exhibit to be made by this concern in the Palace of Liberal Arts. A supplementary display will be made in Machinery Hall and both will be under the direction of Mr. Horn, formerly with George Kleine Attractions, after the opening of the exposition.

Two Simplex machines have been installed in the display devoted to livestock and here 50,000 feet of film prepared by the Educational Film Association of Chicago will be shown. Mr. Bushcotte of this concern is now on the Coast to secure some local material. G. A. Metcalfe is installing a Power's No. 6A Cameragraph, with motor generator set, in the Swedish display.

DISPLAY OLD-TIME MACHINES.

The Mutual Film Corporation has a display in the windows of its San Francisco branch that is attracting a great deal of attention from exhibitors, especially from among the younger members. A Lubin projector that was used fifteen years ago is shown, together with an early Edison machine. These are being displayed together with some of the late models.

UNION FILM & SUPPLY OPENS TWO NEW BRANCHES.

The Union Film & Supply Co. of San Francisco is preparing to open two branches at an early date, one of these to be located at Seattle, Wash., and the other at Portland, Ore. These branches will be in charge of W. J. Morgan, until recently in charge of the Los Angeles branch, which is now under the management of A. L. Sailors.

BEN BRODSKY, A VISITOR FROM ORIENT.

Ben Brodsky, known as the "Film King of the Orient," was a visitor in San Francisco this week from China. The Variety Film Exchange Co., of which he was the head, has been sold to the China Cinema Company, Ltd., with headquarters at Hong Kong and branches at Shanghai, Canton, Manila, Yokohama, Vladivostock and Honolulu. Mr. Brodsky is filling the position of general manager for this concern and states that it is actively engaged in producing, as well as distributing films, more than one hundred Chinese subjects having been turned out during the past year. R. E. Hasbrook, formerly of the Variety Film Exchange Co., is also with the new concern and at present has charge of the Shanghai office. Mr. Brodsky will probably make a visit to New York before returning to the Orient.

SAN FRANCISCO BRIEFS.

Tom North, manager of the San Francisco office of George Kleine Attractions, recently suffered from poisoning, presumably from eating mushrooms. Quick work on the part of a physician probably saved his life.

The Cort Theater will be devoted to moving pictures during the week of Feb. 28, the attraction being Submarine pictures.

Jacob Gatzert, of Lodi, Cal., was a recent visitor at San Francisco, coming down to purchase new equipment for his theater.

The Diepenbrock Theater at Sacramento, Cal., is to be devoted to large moving picture feature attractions in the future under the management of Glazer Bros. and Webster.

The Gaiety theater, Oakland, Cal., is now moving pictures instead of musical comedy.

A. C. H. Chamberlain and brother Lloyd have purchased the interests of W. J. Clark in the Madera Opera House, Madera, Cal.

The Carson Valley Improvement Club, Bridgeport, Cal., has purchased a Simplex machine and will give entertainments regularly.

Pete Ricci and Earl Tate of Roseville, Cal., have purchased a theater in the Golden Gate Park district, San Francisco.

W. B. Martin, who conducts the Star theater at Modesto, Cal., has made arrangements to move his house to the new theater building to be erected there shortly by G. H. Umbsen of San Francisco. The new theater will have a seating capacity of about 750 and will be handsomely furnished.

A new moving picture house is to be erected at Redondo, Cal., by L. J. Baumbach.

The Plaza theater, Fresno, Cal., has been granted a permit to conduct an airdome in that city during the summer.

The Blazon Film & Producing Co. is preparing to take pictures at Truckee, Cal., while the snow is still on the ground.

INTERESTING ST. LOUIS NOTES.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ON February 12, P. E. Collins, manager of the Orpheum theater, 5961 Easton avenue, gave a free matinee, the program consisting of two industrial reels showing the process of the manufacture of shoes in the Dittmann Shoe Factories, of this city, and three reels of comedy and drama. The audience was so large that the airdome, which adjoins the theater, was used to accommodate the overflow until the first performance was over.

M. J. Cunningham, manager of the Delmar theater, Delmar and Kings highway, is remodeling the airdome next door to the theater, for the coming season. Mr. Cunningham intends to maintain a double bill during the coming summer, one in the theater as well as the one in the airdome. One admission will admit to either or both performances, and the audience will be received through the box office of the theater. This arrangement will give a total seating capacity of 2,500.

Alos, dealers in moving picture accessories, photographic goods, and makers of slides and announcement plates of all kinds, have moved back to their original store at 513 Olive street, from 508 Olive street, where they took up temporary quarters during the interval necessary to rebuild the original establishment, which was destroyed by fire several months ago. The new quarters are very complete in every detail.

The Novelty theater, Grand and Easton avenues, has changed hands. J. Sweeney has been succeeded by James J. McDermott.

The Euclid theater, 4877 Easton avenue, owned by Truitt & Wiseman, was sold on January 1 to Lawrence & Durst, who have placed J. C. Scott in the position of manager. Mr. Scott is one of the youngest managers in the city, but his youth has not prevented him from making considerable increase in the patronage of the Euclid, and his pleasant manner has made him many friends in the neighborhood.

Joseph Carr, Sidney Harris and Toby Blume, who are handling "Tillie's Punctured Romance" as a state right proposition for Missouri, Kansas and Arkansas, were unable to make satisfactory booking arrangements for the first showing of their feature, and were forced to become their own exhibitors. They took a special lease on the King's theater, Kings highway and Delmar avenue, and ran the film to capacity houses for three weeks.

James Bassford, manager of the Princess theater, Grand avenue and Olive street, which recently abandoned a road show program for moving pictures, says the Princess is thriving under the new program of all feature pictures. The Princess played a week's engagement of Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter," to very pleasing box office receipts, despite the fact that this feature recently played a three weeks' engagement at the Victoria theater, which is only three blocks distant. "Tillie's Punctured Romance" will be the next attraction.

Wm. H. Young, owner of the Taylor-Easton theater, 4472 Easton avenue, who was forced to leave St. Louis in September of last year on account of failing health, is still unable to return. Walter L. Pritch, who is managing the Taylor-Easton during Mr. Young's absence, states that he has very encouraging letters from his employer, who hopes to return to his business in the near future. The Taylor-Easton is one of the larger and better class houses on Easton avenue, and Mr. Pritch is conducting the house along the same lines inaugurated by Mr. Young, who built up a strong patronage among the select and discriminating people of the neighborhood.

H. G. Cole has assumed management of the theater at 1413 Market street that was known as the Hard Times theater, because the admission was two and a half cents. Mr. Cole has raised the price of admission to five cents, and is conducting a contest to choose a new name for the house. The patrons are asked to drop suggestions for a name in a box as they leave the theater, and the one that suggests the name used, will be given a prize.

Scherrer Brothers, proprietors of the Palace theater, 1310 Franklin avenue, have changed their regular Monday program to one large feature, using Shubert and Brady releases.

MICHIGAN NEWS NOTES.

By Midwest Moving Picture World Special News Service.

OPERATION of shows on Sunday in Wayne is not improbable. William Skerrett, who has been preparing to open a new show in the Masonic Temple, has filed a petition with the City Council. The sentiment toward Sunday shows is favorable, it is reported.

Manager Sullivan has cut the admission at the Grand and Royal in Escanaba to five cents except Mondays, Thursdays and Sundays when features will be shown. Five reels will be given for the nickel.

Frank Whitman has been making preparations to open a moving picture theater at Buchanan.

A. G. Anderson has resigned his position as manager at the Star theater at Rockford.

Edward Jamison leased the Owosso theater at Owosso for a month. D. R. Salisbury, owner of the house, intimated that it might be dismantled.

W. S. Parmenter, who has taken over the management of the Pastime theater on North Saginaw street at Saginaw, has eliminated vaudeville from the program.

William Markle has been remodeling a building at Alger into a hall and opera house, which will be called the Algerine.

Charles Crawford of Battle Creek has been contemplating opening a moving picture show as well as other attractions at Goguac Lake, a resort near Battle Creek, next summer.

IN CINCINNATI.

A special matinee performance was given at the Nordland Plaza, W. E. Brown's popular and high-class house, on Wednesday of last week, for the entertainment of several hundred ladies in attendance on the convention of the Ohio Hardware Association.

Moving pictures are steadily assuming a more important place in connection with local schools. The extent of the attendance of school children at photoplay houses has, of course, always been large, but indications are that the schools will ultimately have their own displays, a first-class projecting machine having been presented to the Eighteenth District School recently by friends. An address before teachers and mothers in Hyde Park, a suburb, on "Good and Bad Effects of Moving Pictures," also indicated the interest felt in this subject, the value of the "request program" being emphasized.

Small Houses Affiliated

Cincinnati and Vicinity Sees Formation of Moving Picture Owners' Protective Association, a New Organization of Proprietors of Smaller Houses—Its Object Is the Better Arrangement of Service to Make Room for Features—Twenty-seven Members.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent Moving Picture World.

ORGANIZATION is the order of the day among local exhibitors, the latest evidence of this tendency to get together for special purposes being the birth of the Moving Picture Owners' Protective Association, which is composed of the proprietors of a number of the smaller houses, mostly in the suburban districts of Cincinnati. Twenty-seven members started the organization, indicating a considerable degree of strength among the exhibitors to whom it is intended to appeal. Tom Corby, of the Motion Picture Theater Co., which controls several houses, is one of the leading spirits among the members and promoters of the new organization, and outlined its objects as having in view chiefly the welfare of the small exhibitor.

One of the principal objects in view is the use of large features by the exhibitor without having to pay for other service at the same time. The exhibitors feel that they, as well as the larger houses, should be enabled to show their patrons the big drawing cards, and want to see the matter of film service so arranged that they can do so. Mr. Corby and other members declare that every small house in this section will be brought into the new organization, which, they point out, will then be in a position to talk terms. A committee has already been appointed to report on the matter of securing an adjustment of service charges, consisting of the following exhibitors: E. J. Bauman, Fifth Street theater; George Hill, Liberty Street theater; M. Hillman, Ideal theater, and F. Emmert, Marvel theater. Fred Bott is secretary of the association.

NEW OFFICERS OF BIG TIME FEATURE ASSOCIATION.

The recently-organized Big Time Feature Exhibitors' Association has elected the following officers, at a meeting held for that purpose last Saturday: President, Joseph Hennegan, of the Lubin; vice-president, I. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson; secretary, William Howard, of the Forest, and treasurer, I. Frankel, of the Hippodrome. The organization is already taking steps along the line indicated by its promoters at the time when it was formed, and they believe that in a short time they will be in a position to serve the members to excellent advantage in the matter of securing big attractions.

RE-ELECTS ALL OFFICERS.

Cincinnati Exhibitors' and Managers' Association Holds Annual Meeting—Committees Appointed.

The Cincinnati Exhibitors' and Managers' Association, which was just one year old on the occasion of its annual meeting on Monday, Feb. 1st finished a highly successful year by tendering to all of its officers the compliment of re-election to their several positions, as follows: President, Charles Weigel; vice-president, A. G. Hessesheimer; secretary-treasurer, H. G. Kruse. Committees were appointed as follows: Legislation, Messrs. Weigel, H. G. Kruse and Walter Hauck; Organization, J. W. Weinig, A. G. Hettesheimer and Dr. O. Dieckman; Features, Charles Weigel, M. Marcus and L. W. Foster; Smaller Houses, F. Shottmiller, H. Heimerdinger and C. Shober. The organization consists of the owners and managers of a number of the leading houses of Cincinnati, with several out-of-town houses, including the Majestic, of Springfield; the Columbia, of Dayton; the Temple, of Newport, and the Avenil, of Bellevue, Ky. The original object of the association, which was co-operative feature handling on behalf of the members, has been fully attained, as witnessed by the fact that the members have secured the Paramount pictures for their houses, on an agreement regarding the division of territory which has worked out very nicely; and, in addition, other things have been accomplished which show the benefits of organization and co-operation as opposed to tactics of the other sort.

PROGRESS OF HIGHLAND FILM CORPORATION

Cincinnati's New Picture Producing Company Being Advanced.

From events which took place last week, it seems certain that the Highland Film Corporation, whose proposed organization for the purpose of operating a producing company near Cincinnati has been referred to, is a "go." Those who are organizing the company and will have a large part in its management, including John Ford, of Covington, J. Kapfer, of New York, art director, W. J. Munger, of Cincinnati, landscape artist, and Bryant S. Daniels, of New York, appeared at a meeting of the Newport Business Men's Club and outlined the plans which have been perfected for the plant. The Newport organization is deeply interested in the project, by reason of the fact that it would be a considerable feature in the cap of the Kentucky city to have a big film company working in its back yard, as it were, and will lend every encouragement. Ft. Thomas, the Federal military post overlooking the river, is still considered to be the best spot for the company's location. Plans for the several buildings, which will be required, have already been completed, as have other details. Several sites are under consideration near Cincinnati, however, and until this point is finally decided upon nothing more can be done.

DELEGATION TOOK FILMS TO SHOW LEGISLATURE.

The powerful delegation which went to Columbus last week from Cincinnati, Hamilton, Dayton and other Southern Ohio cities, for the purpose of protesting to the legislature against the proposed emasculation of the statute providing for the construction of flood-prevention dams and reservoirs in the Miami Valley, has the distinction, it is believed, of being the first user of moving pictures for the purpose of influencing legislation other than that pertaining to pictures themselves. A screen was erected in the hall of the House of Representatives, upon which were thrown moving pictures taken along the Miami, in Dayton and elsewhere, during the disastrous floods of two years ago, as the best possible argument in favor of measures to prevent a repetition of the disaster. Action has not yet been taken by the Legislature, but it is believed that the pictures did their work, and that the flood-prevention laws will be left untouched.

Manager Lipson, of the Strand, extended a fine courtesy to local G. A. R. members in connection with the running of "The Warrens of Virginia," the Lasky-Belasco Civil War production featuring Blanche Sweet, last week. All members of the old soldiers' organization were invited to see the picture.

Federal Censorship Up

House Committee on Education Reports Favorably for Passage of National Censorship Bill—Effort Will Be Made to Have Bill Pushed Through House of Representatives Immediately and to Bring It Up Again Early in Next Session.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CONGRESSMAN HUGHES, of Georgia, chairman of the House Committee on Education, has submitted a report on behalf of the committee in which is contained a recommendation for the passage of the bill (H. R. 14895) providing for a Federal board of censorship.

An effort will be made to have this bill passed by the House of Representatives before March 4. This will pave the way to its ultimate passage by both branches of Congress and its enactment into law. It is proposed to again bring the matter up immediately following the convening of Congress for the next session. This will take place at a very early date, as it is expected that the President will call an extra session immediately following the adjournment of the present Congress.

The report reads as follows:

The Committee on Education, to whom was referred H. R. 14895, have considered the same, and submit the following report with the unanimous recommendation of the committee that the bill do pass:

The necessity for censorship of motion pictures is beyond question. It has been acknowledged by a large majority of the film manufacturers by their voluntary submission of their films to unofficial boards of censors for approval. That the public demands this censorship is demonstrated by the scrupulous regularity with which the producers exhibit such approval at the end of each picture.

With the acknowledgement of the need of censorship both by the motion picture interests and the public they serve, the question arises as to what shall be the censorship and who shall do the censoring. "The National Board of Censorship" at New York City is composed of representatives of various moral and civic organizations. The expenses of this board are paid by some of the leading motion picture interests, and it has no legal authority. At the request of the manufacturers this board passes upon the pictures. The actual work is largely done by paid secretaries as representatives of the board, working upon standards approved by the board. It is estimated that from 85% to 95% of all pictures produced in this country are passed upon by this unofficial board.

In addition to this voluntary board there are numerous official censors, both State and municipal. The establishment of such large numbers of these local boards clearly demonstrates the inadequacy of the so-called "National Board of Censorship," which by its very unofficial character cannot exercise effective censorship. Though it were to exercise a careful and intelligent censorship over 95% of all pictures, still there would remain five per cent. which could be immoral and unfit to be shown. It is only fair to assume that those pictures which are most objectionable will not be voluntarily submitted for censorship. An unofficial board which has not the right to examine 100% of the pictures is in reality not a board of censorship, but a board of recommendation and approval. As a matter of fact, evidence before the committee discloses that a very considerable percentage of the pictures approved by the unofficial board are declared by the local boards unfit for exhibition.

The character of the motion picture industry renders State and municipal censorship inadequate. Motion picture films are essentially articles of interstate commerce. They are not manufactured for use in any one State or municipality, but practically every picture is exhibited in all of the States of the Union, and many are exported. Innumerable inspections by local boards work great hardships on the industry. In the absence of any official Federal censorship the States and cities are finding it necessary to establish these local boards to prevent the exhibition of immoral, indecent and obscene pictures. The only adequate method of censoring motion pictures is to be had in a Federal commission.

The bill which this report accompanies provides for the appointment by the President of five commissioners, and a supplementary force of advisory commissioners and deputy commissioners to be appointed by the commission. The commission is required to license all films intended for interstate commerce or which are to be offered for copyright "unless it finds that such film is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or depicts a bull fight or a prize fight, or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to impair the health or corrupt the morals of children or adults or incite to crime."

It is further provided that a film not having been licensed by the commission shall not be transported in interstate commerce and shall not be granted a copyright. The exhibition of unlicensed pictures at places of amusement for pay in the District of Columbia, or in any of the Territories of the United States or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States, is prohibited. The penalty for a violation of this act is a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both, and the confiscation of the films used illegally.

It is provided that a fee be charged for the licenses to defray the expenses of the commission.

NEW BOOTH REGULATIONS.

Washington, D. C., Police Authorities Adopt New Regulations Relating to Operating Booths.

A number of changes have recently been made in the police regulations of the District of Columbia, many of which have a direct bearing on the motion picture theaters, and the following announcement of these has just been made by the District Commissioners:

Section 12, of Article 16, has had the two following sections added:

"Section 12a. All motion picture machines shall be enclosed in a booth of fireproof construction not less than 7 feet wide, 8 feet long and 7 feet high for one machine, and for each additional machine add 4 feet to the length, and shall be provided with not less than two openings for each machine, one for observation by the operator and the other for the operation of picture on screen, said openings to be provided with doors or shutters of heavy metal and shall overlap the openings and be arranged to slide without binding in properly constructed grooves, said doors or shutters to be suspended by a string or cord and fastened over top of machine so arranged that in case of fire the string or cord will burn and release the doors or shutters which will automatically close the openings.

"Section 12b. The doors of all motion picture booths shall be made to open outward and to be self-closing, the booths shall be provided with ventilating shafts or openings that terminate on the outside of the building not less than 18 inches in diameter.

"Section 12c. Waste pieces of films will not be permitted to lie around the booth, but shall be placed in metal boxes with tight-fitting covers and said pieces of film shall be removed from the booth after each day's performance; separate metal boxes with self-closing tops shall be provided for waste pieces of hot carbon; separate metal boxes with self-closing doors or lids shall be provided for extra reels of film.

"A bucket of water and a bucket of sand shall be kept in each booth in addition to the fire extinguisher.

"Section 12d. Smoking shall not be permitted in any booth where inflammable or combustible films are used, nor shall any operator while engaged in the operation of any motion picture machine, read any book, paper or other printed or written matter; he shall devote his entire attention to the operation of the machine, and any violation of this section of the regulations governing motion picture theaters, or any regulation governing electric wires or apparatus will subject the operator to a revocation of the operator's license in addition to the penalty provided."

FILMS C. O. D. EXAMINED ONLY IN EXPRESS OFFICES

New Ruling by Interstate Commerce Commission Saves Expressmen's Time.

Exhibitors, under a supplemental report of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the matter of uniform rules, receipt and classification of express matter, will no longer have the privilege of examining films sent to them by express C. O. D., at other than express offices. The report reads that "in the item 'Moving Picture Films' it is proposed to refuse C. O. D. shipments with prilege of reel examination; screen examination is already prohibited. At the hearing the express companies contended that where reel examinations were permitted at the consignee's address, considerable time was lost by drivers having to stand around until the examination was completed, resulting in delay to delivery of other express matter. No one appeared at the hearing in opposition to the proposed change; but a letter of protest, which is a part of the record, received by us from an extensive receiver and shipper of films urges that the privilege of reel examination in the express office be not denied consignee. C. O. D. packages containing miscellaneous articles are, under instruction of shipper, subject to examination, and even to partial acceptance. The express companies stated that such examination should not be extended to reel examination of films. The present classification will be modified by the addition of the following 'Reel examination may be made only in the express office.'"

The express companies are required to establish this ruling on or before May 18, 1915, and to retain the same for a period of two years from February 1, 1914, unless otherwise ordered by the commission.

BRIEF WASHINGTON ITEMS.

Benjamin F. Pitts, of Frederick, Va., was noted among the visitors to Washington of last week. Mr. Pitts is contemplating the erection of a new brick theater with a seating capacity in the auditorium approximating 500, and with a balcony for the accommodation of 150 patrons. The cost of this new theater will amount to in the neighborhood of $21,000. It is said that Mr. Pitts will exhibit the films of the United Film Service Company when the house is completed.

Harry Church, who operates the Bonita theater in Norfolk, Va., and J. B. Trent, proprietor of Trent's theater, in Lynchburg, Va., were seen along Broadway, in New York, last week, holding conversation with Sidney B. Lust, manager of the United Film Service Company of this city. Messrs. Church and Trent stopped over in Washington on their way back.

F. A. Ogden is reported to have taken over the Fairfax theater in Culpepper, Va. Mr. Ogden at present operates the Eclipse moving picture theater in that place.

Earl E. Reese has severed his connections with the Electric Theater Supply

Company and has organized what is to be known as the Exhibitors' Co-Operative Booking Agency, with offices in Room 212, Bank of Commerce & Savings Building, at Seventh and E streets, Northwest. This new concern plans to handle feature films for the various manufacturers and will cover the territory which includes West Virginia and North and South Carolina.

A. Parish, of the Virginia theater, in Richmond, Va., was a visitor here.

J. Leo Yates, formerly assistant to the local branch manager for the General Film Company, and lately a road man with the United Film Service Company, has been placed in charge of the Baltimore branch of the latter company succeeding W. H. O'Brien, who resigned to join the Kleine interests in Philadelphia.

Mr. Reddick, representing Armbruster & Kock, was in town during the week securing booking for "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

President Wilson and several members of his cabinet and their families were present at a private exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation," which is based on "The Clansman," a book written by Thomas Dixon, a former schoolmate of the President. The exhibition was given in the East Room of the White House, where the white walls were used in lieu of a screen.

Official Washington was treated to an exhibition of Lyman Howe's new motion pictures. "[illegible]r Navy in 1915," at the Columbia theater on Washington's birthday. At Crandall's theater last week Government officials and the heads of the various bureaus of the Post Office Department witnessed an exhibition of the sevral reels of motion pictures depicting the work and the various systems in operation at that Department, which are to form a part of the Federal exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition.

The Princess theater, in Northeast Washington, has changed its policy and is now running a ten-cent show daily, with a five-cent admission for the children. Paramount pictures and the Box Office attractions are being shown exclusively and from all reports Joe Morgan, the manager of the house, is meeting with good results. For the convenience of patrons, arrangement has been made to run the show on schedule.

IN PITTSBURGH.

The Lyric Amusement Company recently secured the Arcade theater in Carnegie, Pittsburgh, Pa., and is now under the management of F. J. Nally. A new Powers 6A machine is one of the first improvements.

Mr. Bender, who recently opened a new theater in the West End of Pittsburgh, Pa., is now arranging for the rebuilding of the Bender & Williams theater on Troy Hill, near Pittsburgh, Pa.

The unique pony campaign, for youngsters of Pittsburgh, was launched in the Miles theater last week. Announcement of this campaign, which will give to the child receiving the greatest number of votes from those purchasing tickets in the Miles a beautiful Shetland pony and harness free, was made recently, and since that time the Miles box office has been flooded with inquiries and names of popular children.

It has been stated that Mahoningtown, Pa., may have another moving picture theater in the near future, providing the state inspector will approve of the building which is intended to be used. This is the Sheehy building on North Liberty street, recently vacated. Should the deputy inspector approve of the plans of remodeling the building, the theater will be opened soon.

Con J. Brown and John Wolf of Ebensburg, Pa., recently purchased the Moose theater in Cresson, Pa., and will take possession March 1. The theater is in the heart of the town and has been doing a good business. Cresson has two picture houses. Wolf and Brown are owners and operators of the Happy Hour theater in Ebensburg.

Pittsburgh's New Theater

Clark & Roland's Newly-Completed Regent Picture House Said to Be Most Beautiful Theater in America—Situated on Penn Avenue—Interesting Description of Arrangement of Seats, Decoration and Lighting—Expensive Organ Installed.

Special to Moving Picture World by Pittsburgh News Service.

COMPETENT judges have pronounced the Regent theater in Penn avenue, near Highland avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., one of the most beautiful moving picture theaters in America. It was built and is owned and operated by Messrs. Clark and Rowland. It was erected with the intention of providing all the latest ideas in moving picture theaters. The arrangement is unique. The full area of the building is occupied by seats so arranged that the sight lines are about perfect, every seat being placed that the screen can be readily seen from every part of the auditorium. The entrance lobby, 22 feet wide from Penn avenue, leads to a foyer under a tier of seats, called "bleacher" seats. Three entrances, or aisles, lead from this foyer. A fountain is located on the center aisle of the auditorium. The main figure is of bronze and was imported from Italy. Both the entrance lobby and the foyer have marble wainscoting and marble trimming, with marble mosaic and terrazzo floors.

The main auditorium is decorated in ivory and gold with the side wall panels in a tapestry imitation of ivory and lavender. The style is Italian Renaissance. The seats are of mahogany with leather upholstering. The aisles are carpeted. There has been installed in the main auditorium a rich tone organ at a cost of $10,000. The auditorium is lighted by means of a total ceiling indirect fixture and side wall brackets with silk shades, which diffuse the light. The building is absolutely fireproof and every means for safety has been provided. H. S. Bair was the architect.

QUARTERLY LICENSE FEES IN PITTSBURGH.

Notice was served recently on moving picture theater proprietors by Director of Public Safety Charles S. Hubbard of Pittsburgh, Pa., that unless they paid their quarterly license within 24 hours the police would close their doors until the revenue was paid.

According to the director's secretary, there were 43 moving picture theaters who failed to pay their license for the first quarter. The income for the first quarter last year on nickelodeons was $5,617.

TWO NEW PICTURE THEATERS IN PITTSBURGH.

Two new moving picture theaters are announced for Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa. Last week Tom Patterson, acting for the D. Herbert Hostetter interests, leased to Frank Hartor and Theodore Rothman the first floor of the building located at 243 Fifth avenue. The space secured is 25x140 feet, about midway between Market and Wood streets, and it is to be fitted up as a motion picture theater. The other house will be in the Mellon Block above Smithfield street. After remodeling the storeroom it will be known as the Quality theater.

NEW LAWRENCEVILLE HOUSE.

A new moving picture theater is also announced for the Lawrenceville district. It will be built at once on the H. J. Heinz lot, at the forks of the road, Penn avenue and Thirty-fourth street. The owner will erect the building for a tenant. The theater will seat 1,000 people. The lot is 50x100 feet.

SHORT PITTSBURGH NOTES.

The United States Realty Company has sold for M. Gilman to an unnamed purchaser the Palace theater at 1505 Carson street, Pittsburgh, Pa., for $4,000.

James Steele, manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Pittsburgh, Pa., is once again hunting larger quarters for the Pittsburgh branch. The offices in the Wabash building, as well as the film rooms in Ferry street, are entirely too small to properly accommodate the large forces of workmen and larger quarters will be secured as soon as possible.

George Bates, of the Pittsburgh Commercial Motion Picture Company, recently made a local film for F. A. Seitz of Freeport, Pa. This film was depicted throughout Freeport with great success.

William E. White, of the Colonial theater, Beaver Falls, Pa., and Richard Kennedy, sales agent for the Shadolite Company, attended the Harrisburg convention and demonstrated their new invention, the Shadolite, for the lighting of moving picture houses.

James Delves, secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, reports that he has received quite a number of applications for membership.

John McAleer, who is well known in the film business, formerly of the home office of the Picture Playhouse Film Company in New York, is now managing the Pittsburgh branch of this company at 422 Penn avenue.

Mr. McAleer says he expects to make a friend of every exhibitor in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The Grand theater in West Newton, Pa., has installed a Seeburg solo orchestrion and the Pastime theater in Blairsville has purchased a Seeburg motion picture player, Style Q.

The Peoples theater, Fifth avenue, Tarentum, Pa., is the first motion picture house in this city to adopt the plan of having white light in the main auditorium. The front of the house is fully lighted and patrons of Manager Oppenheimer's popular theater enjoy the unique experience of watching the films in a perfectly illuminated room.

Prof. John G. Bradley, of the Waynesburg, Pa., college, is staging a motion picture play, entitled "The Metamorphosis of a Freshman," which is supposed to cover the entire college course of the hero of the story. It will show a football game, snipe hunt, a field meet, Junior Prom, etc. The pictures are being made by Mr. Larabee, manager of the Greene County Telephone Company. When the play is completed it will be shown in theaters here.

Blackfield, Pa., is to get a theater and amusement hall. Plans are now being prepared for the erection of a theater of modern design. The building will be of two stories. The first floor will be used as a bowling alley and pool room. The second floor will be the picture theater.

A large electric sign has been placed in front of the New Beaver theater, Beaver, Pa. It is twelve feet in length and hangs in a perpendicular position, twenty feet above the pavement. Emblazoned upon it are the words, "The Beaver." It is quite an improvement and gives to the theater an air of stability and permanentness.

The big combination pipe organ in the Garden theater, costing $5,000, the most unusual musical instrument in Johnstown, Pa., was completed last week and played before the public.

The instrument is placed in a balcony above the picture screen and furnishes music for the photoplay hall and for the roof garden.

INDIANA EXHIBITORS BRING SUIT AGAINST MAYOR

Spurrs, of Marion, Arrested on Sunday Law Charge, Asks Damages for Fake Imprisonment.

By Indiana Special Moving Picture World Trade News Service.

THREE damage suits were brought against Mayor J. O. Bachelor, of Marion, as the principal defendant, by Howard Spurr and Goldie Spurr, his wife, who operate the Royal Grand theater, and Verne L. Voke, operator of the Marion theater, in that city. The actions have grown out of the arrests of the plaintiffs Sunday, Jan. 31, for alleged violation of the Sunday law in operating their moving picture houses for exhibition purposes, although ostensibly to obtain donations for charity. Mrs. Spurr sues for $1,000 damages for false imprisonment, while Mr. Spurr and Mr. Voke ask for $500 each. In all of the suits the arresting officers are made co-defendants with the Mayor.

In the complaint brought by Mrs. Spurr the principal allegations are stated upon which recovery is asked in all three suits. The complaint recites that she was wrongfully arrested upon a charge of violation of the Sabbath law, that she was at all times ready and willing to give bond, and that she made every effort thus to guarantee her appearance for trial. It is further alleged that in order to hold the plaintiffs in jail, where they were from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 8 at night, the Mayor purposely secreted himself and that diligent search failed to locate him and that those acting by and under his orders refused bond. The complaint adds that during the imprisonment of Mrs. Spurr, she was thrown into association behind the bars with women of lewd character and loose virtue, although herself a woman of good repute as the defendants well knew, and also with a crazy woman and with a colored woman. Finally after six hours of imprisonment she was released upon habeas corpus proceedings before Judge Vanatta of the Superior Court.

Howard and Goldie Spurr were arrested the first time Nov. 8, were fined in the Police Court by Mayor Batchelor without offering defense, and were acquitted by jury in the Circuit Court Jan. 22. Because of the acquittal the Spurrs opened their theater Sunday, Jan. 31, the Marion theater also being opened. Mayor Batchelor contended that the jury verdict was decisive regarding only the single alleged violation of the law and that nothing short of a court decision on what constituted a violation of the Sunday law could suffice. The habeas corpus suit is still pending as are the prosecutions for Sabbath breaking.

CATCH MAN WHO CUT DRESSES IN PICTURE HOUSES.

A man has been caught in Gary, Ind., who, it is said, has ruined 200 or more dresses of women and girls of that city. One of his favorite fields of activity was the moving picture theaters. Under the cover of the darkness of the picture houses he ruined many dresses with a pair of scissors.

STOVE-MAKING FILMED.

Motion pictures for educational purposes, depicting the modern manufacture of stoves and ranges, were taken at the plant of the Globe Stove & Range Company, Kokomo, Ind. The film is being shown in New York, Chicago and other large cities in connection with industrial training in the schools of those cities. The Indiana plant was selected by the educators because of its completeness.

HEALTH BOARD APPROVES OF INDIANAPOLIS HOUSES.

The inspectors of the Indianapolis board of health have filed their semi-annual report concerning the sanitary conditions of the moving picture theaters in that city. The report states that there has been great improvement shown in this particular and that the most serious complaint is that dirty floors were found in two or three places.

TOOK IN SHOOTS.

While he was giving testimony in a damage suit, heard in Indianapolis, recently, Zachariah T. Landers was asked by an attorney what he did on a certain day. He replied, "Oh, I took in about eight or ten shoots." The judge and jury were under the impression he meant drinks until he explained that "shoots" was the new name for five-cent moving picture shows.

INDIANA BRIEFS.

The Luna theater in Tipton still remains dark, no one showing a disposition to open the house. The house has passed through varied ownerships with indifferent results.

The motion picture theater that has been owned and operated at Hoopeston, Ill., by Worley A. Ross, has been purchased by Albert Betts, of Frankfort, Ind. The theater will be managed by Arthur Keller, of Forest, Ind.

Moving pictures will be taken of the city of Warsaw, Ind., and will be shown later at the Colonial theater in that city.

The management of the Isis theater, Kokomo, Ind., is showing two acts of vaudeville, changing Mondays and Thursdays, in connection with the moving pictures.

The moving picture theater owned by Frank Hatfield was one of the many buildings destroyed by fire at Centerville, Ind., recently.

The New Victoria theater in Peru, Ind., has opened its doors again after being closed for some time while extensive improvements were being made. This theater has undoubtedly the most beautiful interior of any show house in that city. The seating arrangement has been changed. There is plenty of room between the rows of seats and the aisles are wide. The screen can easily be seen from any part of the house.

Messrs. Whistler and Musselman of Peru will start a moving picture show at Royal Center. They will use the room formerly occupied by the Edison.

A. E. Irons, of the Community Film Corporation has arrived in Logansport to assist Major Boult in staging a three-reel drama to be acted by the people of that city.

At the close of the regular season of English's Opera House, Indianapolis, Barton & Olson will take over the theater for the summer months. This firm has been able to secure this house during the summer for the past several years. They show moving pictures and high-class vaudeville at popular prices. This theater during its regular season houses the elite of the city and it was thought that popular-priced attractions would not draw the people. Barton & Olson have kept the standard of the attractions booked into this house, during their short season, so high, that standing room has been the general rule at each performance. The firm controls many theaters in Indianapolis.

"Parsifal" in moving pictures was shown at St. John's church, in Muncie, Ind.

The Rensselaer, Ind., K. of P. Lodge had the use of the Princess theater in that city for one night when they showed "Damon and Pythias" in moving pictures.

A new player piano has been installed in the Dreamland theater at Mooresville, Ind.

Sy Palmer, of Peru, has rented the building formerly occupied by the Dreamland theater, located at Macy. He will open his new show house just as soon as the equipment, which is of the latest type, arrives. The machine will be operated by Claude McElhaney, of Peru, who has been connected, in the same capacity, with the Wallace theater in that city.

CLEVELAND FINANCIERS BUILDING BIG THEATER

Emmanuel Mandelbaum and Others Erecting 2,500-Seat House on Euclid Avenue.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A SITE in Euclid avenue, Cleveland was leased during the past week for what will be the most palatial motion picture theater in America, according to plans of the promoters. Not less than a million dollars is involved in the transaction, and erection of the building will begin in the present year. Cleveland financiers, headed by Emmanuel Mandelbaum, a pioneer in the motio picture in this city, will own and operate the theater. The site is on the north side of Euclid avenue next west of the Hotel Statler and has a frontage of 65 feet and depth of 319 feet. It will be covered with the theater building and a commercial structure costing in excess of $500,000. Work on the theater will start as soon as plans can be prepared. It is expected to have the house. with seating capacity for 2,500, open before January 1, 1916.

The location is known as the old Stillman place and the theater, it is announced, will take the name of the early owners and be called The Stillman.

Mr. Mandelbaum, who is a director of the company owning and operating the Strand theater, New York, says The Stillman will be designed and conducted along the same lines as the New York house. He was an officer in the Film Service Association, the first organization of picture men in the country. He was an organnizer and director of the Mutual Film Company. About two years ago he left Cleveland to head the World Film Corporation in New York, but recently disposed of his interes and returned here.

TWO PROPOSITIONS FOR STATE CENSORSHIP

Cleveland Business Men May Propose Abolition of State Board or May Try to Supplement It.

Two drafts of a proposed bill to provide a state board of censors to act without pay were drawn up by a committee appointed by the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce. Each form will be duly considered at a meeting of committees from the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, representatives from Columbus and Cincinnati at Columbus.

One form of the proposed bill provides a small board which will act in conjunction with the present state board of censorship. An executive secretary, it stipulates, will receive a salary, the others to act without remuneration. The other form, which is favored by the majority of the members of the committee, abolishes the present board and creates a board of about thirty volunteers from as many cities of Ohio as is possible, to be appointed by the governor and some other state official.

BRIEF OHIO ITEMS.

The Mall Building Company, Cleveland, has ordered immediate work on construction of a new theater building in the rear of the present location, Superior avenue. The new theater will replace the present Mall, with an artistic lobby-arcade entrance from Superior avenue. It will cost about $25,000. Louis Becht, manager of the Mall, closed negotiations with the owners and lessees of the property to be occupied.

The Duchess theater, East 57th street and Euclid avenue, Cleveland, has installed a new stage setting, painted and constructed by a New York scenic concern. The set cost Manager Buckley $1,000, but he feels it money well spent.

At the recent operators' ball, held in Cleveland, motion pictures were taken of the grand march.

PHILOMATHIAN CLUB OUT FOR CENSORSHIP

Aroostook County Organization Against Freedom of Film Shows.

By John P. Flannagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EFFORTS to establish a county board of censorship for moving pictures in Aroostook County are being made by Aroostook ministers and women's clubs, which are strongly opposed by the exhibitors of this county.

It seems that the fight especially centers in Presque Isle, where the Philomathian Club has been endeavoring to lay down rules under which Proprietor J. J. Holmes shall conduct his theater. The Philomathian Club has requested Mr. Holmes to allow no young people under sixteen years of age at his theater except Friday afternoons, and that only educational pictures shall be shown at that time. The Philomathian Club has also made strenuous efforts to improve the quality of pictures shown in Presque Isle houses. Certain influences have been successful in prevailing upon the Presque Isle town authorities to withhold Mr. Holmes' license. Mr. Holmes has paid his license fee to the town and is running his theater, but the authorities have not granted the license yet.

It is reported that a bill for the establishment of an Aroostook County censorship has been introduced in the legislature, and is being strongly opposed by the county exhibitors. Petitions were sent to Senator Hersey and Representative Tuttle by the Aroostook Ministers' Association asking them to oppose the proposed amendment to the Sunday laws of Maine, allowing moving picture exhibitions on Sunday.

COACHES TEAM WITH MOTION PICTURES.

Coach Arthur N. Smith, of the University of Maine track team, has very nearly completed arrangements whereby the Maine track men are to be instructed in the art of the cinder track game by the use of moving pictures. Smith has secured films showing the leading track champions in the country in action at various athletic meets, and has leased a movie machine. This is only another example of the initiative of the Maine Coach, and such ideas as this have helped to place the University of Maine in the commanding position that she now holds in the track and cross-country world. Smith is the pioneer in moving picture instruction for track athletics and it is believed that the movement will be popular among trainers throughout the country.

SHORT ITEMS FROM MAINE.

George Pullen, who has been exhibiting in the town hall at Oakland, has opened the Toy theater in a building of its own. This will show every night in the week, using General Film service exclusively.

The Park theater, of Bangor, has changed its admission fee from 10 cents in the afternoon to five cents. Admission in the evening will be 10 cents as usual.

The Old Town Amusement Company, lessees of Central Hall, O. B. Fernandez, manager, has taken a lease of the motion picture hall to be in the new Masonic Hall building.

E. M. Chase, of Brownville, has opened up the Gem theater.

A new picture house is under construction at Belfast by Mr. Eaton, and will be located next door to the Colonial theater, of which Mr. Bray is manager. This house will be ready for business about March 10, and will be completed at an estimated cost of from $12,000 to $14,000.

Reports from the moving picture houses all over the State of Maine are to the effect that business is excellent. In many quarters of the state, houses are increasing their nights of exhibition, and the exchanges state that little objection is made to increasing the prices and quality.

New Theaters Down East

Two Fine New Picture Houses Planned by Amusement Company of Boston, Which Already Owns a Number of Theaters—New Bedford, Mass., and New Haven, Conn., Cities Where New Houses Will Be Built—Both Will Have Seating Capacity of 2,500 Persons.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TWO new theaters are now in process of construction by the corporation controlling the Olympia theater, Lynn, Gordon's Olympia and the Scollay Square Olympia, Boston. One is located in New Haven, Conn., and the other in New Bedford, Mass. It is estimated that the entire cost of the construction of each building will reach a quarter of a million dollars.

The New Bedford house is located at the corner of Purchase and Elm streets, in the center of the city directly opposite the Parker House. The structure was designed by William L. Mowll, of 50 Bromfield street, Boston. It will have a seating capacity of 2,500. There will be a single balcony and two tiers of boxes, each of which will contain four boxes. The interior decoration will be most pleasing. The house will be constructed of reinforced concrete. A ventilating system, through which 40,000 cubic feet of air will flow per minute, will be installed. The machine booth will be suspended in the rear of the building and will be about 60 feet above the street level.

The New Haven house is located in Temple street and will have a seating capacity of 2,500. The plans for this structure were designed by Architect C. H. Blackhall, of Boston.

The lobby will be of marble dado with mosaic floors. There will be two tiers of boxes on each side of the stage. The interior walls will be covered with acoustic felt, which will prevent echoes of any description.

An expensive organ will be installed in each building and it is thought hat they will be opened around the first of September.

WORCESTER'S NEW ROYAL.

The New Royal theater at Worcester, Mass., recently opened under the management of Fred J. McAloon, with "The Little Rebel," featuring Miss Gene Gauntier as the stellar attraction. This makes the ninth moving picture house doing business in this city. The house is advertised as Worcester's Finest Picture Playhouse and is of absolutely fireproof construction. A ladies' orchestra, under the leadership of Miss Violette Cadoret, furnishes the music. The house was constructed on the location of the old Worcester Market. The entrance is of marble wainscoting and heavy plate glass trimmings. A ventilating system, which brings fresh air into the building from outdoors, heating it over a steam coil in the winter and cooling it over ice in the summer, has been installed. Mutual and United Film Service is used.

OTHER NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

John Keon, of the Federal theater, Salem, Mass., entertainned several of his friends at a dinner, which was held on the stage of his playhouse, after the performance last Saturday night. About seventy-five persons, including the acts on the bill, were in attendance.

Oz Tessier, of the Royal theater, New Bedford, Mass., is remodeling his popular playhouse and at the same time continuing to offer his patrons the best attractions. When alterations are finished, Mr. Tessler states that the theater will have a seating capacity of 2,000.

C. A. Palmer has undertaken to exhibit motion pictures in the Town Hall, Ashland, Mass. This building has been closed for some time but with Mr. Palmer at the helm, it ought to be a success.

Sol Phillips, formerly connected with the Automatic Vaudeville Company of Boston, has assumed the management of the Scenic theater, Mattapan, Mass.

The Lubin production, "Threads of Destiny," featuring Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and her son, has been booked throughout New England for two months in advance.

Joseph Tables, of the Nickel theater, New Bedford, Mass., and Charles Allen, of Allen's theater in the same city report that they have had more patrons and have done a better business since they increased the price of admission to their houses from five to ten cents. Tables and Allen were the only two exhibitors in New Bedford who dared to raise the admission price.

The Park theater, Taunton, Mass., has forsaken stock productions for the silent drama. Manager Malley has arranged with Fred B. Murphy for United Film Service.

Several photoplayers were the guests at the annual ball of the Springfield Lodge of Elks, during the past week. A dinner in honor of the screen stars was given at the Hotel Kimball. The players present included Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Costello, King Baggot, Marc McDermott, Miriam Nesbit, James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, Flo La Badie and Rose Tapley.

The eighth episode of "The Exploits of Elaine" was the featured attraction at the fifth anniversary week of the Beacon theater, and the third anniversary week of St. James theater, both in Boston.

Manager Samuel Bernfield, of the New England Pathe Exchange, is elated over the success of "The Life of Our Saviour," which has been booked through the Lenten season.

James Sullivan, a member of the firm of Sullivan Brothers, proprietors of the Majestic theater, Pittsfield, Mass., is dead after a short illness of pneumonia.

Charles Phillips, roadman for the Fox Film Company, successors to the Box Office Attraction Company, who has just returned from a three weeks' trip through western Massachusetts and Connecticut, reports that there is a great clamor from the moving picture patrons in the small towns for feature attractions.

Mr. William D. Friel has purchased the Majestic theater, Easthampton, Mass., from Henry Walz. Mr. Friel sold the house a few years ago to the Eastern Theaters Company.

The Opera House at Brattleboro, Vt., and the Grand theater, at Rutland, Vt., are now flying the colors of the Trimount Amusement Company under the management of Messrs. Tighe and Mackey.

The new Colonial theater at Brockton, Mass, opened on Washington's birthday. Manager Ripley offered "The Thief," featuring Dorothy Donnelly as the star attraction.

Fred B. Murphy, who recently purchased the New England rights to all releases of the United Film Service, has now obtained the New England rights of the Ambrosia American Company and two-reel feature reissues of the New York Motion Picture Company. This brings his program up to seventeen reels each week. Mr. Murphy also expects to secure the New England rights of two other American companies, releasing two reels each a week. This will bring his total program up to 21 reels a week.

W. C. Sansoucy, of the Nickel theater, Biddeford, Maine, kept his house in darkness on Ash Wednesday.

The office of the New England Universal Film Company is the scene of unusual activity these days. Manager J. A. Eslow is preparing for his visit to Universal City.

The Five Biographs

Biograph pictures have been, to a measurable extent, directly responsible for the success of the majority of exhibitors, and have pioneered the way to the present high standard of quality in motion pictures. The same organization that accomplished these achievements is now producing the FIVE BIOGRAPHS.

The success of Biograph pictures has been founded on the bed-rock of quality; not on the shifting sands of temporary popularity. : : : :

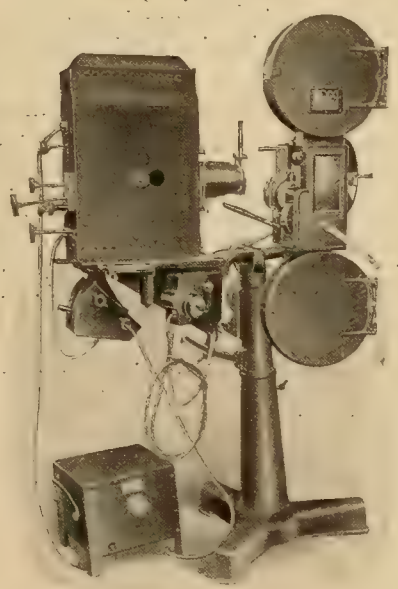
SPECIALIST

You prefer a specialist in law or in medicine.

Why not a specialist in the manufacture of projecting machines?

You know that our prescription for making a perfect projection machine is unexcelled.

Our prescription for that prevalent disease known as poor business, is the following:



R

A Simplex TRADE MARK PAT'D machine, properly located in the theatre with relation to the screen and the point of vision (remember you are selling pictures on the screen), a well-designed operating room, a good operator, direct current, good film service and conservative advertising.

Over 90% of the film manufacturers and the leading theatres of the world recognize that the trade-mark SIMPLEX and the name PRECISION stand for quality, value and service.

Just Plain Facts

There is a force at work, strong only in its ignorance of the fact that it believes and always has and necessarily always will that the motion picture theatre owners of today are not doing their own thinking. They really believe back of their diminutive brain that they are doing the thinking for the exhibitors of this country. They are working and employing practically every means that comes to their hand to tell of imaginative things about Kriterion that should influence the exhibitor from using it. Their narrow brained efforts, however, are proving useless. Men from all over this country are spending money to travel from the gulf and the coast to spend more money and sign contracts so that they can handle the Kriterion pictures.

The result is that this so-called ignorance has created a bit of advertising that has caused the thinking man to investigate. He has come to New York, personally looked the ground over, looked at Kriterion pictures and was convinced. He is returning to tell you about them, not in a narrow way, but from a real business standpoint, not in a comparative way, but from a meritorious standpoint. Some of these men after they have seen Kriterion pictures and Kriterion methods have invested their all to exclusively control Kriterion pictures for their territory and in some instances they have purchased the rights to several territories. That is how strong Kriterion is today.

Those who are wasting their time trying to find demerits in Kriterion to the loss of their own product are not the kind of people that are creative, neither are they builders, their purpose is to destroy, and in their destruction they are including themselves.

KRITERION IS CONSTRUCTIVE IN ITS POLICY

It is building along constructive lines. It is creating and not destroying. Its efforts are not centered on the destruction of some other individual or company, but all its energy is concentrated in the making of its own pictures in the perpetrating of the better things in the business and in the upbuilding of the industry.

The result of all this is that Kriterion pictures are going to be served to each and every exhibitor in the United States who wants Kriterion Service. Within the next 30 days, there will not be a location in the United States that will not be served regularly every day, decidedly distinctive and at a saving. Because in Kriterion the saving is big. There are no misdirected operations, together with mis-spent money, over-paid salaries and conditions that are damaging in their very outline. These are not in Kriterion. Kriterion is backed by honest men and honest business methods. The business methods and conditions that have been laid out have proven highly satisfactory to those who have tried Kriterion. It gives them the right that belongs to any individual to conduct his business along the lines he sees fit.

Kriterion is not built to make any one man rich, to make any one company rich or any set of individuals rich, but is made for the purpose of entertainment. It is constructed so that the ultimate consumer will benefit just as much as does those who have made the pictures. The people whose daily entertainment consists of motion pictures will benefit by Kriterion, they will see the pictures that were built for them and not for a few at the head of the organization who might see bigger profits because of it. This is what makes Kriterion DECIDEDLY DISTINCTIVE.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

LUBIN.

PATSY BOLIVAR, NO. 11, PATSY IN TOWN (March 8).—A singular metamorphosis of fate transforms Patsy into a veritable melodramatic hero. After the dream he had in episode Number Ten we find him bound for the great city leaving no trace of his whereabouts. But the watchful Jane inserts a personal in a newspaper telling of his mother's illness and asking him to write. Arriving at the market place with the farmer, he sets out to make his way in the city and, having a considerable part of the money gained as a prize for life saving, he decks himself out in a new suit of clothes. He encounters an engaging bunco steerer, known to the police as Bunco Bill, the Crying Crook, and although many times warned by a friendly policeman named Flinn, Bill's tears cause him to believe his new friend a much persecuted man, who, after introducing Patsy to some companions, who fleece him of a goodly amount of his money at cards, takes him to sleep with him and poor Patsy awakens in the morning to find he has been robbed of his last penny.

However he has seen the personal in the newspaper and telegraphed home to say that he is well and happy and will return home when he has made good. On receipt of the telegram Jane discovers that Jack and his wife, Mary, are about to visit the city and induces them to take her with them. On the morning after their arrival while Jane is setting out to find some trace of Patsy he is sitting in his room contemplating suicide. Finding a pistol in a bureau drawer he tries to shoot himself but the weapon is not loaded, and when he tries to hang himself to an electric fixture, he pulls that and the plaster from the ceiling down on his head. Then, wandering into the streets, he several times misses the faithful Jane, who, assisted by Officer Flinn, is searching the streets and resorts. In one of these resorts Bunco Bill is encountered and refuses to tell Flinn where Patsy is, but agrees to tell Jane, and she asks him to come to her hotel.

That night, Patsy decides upon ending his life by a plunge in the river and proceeds to the dock where he sits for a few moments of reflection, an event which results in making him famous. Bunco Bill and the yeggmen have decided to do away with Officer Flinn for his continued sleuthing, and luring him into a chase after them, lead him to the very dock where Patsy is considering his fatal plunge. A struggle occurs between Flinn and the yeggmen and he is thrown into the river and saved by Patsy. In the police station Patsy is elevated to the position of a real hero and is induced to accept a position on the force.

Meanwhile Bill and some of the yeggmen repair to Jane's hotel, and Bill sends in his card. She hurries to meet her caller in the office and at once consents to go with him. But Mary, not wishing that she shall go alone on such a doubtful errand, insists upon accompanying her, and enters the taxicab with her and the yeggmen. As the cab pulls away Patsy dressed as a policeman clings on behind it, and when the yeggmen attempt to force the young women into a building in an alley, Patsy effects their rescue and the picture ends with Patsy and Jane in each other's arms for the first time.

WINNING WINSOME WINNIE (March 9).—Sam Burroughs, the sole member of the Jenksville police force, is in love with Winnie, queen of the village lunch-stand. Their courtship progresses favorably until the arrival of Diamond Dan Hicks, a city grafter who sells glass diamonds to the Jenksville inhabitants at fancy prices. Hicks cuts a disastrous inroad into the love of Winnie and Sam, and finally gains Winnie's consent to be married by placing upon her finger one of the "phoney" rings from his stock of jewels.

The night before her marriage to Hicks, Winnie repents her hasty action in throwing Sam over. In her regret she reads her favorite passage from a book Sam has given her: "Ah, my love's like a red, red rose, That's newly sprung in June." She falls asleep gazing at a huge vase of red roses, the symbol of the homely Sam's love. Walking in her sleep, her mind centered upon her deep-seated affection for Sam, she carries a red rose to Sam's room, together with a note avowing her love for him. Sam has just entered the room and watches the strange sight of the sleep walker depositing the note underneath his pillow with mingled feelings of delight and astonishment.

When Winnie has left the room he reads the note and whoops his joy upon discovering her love is still for him. Now he is determined to stop the wedding upon the following morning. He has just wired to the city to get information that will lead to Hick's arrest and the answer comes back that the jewelry fakir should be imprisoned instantly. While Sam reads this wire, the wedding procession winds up the center aisle of the village church. In the choir is old Squire Jenks who, in the absence of any arrests in the past four years, has been practicing faithfully during that length of time in the hope of mastering the wedding march on the trombone. Honoring the event of Winnie's marriage he now toots his favorite tune with ecstatic fervor. At this moment, however, Sam enters, wildly flourishing a telegram ordering the arrest of Hicks. He stops the wedding ceremony in the nick of time, hands the enraged Hicks over to Judge Jenks for arrest, and after explanations are made, proudly takes his place as the bridegroom. Hicks is hustled off to the tiny village jail and from behind iron bars listens mournfully as Judge Jenks continues to practice the wedding strains. Sam, delighted over his first arrest, is more than willing to yield placidly to his capture by Cupid, and Winnie—well, she loved Sam from the first.

A SIREN OF CORSICA (Special—Three Parts—March 10).—Carola de Lisle, a wealthy Corsican woman, with all the fierceness of her race, has been for two seasons the reigning sensation of Nice. Her recklessness at the gambling tables causes her to become known as "La Belle Corsicaine." John Selden, a wealthy American, who is on a business trip to Europe, arrives in company with a friend Phill Shaw. Carola tries hard to capture Selden with her wiles and although deeply in love with his wife at home he is not averse to a little flirtation with the beautiful Corsican. She makes him her guest in her apartments, and his name is many times mingled with hers when they are seen together in the automobile parades of the afternoons.

But the American does not suspect that he has a bitter enemy, supposedly his friend, in the person of Joseph Morse, once an unsuccessful suitor for the hand of his wife, and his escapades with the Corsican are treasured as being seeds for the sowing of discord on his return to America. On one occasion Morse makes a snap shot picture of Selden and Carola together, apparently in a spirit of jest, but in reality to furnish evidence of at least constructive infidelity to the wife at home.

On the arrival of Morse in America, he immediately excites the jealousy of Lenore Selden by telling her of her husband's escapades with Carola, and showing her the photograph with them together. Selden's young son Jack, a lad of 13 or 14 years of age, refuses to believe the stories to the discredit of his father, and sends him a cablegram urging him to return home at once. Then it becomes necessary for Selden to inform Carola that he is a married man and their pleasant relations must come to an end. She writes him a note saying that rather than see him leave her for another woman she would kill both him and herself. On receiving no reply from him, she proceeds to his room to find that he has departed for America. She secures his address at the hotel office and follows him to New York, where they arrive on the same day in separate steamers. She proceeds at once to a hotel and Selden to his home. Here he is coldly received by his wife and on demanding a reason for it, learns of Morse's vile tales against him and telephones him to come to the house at once. Morse, never dreaming that his deceit has been discovered, replies that he will come. At the same time Carola has left her hotel and proceeded to the address secured in Nice. Before Morse's arrival at the Selden home, the husband endeavors to convince his wife of his fidelity, but without success. In a burst of affection he takes her in his arms and the scene is witnessed by the vengeful Corsican outside the window, pistol in hand. But before she can fire the shot, Morse is announced. Morse enters the room with Selden, and the latter shows him a paper to sign, in which he confesses that he has spread lying tales about him to influence his wife. This Morse refuses to sign, and before Selden can enforce compliance, Carola shoots through the window and escapes, not knowing that her bullet has reached Morse's heart instead of Selden. The police are called and an examination made. The confession intended for Morse to sign and a pistol with one chamber empty, are held to be sufficient evidence of Selden's guilt.

He is arrested, tried, found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree, and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. After appeals to the governor have failed, the stricken family endeavors to settle down and wait until the long years have waned away, and among the first duties assumed by the wife and son, is the packing away of his wearing apparel. While folding a coat little Jack discovers in one of the pockets, the note written to Selden by Carola in Nice, and Lenore now believes that she is on the track of the true criminal. But the police refuse to busy themselves with the case, since there is no evidence that the woman has ever been in New York. Lenore, however, is not satisfied and visits her husband in the penitentiary. While not hopeful for the success of her plan to proceed to Nice and meeting Carola, he is only too glad to consent to any plan that may lighten his own burden of apparent guilt.

Accordingly she proceeds with her son to Nice. She is armed with a requisition from the governor of her state, in case that the probable guilt of the suspected Corsican can be established. Proceeding to the Casino, she mingles at once with the people there, and meets Carola at one of the gambling tables. Carola wins heavily, and invites Lenore to supper. At the table, under the influence of wine, Carola acknowledges that she has been in New York, and left it again within three hours, the noise having almost driven her mad. When Carola passes along the corridor to her room she becomes conscious that she is being followed. She opens the door of her room, but before she can close it Lenore stands before her and accuses her of the murder of Morse. Carola under the sudden accusation convinces Lenore of her guilt. She proceeds to the push button on the wall for the purpose of calling the hotel people when in her terror Carola seizes her. A fierce struggle ensues between the two women and Lenore is being overpowered when Jack, hearing the noise in the room, calls the police, and the guilty woman is in the hands of the law to be taken back to America.

IN THE DRAGON'S CLAWS (Special—Two Parts—March 11).—The white colony of Pekin are giving a ball at which "Clutch" Crawford, his daughter, Helen, and Gustaf Schmidt, a gun agent, are guests. Crawford, who is the American "powder king," is selling powder and guns to Prince Wong Fu, Manchu Prince, who, though he poses as a friend of the white residents, is secretly behind a Boxer uprising. At the height of the ball the Boxers swarm in. The guests flee to the upper floor. Grant Gordon, a soldier of fortune, taking refuge in the hotel from the street, fights his way through the Chinese and upstairs to the suite where the Crawfords have retreated. Prince Wong, who has it in mind to make a captive of Helen, reaches the Crawford suite and all but induces them to trust to him. While he is below getting his followers together, Moy Lee, an Americanized Chinese, Crawford's valet, leads them out of the hotel to the water front, via an underground passage he remembers from his boyhood. Gordon parts from the Crawfords to return to the fighting.

Five years later the "powder king" at Catalina receives a mysterious telegram telling of a conference about a new revolution. Schmidt at El Paso receives the same telegram. These war promoters meet at Catalina to find the "poppy blossom." Meanwhile Gordon has come to Catalina from the fighting in Mexico. He and Helen renew the friendship and love that began in the thrilling hours at Pekin. A yacht flying a poppy blossom puts in at Catalina. Crawford and Schmidt go aboard and find Prince Wong, now an exile under the Chinese Republic. Wong wants their assistance in a royalist revolution he is fomenting. They join him and draw Gordon in as a practical fighting man. Prince Wong on seeing Helen again loses interest in the revolution and plots to kidnap her. This he does by taking her prisoner while she is sailing. His men overturn her sloop, giving the appearance of a capsize.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NOTICE:—Every Exhibitor should read and sign this, whether member of the League or not.

Where Do You Want the Convention?

National League President Pearce Asks All Exhibitors to Help Select the Place of Meeting.

IN THE present administration of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, the opinion of every exhibitor in the United States is of value—is wanted—and National President Pearce is asking for it here!

Preparations for the next annual convention are already under way. A city must be chosen. This city must be one that meets the approval of the greatest numbers. Without your definitely expressed view on the point, it is impossible to decide on a city to suit the majority, hence President Pearce wants both League members, and non-members, so long as you're an exhibitor, to express yourself by means of the coupon attached hereto, and MAIL TO HIM TODAY!

This is the psychological moment for us to "put across" the strongest, solidly-welded organization our League has ever had the opportunity to become! Many things have made this the time to put on pressure, i. e., the extremely harmonious conditions of all interests enjoyed at present; the fight on the war tax at Washington; the adverse legislation that has been enacted and forced in various States. These are all contributory factors toward convincing every exhibitor that they should become a member of the League. We've the "big chance" right now! Let's strike while "the iron is hot" and have the sort of League we've all wished for—powerful enough to get what it wants for all its members, influential enough to demand and attain every honorable thing it may deem well to have.

A Different Sort of Convention—that's what this one's going to be! Don't forget that! it's mighty important! Conducted strictly along business lines; avoiding the dissension and wrangling that only retards progress and putting the loud pedal on every helpful influence that will make this Convention one worth holding and one worth you taking your time to attend.

Displays that tell something; a thousand hints and suggestions that are worth money to you; information galore that you can take back home, turn to the increase of your own personal business, benefit by, profit by and result in increased profits for your own personal purse! That's the sort of Convention this is going to be—the very best the League ever had anything to do with!

Where shall we hold it? That's the important thing! We won't know what you think till you tell us and we just care enough about what you think to furnish the coupon for your convenience. Your opinion is valuable in deciding this city. Prompt results mean prompt action. Tomorrow you may be busy, and forget—and we can't list your good intentions.

Don't run the chance of overlooking it, but FILL OUT NOW THIS COUPON and mail it to National President Pearce. You'll be doing a good thing for yourself—a good thing for the League—and we'd appreciate your interest.

The "all for one, and one for all" policy was never more timely than right here in this. Get on record. We'll appreciate your opinion—and most important of all, DO IT TODAY!

National President,
Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

He takes her aboard his yacht. While he has her a prisoner Helen's father arrives at the yacht coincident with the news that Helen is drowned. Wong uses his yacht making a pretense of hunting for Helen. Gordon learns of Wong's treachery through Moy Lee, who is now a secret agent of the republic. He goes aboard the yacht and rescues Helen. Wong returns just as the lovers are leaving. A chase between the yacht's launch and Gordon's launch follows to an isolated cove where the fugitives leap ashore and take refuge. Wong and Gordon fight on top of the cliff, and the Prince is hurled to the rocks on the shore below.

THE WINTHROP DIAMONDS (March 12).—John Winthrop, his wife and daughter, Elsie, are social climbers, but his son, Dick, is of an opposite nature. To add social prestige to her household, Mrs. Winthrop invites the Countess Dacre and her brother for a visit. At the same time Marjorie Moore comes to the Winthrops' home to act as a paid companion to Elsie. Mrs. Winthrop eagerly plans a marriage between the Countess and Dick, but Dick, by this time has fallen in love with Marjorie. The girl loves Dick, but fears to show it for fear of incurring Mrs. Winthrop's wrath.

A ball is given to which Marjorie is not invited, but she is ordered to sit up late in case she is needed. Marjorie falls asleep in the library. The guests depart and Mr. Winthrop puts the family diamonds in the safe. The noise awakens Marjorie, who gets up and enters the room as Mr. Winthrop repeats the combination. The next day the jewels are found missing. Mr. Winthrop tells his suspicions to no one, but employs a detective, who finds fingerprints on the safe and declares that a woman is the guilty one. Dick, heart-broken, feels the web closing about Marjorie.

That night he sees through the darkness a woman's form descend the stairs and enter the library. His heart sinks. It has been Marjorie all the time. He determines to warn her and let her get away. He is about to follow the woman to the library when a strong arm catches him and holds him tightly. It is the detective—armed. The woman advances to the safe, gives the signal and a man enters. As the man prepares to assist the woman cracksman he sees the portieres move, warns his accomplice and the two try to escape. There is a shot fired by the thief, another by the detective, then the lights are switched on, revealing that the woman thief is dead in front of the safe, while the man is held safely in the arms of the detective. Dich rushes forward, tears the veil from the face of the dead woman, and discovers to his joy that it is the Countess, not Marjorie as he suspected. The family enters at this moment, Marjorie among them. They are told the truth and Dick takes the girl outside. The detective recovers the diamonds from the trunk of the Countess and restores them to the Winthrops.

Dick determinedly puts his foot down and demands Marjorie as his wife. And consent is willingly given.

MAZIE PUTS ONE OVER (March 13).—When John Van Zant shows up at home with Mazie, a chorus queen and famed as "The Girl on the End" matrimonially attached to him, old Van Zant and his wife tender her a chilly reception. Disgusted, Mazie hikes back to the chorus and John, to his amazement, sees his father going to the show that evening when he is supposed to be engaged at his office. Mrs. Van, suspicious of her husband's many evening business engagements, has hired Hairlock Sholmes, a detective, to shadow him. Mazie, on the end, recognizes Van Zant in the box and flirts furiously with him, and as he doesn't recognize her, in her make-up, he jumps at her invitation to meet her after the show. John sees his respected dad dragging his newly wedded wife off to a lobster palace, and, furious, at the behavior of his two-faced pa, runs off to get ma and show her his falseness. But Sholmes has phoned ma that her better half is at the Rennert cafe with a dame and ma, swearing vengeance, leaves a note for John, saying that she is going gunning for his father's affinity. John gets home just in time to receive a phone message from Mazie, via the cafe waiter, that she has the Old Man in Dutch and to come to the cafe immediately. Having read his mother's note, you can bet he gets to the cafe as quickly as he can, arriving just in time to avert a tragedy and help square things all around.

ESSANAY.

FATHER'S NEW MAID (March 8).—Mr. Grouch has a decided antipathy for young men who call on his daughter. He shows it by ejecting all visitors. But the daughter is so popular that he finds the labor too great for a small man and determines to hire a big Swedish maid to do the heavy work of removing callers. Jack, the favored suitor, sees Mr. Grouch's ad in the paper, and, disguising himself as a maid, applies for the job and is given it. The new maid performs her duties with such skill that Mr. Grouch is smitten and proposes marriage. Daughter catches her parent on his bended knees and threatens him with publicity unless he gives his consent to her marriage with Jack. He gives it and when last seen is waiting for his Swedish maid to come back to him.

THE MAN IN MOTLEY (March 9).—Smith of the D. P. W. was a jester. He was fitted by fate to play the fool. Smith loved Ruth Devreux, a rose from old England. When she had come to India he had entered the lists for her hand but she loved Captain Howard, an army officer. Howard proposed to Ruth and she bade him wait until the night of the Rajah's ball for his answer. When Smith decided to attend, Howard persuaded him to go dressed as Romeo, because he said, Ruth was going as Juliet. Smith found he was the only one present in costume, but he furnished the absurdity for which he was famous, and all laughed. The natives tried to abduct Ruth and beat back Howard. Smith appeared and they fled, thinking he was a devil. Ruth fainted and Smith, the splendid fool, persuaded Howard never to let Ruth know that Smith had really saved her. Ruth told Howard she loved him as her hero.

THE FABLE OF THE DIVINE SPARK THAT HAD A SHORT CIRCUIT (March 10).—A troupe of small-town amateurs put on a war drama at the Grand Opery House. Lila, who played the heroine, was the daughter of the poultry merchant. After the show all her friends told Lila she was a Knockout and better than a Broadway star. She had been keeping company with a boy who sold Gent's furnishing goods, but when Albert called he found her away up-stage. She wanted to be a great actress. She went to the big city and consulted an ex-tragedian who ran a dramatic school. Her father kicked in $500 to make her a star. In time she received a diploma. All she needed was a play, a company and some scenery, a manager and a theater in order to make a HIT on Broadway. At last she got a job in No. 4 company. She had a swell part. She played the deaf and dumb lady who removed the tea things in the fourth act. They hit towns that the Rand-McNally Alas never heard of. They finally lit on a rock at a whistling point in Pa. The Great Actress came back to the scene of her triumphs without the toot of a horn. This time the boy was sure welcome. Moral: A Marriage License beats a Diploma any old time.

MUSTANG PETE'S PRESSING ENGAGEMENT (March 11).—Sophie Clutts, driving into town with Hiram, her irascible father, sets two hearts pumping. Mustang Pete makes a date with Sophie and goes to Slippery Slim's tailor shop to have his trousers pressed. While he is sitting behind the screen, Sophie comes to the shop to be measured for a dress and Slim forgets all about Mustang and his trousers. He leaves a hot iron on them and burns the most important part out of them. Then Slippery Slim takes Sophie out for a drive. Pete borrows Slim's trousers and starts in pursuit. He comes across them spooning and tells Sophie's father. Hiram gets busy and chases Slim away, but when Slim tries to get into the wagon, the horse runs out of the shafts. Pete takes Slim's place. Hiram chases him away and Pete hits him on the head with a brick. When last seen, Slim is pulling his wagon down the road and Mustang is a passenger.

BRONCHO BILLY'S TEACHINGS (March 13).—Broncho Billy, a young clergyman, is struck on the head and left for dead by his partner, just after they have struck it rich on a mining claim. He is found by a young Indian girl and taken to the Indian camp where he is nursed back to health. During his convalescence he teaches the girl the commandment "Thou Shalt Not Kill," and the motto "Forgive and Forget." Another Indian girl asks him to write out the mottoes for her. Broncho grants her request, whereupon the first girl tries to kill her. Broncho frustrates the attempt by showing her the commandment written on the slate. The clergyman's partner is captured by the Indians and brought to the camp. The chief orders that he be killed, but the clergyman saves his life. The prospector comes to thank him and Broncho recognizes his partner. Crazed by rage he attempts to kill him, but the Indian girl shows him the commandment in his own writing. He obeys it. His partner makes restitution.

MR. BUTTLES (Special—Three Parts—March 12).—Mr. Buttles is a Machiavellian butler at Everdun Towers, the estate of the Earl of Everdun. He forms a corporation of the servants to work for tips from guests and persuades the impecunious Earl to act as the drawing card at a salary. The Earl gets Huggins, his chauffeur, who is his double, to masquerade as His Lordship while he slips off to Paris. Huggins' real name is Hemmingway, an author and London newspaper man looking for local color. Huggins falls in love with Sallie Flighter, an American heiress and guest at the Towers.

Huggins tells Sallie who he really is, but Buttles, fearing the end of his scheme, makes the girl think he is a bit "balmy." Huggins is led into a compromising situation through the visit of a chorus girl, one of the sweethearts of the Earl. Buttles extricates him on his promise not to try again to reveal his true identity. Buttles engineers two proposed elopements in such a way that he stops both and gets handsome tips. The Earl is informed of the love affair of his double and Sallie. He returns to stop the match. By skillful maneuvering Buttles persuades the Earl to leave with Gwendolyn, for which Huggins agrees to act out the part of his Lordship to the end of the season, Miss Flighter alone knowing the secret. The syndicate reaps a rich reward.

VITAGRAPH.

THE JARR FAMILY NO. 1—THE JARR FAMILY DISCOVERS HARLEM (March 8).—Finding that feuds between the occupants of a two-family house are not at all conducive to peace and happiness, Edward Jarr and his family of wife and two children blame it all on Brooklyn, where they live. Consequently when Jarr gets a raise in salary, they decide to get away from the horrors of internal warfare and move to Harlem. The moving van is accordingly sent for and amid much weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth, the Jarr Family tear themselves away from the beloved city of rubber plants, and baby carriages. All goes beautifully until their arrival in Harlem, then the best parlor lamp gets smashed and other unfortunate accidents attendant upon moving, happen to them. After getting settled, the Jarrs give a house-warming to which Mr. and Mrs. Rangle, Jack Silver and the sprightly Clara Mudridge are invited. Jarr's boss, Jabez Smith, also attends. Gertrude, the servant, puts some cold bottles and a bird out the window and then the fun starts. Two mischievous fellows living in the apartment above lasso the refreshments and haul them up to their own rooms. Inside, Old Jabez becomes infatuated with Clara Mudridge, to Jack's intense jealousy. They start the phonograph and commence dancing. The people below become decidedly peeved when the chandeliers begin to sway and plastering falls in clouds, so after a little angry conversation by means of the steam radiator pipe, the Jarr's house-warming party breaks up as the police break in. The local newspapers announce that the house-warming proved a most recherche affair and at the same time publish the engagement of old man Smith and Clara Mudridge. Jack Silver openly accuses Jarr and his whole family of getting up the party in order ot take his sweetheart (Clara Mudridge) away from him and make a "Bird in a gilded cage of her." Since the Jarr Family discovered Harlem and settled in its midst, a new interest has been added to it.

SNATCHED FROM A BURNING DEATH (Special—Two Parts—March 9). LeGrande, an old trapper, refuses to vacate his favorite hunting grounds when ordered to do so by Sampson and other settlers, and his life is only saved through the intervention of his daughter, Joan. The rascals soon learn to fear the girl's keen wit and daring, and Sampson, already pledged to marry Sanchezza, a Mexican girl, falls in love with Joan. Sanchezza jealously plans revenge on Joan. LeGrande builds his home on his chosen site, and shortly afterwards Chandler, a young man from the East, comes out with deeds in his possession showing that the land on which they live is his (Chandler's). He entrusts to LeGrande for safekeeping a large sum of money and some valuable documents, and Sampson, learning of this, determines to burn the cabin to the ground, hoping thus to secure vengeance on Chandler, whom Joan openly favors. It so happens that Sanchezza, equally desirous for revenge on Joan, has come to the log cabin to kill her. Hearing Sampson, she hides. Not knowing who she is, he seizes her, throws her into a room and locks the doors. He then sets the place on fire. As he is about to go, Joan enters, and, after a terrific struggle, he knocks her down, ties her hands and fastens her to the wall of the burning house. On the way out he steps through a broken place in the floor and his foot is caught tightly in a bear-trap directly underneath. Joan cries to him to release her, but he cannot get away himself. The flame and smoke overcome Joan, and, terrified at his terrible plight, Sampson shoots himself. Sanchezza, unable to get out of the room in which Sampson has confined her, perishes in the flames. Joan is rescued before it is too late by LeGrande and Chandler, who, summoned by their neighbors, arrive in the nick of time. The death of their two enemies leaves Joan and Chandler free to marry, while LeGrande invokes his blessing on their mutual happiness.

A STUDY IN TRAMPS (March 10).—Because of a family feud, Bobby Scrawn's love for Mary Stretch seems hopeless, particularly after the young man has been spanked with a fence picket wielded by the sturdy arm of Pa Stretch. A few days later Mrs. Stretch gives a preliminary talk on tramps and how they can be saved. She announces the subject will be continued at her home on the following Thursday. Mary gets a startling idea and tells Bobby of it. Thursday arrives and twenty or more women are listening to Mrs. Stretch's talk on hoboes, when "Hungry Hank," a tough-looking and ragged tramp, applies at the kitchen door for a "hand-out." Mrs. Stretch has her husband bring him in. "Hungry" is given a dollar and agrees to tell the story of his life. He winds up by saying, "I was cruelly separated from the gur-rl I loved!" Many of the ladies are softly sobbing, when it is announced that a "lady tramp" is in the kitchen. Mrs. Stretch is delighted. "Handsome Sal," bedraggled, unkempt and wearing a pair of men's shoes, is brought in and introduced to the assemblage. As soon as Hank sees her he lets out a yell of joy and Sal rushes into his arms. The tramp explains that she is his long-lost gal and begs for a minister at once. A preacher is procured, and, with Stretch and his wife as witnesses, "Sal" and "Hank" are married with due ceremony. To the complete consternation of all, "Hank," dancing around in glee, loses his wig, revealing to every one that he is Bobby in disguise, while "Sal" proves to be none other than Mary. Her mother faints dead away, while Pa Stretch, after a moment of dumb surprise, bursts into uproarious laughter at the thought of the two young rascals getting married right under his nose. Mrs. Stretch is revived and the excitement finally calms down, but it is a long time before Stretch stops laughing.

THE BLACK WALLET ((March 11).—Both Strong and Ford, rival ranch owners, are given a chance to purchase a valuable water right; the first comer gets it. Strong easily forges ahead of his rival, Ford, who is with his daughter, Mabel, who is ill and unable to ride fast. Ford's foreman, Stuart, meets his boss and at his request takes the black wallet containing the money to purchase the water right and rides hard to beat Strong. He is too late, however, and when Strong rides away with the deed he waylays and shoots him. Stuart extracts the deed from Strong's pocket and places it in the black wallet. The money in the wallet Stuart keeps himself to pay some old gambling debts. Strong, unseen, raises on his elbow a moment, sees the wallet, and, not recognizing his assailant, believes it is Ford who shot him. Strong later manages to find his way back to his house, but is unable to talk. His son Hal, who is at college, is sent for. Meanwhile, Ford and Madge go back to their home, and Ford lives just long enough to thank Stuart when he brings in the deed. Ford dies, and Madge continues the management of the ranch herself. Hal arrives from college and his father accuses Ford, then falls back dead. Hal swears to avenge his father's death. Pretending to be a tenderfoot, he secures a job at the Ford ranch and learns—to his surprise—of Ford's death, and that his daughter is carrying on the ranch. Hal and Mabel fall in love, but he is haunted by the thought that her father is the murderer of his father. Mabel, like her father, uses the black wallet containing the deed as her bank. Stuart knows this and steals the money. Madge misses the money and the foreman blames it on Hal and rides out to "get him" before Madge can halt him. He meets Hal on the edge of a steep cliff, sends a bullet into his shoulder, and Hal falls over the edge. He fortunately strikes on a ledge a short way down. Madge, following, lets herself down by a rope and goes to his assistance. The murder and robbery are fastened on Stuart and he is summarily dealt with.

CUPID'S COLUMN (March 12). While answering inquiries to her department, Sister Samantha, the old maid editor of Cupid's Column in the Daily Clarion, a quintessent widower asks her if she will not give him the opportunity of making it six straight by marrying him. Samantha wastes no time in resigning and the editor appoints Rodney, a reporter on his staff, to take her place. He makes SOME editor, and his amusing replies create havoc among the lovelorn youths and maidens who write in for advice on courtship. Rodney and his friends celebrate his promotion so frequently that his wife, Angelica, desperately writes "Samantha" of her trouble under an assumed name, adding that she loves her husband when he is sober, but he is soldom sober! Not recognizing the handwriting, Rodney writes back advising her to try loving kindness and waiting on him hand and foot. Angelica follows instructions so closely her husband surmises she is the one who wrote to him. He heartily enjoys the peculiar position and uses it to excellent advantage. His wife finally wearies of pampering him, and his dream is over when Angelica finds out that He is "Samantha." She decides to even up matters. Saying nothing, she writes a letter to "Samantha," asking if she had not better seek consolation with some other gentleman, "a kind and good man!" Rodney is furious. He replies that a personal interview with the gentleman in question would facilitate matters. Angelica makes an appointment and, disguised as a man, she meets Rodney dressed up like an old maid to represent Samantha. Some amusing complications occur, his wife removes her disguise, and after she has told him in one outburst of anger all that has been on her mind for a long while, he is soon on his knees humbly begging for her forgiveness.

"THE RADIUM THIEVES" (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Special—March 13).—Doctor Samuel Rayner, Superintendent of the American Skin and Cancer Hospital, is sent abroad to purchase a half a million dollars' worth of radium. He leaves his son, Robert, in charge and takes Betty Weston, a pretty nurse, with him to dress the radium burns on his hand, which has to be done daily. Incidentally he hopes to break up the growing intimacy between Betty and his son. Mallet, a hospital orderly, drops a hint to a band of international crooks, and they follow Doctor Rayner to get the radium. In Berlin a desperate attempt is made to secure the precious material, but, thanks to Betty, is foiled. Turner and Crosson, members of the gang, keep on the trail of Dr. Rayner and Betty, and board the same steamer to America. During the voyage Crosson manages to obtain the case containing the radium, and, unprotected from its deadly rays, becomes blind. Keeping quiet about their loss, the doctor and Betty hear of Crosson's blindness and at once know where the radium is. Betty, with the aid of a little chloroform, recovers the radium. Turner is furious, and sends a wireless ahead, which results in Betty and Dr. Rayner being kidnapped upon their arrival in New York. Crosson gets worse, so Turner and Mallet send for a doctor, who calls a specialist, Dr. Robert Rayner, son of their prisoner. Meanwhile, Turner and Mallet go to a nearby saloon, where they get to quarreling over the disposition of the radium, and Mallet drugs Turner. He then returns to the gang's headquarters and meets Doctor Rob Rayner. He and the crook have a desperate struggle. Turner, who has recovered consciousness, enters, and had it not been for the intervention of Betty would have killed Rob. The police are called, the gang taken away to jail, and their captive released. In consequence of this unexpected turn of affairs, Rob and Betty gain his father's consent to their marriage.

EDISON.

THE MISSION OF MR. FOO (March 8).—Mr. Foo, a mandarin of the lost Empire, in his underground abode at Washington, D. C., prays to the Buddha that the new-born Chinese Republic be overthrown and the Empire restored. Florence, the young daughter of a man high in official circles at Washington, has a hobby for settlement work, and she is seen constantly in the Chinese quarter at Washington. Mr. Foo meets her there, and, secretly in love with her, invites her to his place under the pretext of teaching her something of his country, because she has been so zealous in teaching the Chinese of America. She goes to his dwelling the next day, and Mr. Foo gives her a necklace, which he tells her was given him by the Empress of China herself. Florence leaves and, upon returning home, tells her parents of her experience. They are unable to translate the inscription on the necklace, and invite Tu Sing, the Chinese Ambassador, to dinner, with the hope that he will translate it for them. He tells them that the owner of the necklace is a great soldier of the old Empire, but a traitor to the Republic. Rather than create the impression that they are in league with Mr. Foo, Florence and her parents give the necklace to Tu Sing.

The ambassador employs a spy to locate Mr. Foo and his followers, who are kindling a rebellion which they intend to fan into a blaze in their own country. The spy gets into the secret underground abode, and after he has reported to Tu Sing, the latter goes to Foo's place and tells the traitor that he can either return to his own country and die as a traitor or take poison where he is. Mr. Foo calmly sits down and drinks the tea containing the poison.

ROONEY, THE BRIDE (March 9).—Rooney never had been picked by any of the famous illustrators as a model, but he is pressed into service in this capacity by Mrs. Rooney, who is making the bridal gown for Marion, whose marriage to Artie Boon is to take place very soon. After Mrs. Rooney has fitted the sleeve and the veil, she urges her husband to get out and apply for a job as hod carrier at a new building nearby. He goes and is hired.

In her haste to get to Mrs. Rooney's to try on the dress, Marion passes under a ladder which Rooney is climbing, laden with bricks. She happens by just in time to stop a shower of bricks which Rooney has been unable to juggle. The bricks bound off her head, and Rooney comes down to investigate. Laborers and bystanders pursue the unfortunate Rooney, but he eludes them, and, after the boss has assured Marion he will discharge Rooney, she leaves. Rooney is discharged. He is at home on the day of the wedding and Mrs. Rooney is trying the wedding gown on him. He is extremely uncomfortable with the gown about his shoulders and the veil dangling down his back. Marion enters hurriedly to try on the gown at the last minute. Rooney sees her, and, acknowledging the recognition with a wild shriek, leaps from the window, gown and all.

Artie and the guests are waiting impatiently for the bride, but there is no bride in sight. Father Boon, who has promised Artie an appreciable sum to start him in business providing he takes the bride, is among the rest, apprehensive and doubtful, alternately. He was passing through the town on a business trip and stopped off for a day to see his son's bride. Consequently, it was up to Artie to do something in the way of marriage if he wanted the gratuity. In the meantime, Rooney has struck the broad highway with the gown. Marion and Mrs. Rooney join in the chase. Policemen, loiterers, women, boys and automobiles make up the procession in Rooney's wake. Artie decides to see for himself what is delaying the bride. In his automobile he overtakes Rooney, and, after pushing a ten-dollar bill into his hand, persuades him to accompany him and play the part of the bride.

At Marion's home Father Boon is fast asleep waiting for the bride. The guests are let in on the joke, and the minister's palm is greased so that there is not even one obstacle in the way. Artie's father is awakened, and after he kisses the "bride" through "her" veil the ceremony is performed. At this moment Marion and Mrs. Rooney burst in. The latter proceeds to beat up her husband and explanations are in order. Father is a good sport and writes out a check for $10,000. Mrs. Rooney gets a "wedding present" of several new bills and her wrath is turned away.

A PIPE DREAM (March 10).—Meersham Bowles is discontented. The more he visited his friend, Benedict, and danced the children on his knee and fed them in their high chairs, the greater was his discontentment. The only solution was—marriage, and as Bowles sank into the finely upholstered Turkish rocker in his bachelor apartments and inserted his jimmy pipe between his teeth, he decided to embark upon that uncertain sea of matrimony as soon as the opportunity presented itself. He was soon lost in reverie, and when one starts to dream and soliloquise as the result of a strong pipe, his soliloquies and reveries are unusually perverted and pronounced, and the effects are often greater than those produced by ether.

Bowles' subconscious mind is working. He visits the home of his large and lovable sweetheart. She is sitting close to him on the sofa, and caresses him. She is too fat, and he always detested fat persons. He tries to escape, but Flossie's relatives are in a solid phalanx outside the door, armed to the teeth with muskets, revolvers and knives. Bowles has left his Damascus blade at home on the mantel-piece and cannot fight back. He tries another door and is the target for several cannon balls. He decides to marry Flossie, and a beautiful church wedding results.

At the wedding feast, Bowles, perforce, eats his handful of victuals on the shelf. That is taken away from him for one of the visiting relatives who is half starved. The house is full of relatives. The delivery girls arrive with dresses for Mrs. Bowles, valued at hundreds of dollars. Bowles perspires with nervous excitement. It is bed time. Everything in the house, from the best feather bed to the dog kennel, is occupied by the grasping relatives. He looks into the bath tub. There is a man asleep there, and Bowles turns on the shower bath. He finally hauls the dog out of the dog house and crawls in and goes to sleep. Eventually—the plentious fruition of the connubial knot appears—Bowles has them from a few months up. He is left alone with them and throws a half loaf of bread at each for breakfast. After many other experiences of like nature, Bowles wakes up from his dream.

ON THE STROKE OF TWELVE (Special—Three parts—March 12).—In furtherance of the will of her father, Irene Bromley is allowed so much annually by the trustee, Sidney Villon, a lawyer of loose morals, but who enjoys a place well up in the list in society. Arthur Colby, a wholesome, straightforward young man, is in love with her, but she treats him indifferently at times. She goes to Villon's office for $10,000. He gives her a check, despite the fact that Holden, his secretary, tells him on the side that she has already overdrawn her allowance, and she goes out reminding him of the dance to be given at the Edgerton home. Rupert Hazard, a struggling inventor, who has been excluded from Villon's office shortly previous, pushes his way into the inner office and scathingly denounces Villon, whom, he claims, stole his invention worth a fortune.

At the dance the following evening, Irene, flushed with dancing and in all her resplendent glory and beauty, is seated with Arthur. He proposes, but her chill manner, cleverly affected, freezes the blood in his veins. Later in the evening she gives Villon the same negative answer. Villon, determined to win her, tells her that one word from him and she will be plunged into poverty. His words are heard by Arthur, who happens in conveniently. When Villon leaves, Arthur tells Irene that he heard all, and she gives way to weeping. Arthur leaves, the old clock in the hallway showing the hour to be 12:05.

Irene is startled the next morning to read an account of the murder of Villon in his apartment. Colby is arrested for the crime, having been found with a revolver near the prostrate form of Villon. When the jury seems satisfied conclusively that Arthur murdered Villon, Irene is called to the stand. It has been learned from Villon's valet that the watch in the latter's pocket, shattered by a bullet and stopped at exactly midnight, had been in good running order. Very dramatically, Irene tells of her visit to Villon's office the day after the murder, where she learns that Villon has an enemy, Hazard, the inventor. Irene and her lawyer go to Hazard's place at 12 o'clock midnight a day later at Hazard's request. The discouraged inventor tells them how he broke into Villon's apartment and shot the lawyer, later engaging in a scuffle with Colby, who entered a few minutes later. When he completes his story, Hazard is blown to death by a device he had set to go off at midnight. Irene then tells the jury that Colby was with her in her home at the time the watch was shattered in Villon's pocket. Colby is acquitted, after which Irene takes a different perspective of things and Colby's anxiety is brought to an end.

THE FAMILY BIBLE (March 13).—Henry Gersen, a widower, is very friendly with Mrs. Colby, a wealthy widow. Both have small children, and, dominated by her maternal impulses, Mrs. Colby seeks marriage so as to provide a real "home" for them. When Gersen is disgraced and ruined by the failure of his brokerage firm, due to the defalcation of the senior member, Mrs. Colby pushes her "suit" more strongly, telling him that she is his friend in need. His pride is greater than his love, and he rejects her, accepting his family Bible from her, after she has purchased it at the auction sale of his effects. She places her card inside with an affectionate line.

In the West, where Gersen is working incognito, under the name of "Bursen," he is making good in the office of a manufacturer named Flint. Fifteen years have elapsed, and because of queer transactions in the business of the firm, "Bursen" suspects Flint. Bruce Colby, son of the wealthy widow, by chance accepts an offer of Flint to become associated with him in business. He comes West and immediately Alice Bursen and he become infatuated with each other. Indicating that he wants to audit the books of the company at night, "Bursen" rides to the office in Bruce's car. He enters the office and catches Flint at the safe. There is a hand-to-hand struggle, and Flint is shot acidentally by his own revolver. Bruce rushes in from outside in time to hear Flint accuse "Bursen" of shooting him. Thinking of Alice, Colby agrees to shoulder the blame, and he stays there while "Bursen" goes to his home. Colby is arrested. Bursen hurriedly writes a note to Alice explaining and puts it in the Bible, and as he is crossing a street making his getaway he is knocked down by the car conveying Bruce and the policeman to the station. He is carried into his home, where he dies.

During the trial, Alice rushes in with the note, having found it while looking through the Bible. Bruce is acquitted. Mrs. Colby is opposed to the marriage of her son with Alice "Bursen," whom she does not know, and who, she believes, is only the daughter of a clerk and not socially equal to Bruce. At Alice's home she discovers her card in the family Bible, and, realizing that Alice's real name is Gersen, changes her mind about the disparity in social calibre.

BARRIERS SWEPT ASIDE (Special—Two Parts—March 1).—As the result of incompatibility of temperament, Jack and Natalie are divorced. Natalie secures a position as typist in the office of Murchison, the lawyer who had represented her in the divorce proceedings. As time passes, Jack finds that he still loves his former wife. His newly-acquired freedom grows distasteful. Jack is startled to find Natalie working as a typist, when business takes him to the lawyer's office. Bitterly reproaching himself for the conduct which had resulted in the divorce, Jack vainly pleads for forgiveness.

Murchison falls in love with the girl. In need of the pittance he pays her, Natalie submits to his crude attempts at love-making. Several days later, Murchison calls upon Jack while the latter is giving a dinner to some friends. Of a forward nature, the lawyer invites himself to the feast. As the dinner progresses, Murchison becomes intoxicated. He coarsely announces his intention of winning Natalie. Wild with rage, Jack throws the man out of the house. Unable to endure the thought of Natalie as Murchison's wife, Jack orders his butler to summon a minister.

The young man hastens to Natalie's boarding house. Brushing past the indignant landlady, he enters the girl's room just in time to see her kiss his picture. He orders Natalie to don her hat and coat and accompany him. In reply to her protests, he informs her that she still loves him, else she would not have kissed his photograph. The two return to the Thorpe mansion where the minister awaits them.

FLIRTATIOUS LIZZIE (March 2).—Because Flirtatious Lizzie just can't make her eyes behave, almost every man in town is ready and anxious to lick the other man. The leaders in the race for Lizzie's favor are Strongarm Will, Desperate Dud, and Dauntless Dan. Although the three get into a dozen fights they are unable to decide as to which is the best man.

Lizzie's father suggests that they play a game of horseshoes to decide who shall marry the girl. The rivals agree. Strongarm Will, however, has a card up his sleeve. Hastening to his smithy, he secured a magnetized rod and two immense horseshoes. The rod he drives into the ground under the iron stake at which the rivals are to pitch their horseshoes.

When the contest takes place, Will's amazing marksmanship startles his foes. No matter how carelessly he throws his horsehoe, they invariably ring the rod. Supecting foul play, the two defeated rivals attack Strongarm Will, making him the target of his own horseshoes.

Flirtatious Lizzie arrives upon the scene just in time to catch the unfortunate blacksmith, who imagines it is raining horseshoes. Although he is bruised and battered, Will has no cause for complaint. Angered by the brutality displayed by Dud and Dan, Lizzie announces her intention of marrying their victim.

JARED FAIRFAX'S MILLIONS (Episode No. 6 of The Girl Detective Series—March 3).—The Girl Detective and Warrington, her assistant, are sent to investigate an attempt to burglarize the home of old Jared Fairfax, an eccentric millionaire. The sleuths learn that the old man has an immense fortune concealed in a vault built in the cellar of his mansion. The Girl Detective has reason to believe that the thieves were frightened away and that they intend to return and complete their work. Her suspicions are well founded. That night, Molly Moran and her confederates, Chad and Doran, enter the house. Ruth and her party entrap them in the vault. The crooks, however, escape by a clever ruse and lock the sleuths, the millionaire and his servant in the steel vault.

The girl sleuth conceives the idea of bringing men from the power house near by to the scene. She does this by inserting a knife blade in a lamp socket and blowing out the fuse. This causes a circuit breaker in the power house to kick out. The source of trouble is located and repair men are sent to the mansion. These men discover what has taken place and liberate the prisoners in the nick of time.

McGregor, Fairfax's servant, breaks down and informs the Girl Detective that he had innocently aided the crooks. It appears that Molly had fascinated the old servant and thus made an unconscious accomplice of him. He gives the sleuth Molly's address. Securing the aid of half-a-dozen police, the Girl Detective and Warrington descend upon the rendezvous of the burglars. A wild fight follows which ends with the capture of the culprits. But with the solving of this case, the Girl Detective finds herself confronted by the hardest problem she has tackled so far.

HOW IDA GOT A HUSBAND (March 5).—Although the Needham's servant, Ida, is anxious to be married, her face is against her. An ad inserted by Bill Saddle in a matrimonial paper, gives Ida a ray of hope. She answers the ad, enclosing Mrs. Needham's photo in her letter. Bill promptly loses his heart when he sees this picture. He leaves for the city. Meeting the original of the photo on the street, Bill follows Mrs. Needham home. In the meantime, Slippery Bill, a second-story man, breaks into the house. Hearing someone coming, the man hides behind the portieres.

Saddle enters the house and is confronted by Ida. Although Ida protests that it was she who wrote the answer to his ad, the rancher demands to see the original of the picture in his possession. Hearing Mrs. Needham coming, Ida thrusts Saddle into a closet and locks the door. But the man raises such a rumpus that Mrs. Needham opens the door to ascertain the cause. The sight of the stranger who had followed her home, affords the woman the fright of her life. Mr. Needham enters the house. In his desire to hide, Saddle approaches Slippery Bill's place of concealment.

An inspiration seizes the rancher. As a Justice of the Peace, he is empowered to perform the marriage ceremony. Seizing Slippery Bill and Ida, he joins their hands and makes them one just as Mr. Needham enters the room. While Ida's employers are busy offering their congratulations, Saddle makes his escape. Once out of the house, he tears up Mrs. Needham's photograph and the matrimonial sheet. Raising his right hand, he vows, "Never Again!"

THE WHITE GODDESS (Special—Three Parts—March 8).—Mystery enshrouds Elsie Farnim's life. The girl lives with Mrs. Nayburne, a matron of Jordan University. Once each year, Khanda, a Hindu, visits Mrs. Jordan and pays Elsie's expenses. The girl is led to believe that her parents reside in India. Elsie loves Elwin Gordon. In the Temple of Larmar, the High Priest Hassa Dal gazes into a crystal glove. In it he sees a vision of Elsie promising to be Elwin's wife. As the result of the crystal's revelation, Khanda is dispatched to bring the girl to India.

Elsie is astounded when she learns that she is to return with Khanda. Elwin takes an instinctive dislike to the Hindu and places his arm protectingly about his sweetheart. Khanda interferes and Elwin is ordered from the house. As he goes, however, his sweetheart whispers a request that he follow her to India. Elwin secures passage aboard the vessel which carries his sweetheart and Khanda. As they near India, The Hindu discovers Elwin's presence. He compels Elsie to don native attire and to veil her face. As the result, Elwin fails to recognize his sweetheart when she is taken ashore. Khanda secures the aid of the men who have come to meet him. They attack Elwin and throw him overboard.

Elsie is conducted to the Temple of Larmar. There, Khanda makes an avowal of his love and declares that Elwin has deserted her. The timely arrival of Hassa Dal, the High Priest, saves Elsie just as Khanda is about to embrace her. In response to the girl's plea that she be taken to her parents, Hassa Dal orders her to gaze into his crystal globe. The High Priest's manner fills Elsie with terror. As she gazes into the globe the story is revealed to her. Elsie learns that she is the daughter of a British merchant. The latter and his wife visited the Temple of Larmar with their infant daughter. The child wandered away and climbed to the sacred altar. This was taken by the superstitious natives to mean that she had been sent by their gods. When the infant's parents endeavored to recue her, they were seized by the infuriated natives and burned alive. Believing he was acting according to instructions given him by the gods, Hassa Dal ordered Khanda to carry the child to America, where she was reared and educated. Horrified, Elsie endeavors to escape. The attempt is frustrated and she is compelled to assist in the pagan ceremonies. The worshippers regard her as a White Goddess. To keep her from being defiled by the gaze of the throng, Hassa Dal announces that whosoever looks upon Elsie's face shall have both eyes burnt out.

Khanda, unable to resist the temptation, disobeys the order. He is discovered and his sight is promptly destroyed. Thrown out the temple the man becomes a beggar. As the days pass, the worshippers find that the White Goddess does not answer their prayers. Enraged, they determine to kill her. In the meantime, Elwin, rescued by fishermen, has vainly searched for Elsie. The young man comes upon a beggar and recognizes Khanda. Desiring vengeance, Khanda reveals Elsie's whereabouts. Followed by the beggar, Elwin rushes to the Temple. He comes just as the natives are about to burn his sweetheart to death. Elwin shoots the leaders of the mob, terrifying the rest. Hassa Dal, fearing to cross his people, cowers behind the altar. Khanda gropes his way to the spot and throttles the High priest, unseen by the worshippers. Hastening from the place, Elsie and Elwin make their way to the docks and board an

THE DEATH TRAIN (Episode No. 18 of the Hazards of Helen Railroad Series—March 6).—The discovery that detectives are on their trail, causes Doyle, Broden and Etzer, counterfeiters, to pack their paraphernalia into a trunk and express it to Lone Point. Upon its arrival at that station, a corner of the trunk is smashed. Helen thus learns of its contents. The telegraper immediately wires to Savage, a railroad detective. The latter, accompanied by Duncan, a Secret Service detective, hastens to the scene. At their suggestion, Helen arranges a trap for the counterfeiters.

When the latter appear they are set upon by the officers. Etzer is captured, but his pals get away. Doyle eludes pusuit, but Broden later falls into Savage's hands. Helen, watching the pursuit, ventures on the high trestle which crosses the dry bed of the Loro River. Doyle, who is hiding, sees Helen. Overpowered by a desire for revenge, the man attacks the telegrapher and makes her a prisoner. A rope lies nearby. Binding Helen, Doyle suspends his victime from the trestle and fastens the end of the line around the rails.

Duncan sees this from afar. Although he rushes forward, he knows that the Keene local, due any moment, will cut the rope as it crosses the trestle. Meanwhile, Helen, after a tremendous effort frees her hands. There is one chance for life. The girl commences swinging her body. Each time she describes a wider arc. The train is crossing the trestle when Helen swings toward a beam. The engine wheels sever the rope. Helen flies through the air and reaches the beam. Doyle is captured. Savage and Duncan raise Helen to the tracks and find her uninjured.

WOOED BY A WILD MAN (March 9).—Chief Fearless discovers that the juice of the grape will assuage thirst. The chief conceives the idea of storing this juice to offset future dry seasons. At his command, the tribe stores the liquid in skins, hanging them to the roof of their cave. Years later, the chief dies. Strengthless, his son is despised by the tribe because of his timidity. The chief's son is relegated to tending the tribal fire while Rockface a man of great strength, is made head of the tribe. Strengthless is fascinated by Blue Eyes, the daughter of Rockface. Several other cavemen are in love with her. Rockface announces that the man who succeeds in defeating all other suitors will receive the girl for his mate.

While the suitors are battling, Strengthless accidentally jabs a hole in one of the skins containing the juice stored away years previous. He catches some of the liquid in his mouth. It tastes so good that Strengthless drinks a large quantity of it. The result is the world's first jag. The noise of the combat reaches Strengthless's ears. For the first time in his life, he feels the desire for battle. His father's huge club stands in a corner of the cave. Seizing the weapon, Strengthless ventures forth and attacks the entire tribe. His sudden exhibition of courage and strength terrifies the cave men and they flee. When the members of the tribe finally venture to return, they see Strengthless seated in his father's place, with Blue Eyes as his mate.

FOLLOWING A CLUE (Episode No. 7 of the Girl Detective Series—March 10).—The Girl Detective and Warrington, her assistant, are ordered to run down the river pirates who are working along the waterfront. Disguised in boy's clothes, the girl sleuth enters a notorious dive, where she excites the admiration of Hogan and Donegal, leaders of a band of crooks, by the manner in which she picks Warrington's pocket. The crooks take a fancy to the "boy." Hogan introduces her to the rest of the gang. The Girl Detective thus learns that a schooner lying at one of the docks is to be boarded and part of the cargo stolen. After sending word to the police, the brave girl accompanies the band. The officers arrive while the gang is at work. The thieves entrap the police in the hold and make their escape. A moment's carelessness, however, results in the discovery of the girl sleuth's identity. The crooks carry her to their rendezvous.

Knowing that the police will be on their trail at any moment, the crooks prepare to flee. Donegal plans to punish the Girl Detective for her terachery. Tying her to a chair, the scoundrel lights a fuse and places it in a can of gunpowder. This he stands beneath the chair. Hogan attempts to interfere but proves no match for Donegal. In the meantime, the police have been liberated. They trace the crooks to the den. A wild encounter ensues. Hogan is the first to be subdued. He informs Warrington of the Girl Detective's terrible peril. Dashing into the den, Warrington seizes the powder and hurls it outside. An instant later a terrific explosion testified to the girl's narrow escape.

DESPERATE DUD, THE PLUMBER (March 12).—Philander and Dud, who both love Lizzie, are deadly enemies. Observing Dud spooning in the park with Lizzie, Philander joins them. He attemps to rout his rival by jabbing him in the back with a hat pin. Philander's aim is bad. He sticks Lizzie instead. A fight results. The rivals use paint as weapons. Poor Lizzie, like all bystanders, gets the worst of this encounter. While the battle rages, the girl hastens home to remove the paint from her person. As luck would have it, something has gone wrong with the water supply.

Lizzie sends to Dud's shop for a plumber. Handsome Dick answers the call. Shouldering a huge pipe, he heads for Lizzie's house. The pipe does fearful damage before he arrives at his destination. While endeavoring to locate the cause of the trouble, Dick connects the electric light wires to the water pipes. Lizzie happens to touch one of the faucets and is almost shot through the side of the house. Dud arrives and learns of the trouble which Dick is causing. He invades the cellar where he finds his assistant soulfully playing on a flute and taking things easy. Dud speedily ends the concert and puts Dick to work. This time, the man is more successful. Proceeding up to the bath room to test out the water system, Dick turns on the faucet. The result is a stream of water which hurls him to the ceiling, pins him there, and floods the house.

THE NIGHT OPERATOR AT BUXTON (Episode 18 of the Hazards of Helen Railroad Series—March 13).—Although his daughter is desperately ill, Bob, an express messenger, fears to absent himself from duty. Knowing the child's condition, Helen volunteers to take Bob's place for the run. The express messenger accepts the girl's offer. Tracy, a member of the Blackhall gang, learns that his chief plots to wreck the train at Dark Hollow for the purpose of securing the shipment of gold contained in the express car. Tracy, who owes a debt of gratitude to Helen, refuses to take part in the villainous scheme. Thrashed by Blackhall, the man determines to obtain vengeance by betraying the band.

He carries his story to Bob. The latter immediately phones to the express superintendent. Accompanied by a posse, the latter boards a locomotive and pursues the train. Bob and Tracy commandeer an auto and make a dash for Dark Hollow. In the meantime, Helen discovers a tramp concealed in a chest in her car. Leveling a pistol at him, the girls makes him come forth. The tramp disarms her, but after a desperate struggle, Helen breaks from his grasp. A keg standing in a corner, gives her an idea. Springing towards it, Helen lights a match. She informs the terrified tramp that the keg contains gunpowder.

Bob and Tracy arrive at Dark Hollow and flag the train. The tramp leaps from the train but is captured after a desperate fight. The pursuing engine arrives and the posse capture Blackhall and his gang just as they are about to explode a charge of dynamite under the rails.

BIOGRAPH.

TESS OF THE HILLS (March 1).—Jilted by her lover, she nurses her vengeance until fate gives her an opportunity. Alone on the hillside one day, she sees a man accidentlly killed by the discharge of his own rifle. Circumstances connected her former lover with the affair, and he is tried for murder. The dead man's brother swears to wreak vengeance upon the prisoner if the law permits him to escape. Tess, in a conflict of emotions, is drawn to the courthouse. She alone can save the accused man, for she was the sole witness of the tragedy. But she will not speak; indeed, she has had an opportunity to clear him; but at thought of the other woman she has sealed her lips. Now conscience urges her to tell the truth. She learns that the jury has brought in a verdict of "not guilty" and that the prisoner has started for home. Following swiftly, she is in time to intercept the bullet of the avenger. And later she finds happiness in the love of the dead man's brother, whose dramatic entrance into her life came so near to bringing disaster.

COLOMBA (Special—Two Parts—March 2).—Colomba, daughter of a Corsican landowner, finds her father dead at his table, with a paper before him on which, apparently, he has scrawled the name of his murderer. It is the name of Agostini, a millwright, over whose leasehold there has been a bitter quarrel between her father and a rival landowner. The latter's two sons have committed the crime and sought to fasten suspicion upon Agostini, but Colomba is not deceived. Her brother, Orso, is not so sure as she, however, and refuses to execute summary vengeance. The girl summons her lover, a bandit chief, and declares that her father's murderers have attacked her. Orso then sends his enemies word to beware of his vengeance. They attempt to waylay him in the mountains, and are killed by the bandit chief. Soldiers seek Orso in the mountains to arrest him, but he is warned by Colomba and his sweetheart. Lydia, daughter of General Nevil. He decides

Thos. H. Ince

THOS. H. INCE, a World Factor in Motion Pictures

"The foremost exponent of consistently high standard pictures in the world today is Thomas H. Ince," writes the head of the largest motion picture theater on the Pacific Coast, from San Francisco.

He continues: "The Ince productions are infinitely superior to anything else in the field of pictures.

"Aside from my own convictions the public is the best judge as to who is the gold medalist among the film producers.

"When an Ince picture is shown there is scarcely standing room in my theater.

"Thomas H. Ince has a grip on the people compared with which the work of all other individuals in the film-producing world is not to be considered."

This is the voluntary statement of an exhibitor who opened the first motion picture theater in the West and whose word, therefore, carries more than ordinary weight in affairs connected with the film industry.

Thomas H. Ince's "Battle of Gettysburg" already has earned a profit of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the producers, and hundreds of thousands of dollars to the exhibitors.

His "Typhoon" and "Wrath of the Gods," unprecedented pictures, both of them, are not alone having a historical run in the United States but throughout the entire world as well, wherever moving pictures are shown.

His "The Bargain" and "The Italian," two later achievements, have earned for themselves the title of being the two most powerful pictorial human interest stories yet produced.

Ince pictures are world pictures, just the same as masterpieces in art are the property of the world.

Every Ince picture bears the "chop" of Ince individualism, which is the guarantee of their unquestioned merit.

Public opinion is gradually swerving motion picture production into honest channels just as public opinion has steered the course of history from the time when man knew nothing better than a cave existence.

To be under the spell of public opinion is practically among the unknown quantities of the picture producing world.

Ince pictures have successfully passed the rigid censorship of public opinion and will continue to do so.

There is a chrome-steel honesty about an Ince picture that admits it instantly into the exclusive councils of public opinion without the necessity of overpainted credentials.

When people go to see an Ince picture they go of their own volition and without the urgings of circus posters and battalions of superlatives borrowed from a thesaurus or a dictionary.

They go because of their hallowed faith in a producer who with the touch of genius born of indefatigable labor and experience has achieved something more than of mere passing human interest to the people.

With Thomas H. Ince recognized by exhibitors and the public as the leading producer of the world, motion pictures have reached a stage in development where only the fittest will survive.

to surrender, however, and accompanied by the bandit chief, returns home. There the aged father of the murderers, worn out with grief and futility of vendetta, tells the truth and saves Orso from arrest. Colomba triumphs alike in love and hatred of her enemies.

THE WARD OF THE MISSION (March 4).—Reared in a mission to which his mother entrusted him as a child, the young man wishes to enter the order; but the monks wisely decide that he must first see something of the world, and he is sent forth with a round sum of money. Fate leads him to an inn where he loses all to a gambler. The gambler's wife pities him and learns his story. She is horrified to recognize in him her own son, whom she left in care of the monks so that he might never know his unworthy father. While attempting to return his money, she is discovered by her husband, and in the ensuing struggle she accidentally kills him. The boy, still ignorant of his mother's twofold sacrifice, returns to the mission, and she finds peace at last in a cloister.

THE DEPUTY'S DUTY (March 5).—The cowboy, who has missed his wallet, suddenly sees it in the hands of a greaser who has found it outside the saloon. An argument ensues, weapons are drawn, and the greaser falls. A newly appointed deputy accompanies the sheriff on the cowboy's trail. They pursue him to the home of the deputy's sweetheart, where, on his plea that the affair was an accident, and that there is a girl waiting for him "back there," she hides the cowoby in a closet and denies having seen him. After the sheriff and his deputy have ridden away, the girl returns to the house and discovers that her money is gone. The cowboy, fleeing through the woods, pauses to count the money and discovers in the little bag a note from the girl's aunt, enclosing her savings to purchase a wedding dress. Conscience stricken, he returns and asks the girl to forgive him. The deputy also returns and, seeing his man attempt to escape, fires—for that is his duty.

BLOWN INTO CUSTODY (March 6).—The desperado robs the bank and takes to the open country. The banker and the sheriff's posse give chase. After many amusing incidents the robber eludes them and, taking them unawares, sweeps them off a cliff with a big boulder. Unknown to him, a construction gang has mined the cliff with dynamite. As he is gloating over his coup, the blast goes off, and he is literally blown into the arms of the posse.

NEAR EDUCATIONAL SERIES—The Soup Industry (March 6).—Number 2 in the amusing Near-Educational series. Visitors to the soup factory are conducted through the plant, where they see the raw materials prepared by pretty girls and conveyed to the macerators, whence the chopped ingredients go to the big caldrons for boiling. The visitors' eagerness to see every detail of the process gets them into many amusing scrapes, and finally they land literally "in the soup."

A CHILD OF THE PRAIRIE (Special—Two Parts—March 1).—Tom Martin, a young rancher, has a wife and small child. Unknown to Tom, his wife has become infatuated with a gambler, who, during Tom's absence from home, calls on the wife and tries to persuade her to leave with him. She refuses, and the gambler plots to get rid of Tom.

He hires a team of horses and a buggy and goes to the gambling room of the saloon. Under a table he places a revolver with the barrel through a hole, ties a string to the trigger and when Tom enters later, he is invited to play cards. The gambler forces a quarrel, and Tom starts to pull his revolver when the gambler pulls the string and Tom is shot from under the table. The gambler then goes to Tom's home, tells Tom's wife her husband has been killed and takes her and the little one away.

In packing her household goods, Tom's wife drops a baby dress, and the gambler tears up and leaves behind unthinkingly, an old photograph of himself. In the hurried escape the baby wanders away and becomes lost, and as the gambler fears to remain and search for the child, he forces the woman into the buggy and drives away. Later, cowboys find the lost child. Tom recovers, goes to his home and finds the dress and the torn photograph of the gambler. He makes up his mind that some day he will find the despoiler of his home.

Fifteen years later Tom is sheriff of the county and he receives a letter telling him to arrest the man whose picture is enclosed. He recognizes the photograph as that of the gambler. He starts out to find the man when he sees a young girl in a runaway team. He rides to the side of the onrushing wagon and at his command the girl jumps to his arms. He sees in her a resemblance to his lost baby and tells her of it.

Later, Tom encounters the gambler in town. There is an exchange of shots, and the bullet from the gambler's revolver shatters a lamp just above Tom's head, while the bullet Tom fires reaches the mark. The dying crook tells Tom of how the child was lost, and so father and child are finally reunited.

THE MAN FROM TEXAS (March 2).—The sister of "The Man from Texas," supposedly married to an unscrupulous gambler, is deserted, and before death relieves her, she writes a letter to her brother, who is a cowboy, enclosing a picture of the man who had betrayed her. The brother leaves at once for the little frontier town, but arrives too late, for death had won in the race.

The gambler goes forth and arrives on a Montana ranch, where, in search of a new victim, he meets a beautiful girl. He makes love to her and they go horseback riding together. At an isolated spot, he endeavors to force his attentions upon the girl and his action is seen by "The Man from Texas.' He rushes to the girl's assistance, fells the brute and escorts her safely home. The gambler and the Texan later meet, and in self-preservation, the gambler meets death from a bullet fired by "The Man from Texas."

THE MISSING RUBY (March 3).—Bessie Blake, detective, saves the life of Tom Sterling, the son of a millionaire broker. Thrown in each other's society, Tom's admiration ripens into love, but Bessie is ambitious to rise in her profession, and anticipating Tom's proposal, leaves for the city without divulging her occupation or giving her address.

Tom's sister, Marion, on her wedding day receives from a wealthy uncle, an antique box, containing a single unset ruby. Felix La Trobe, a friend of Tom, suggests that the stone be carefully watched during the wedding reception, and Bessie Blake is assigned to the case.

Bessie poses as a maid in the Sterling home and renews her acquaintance with Tom. Felix La Trobe constitutes himself the guardian of the ruby, and convinces himself that the precious stone is safe. The next morning the ruby has disappeared. Felix investigates, and accuses Bessie. She, however, astounds them all by disclosing the fact that Marion had unconsciously pressed a hidden spring, which caused the ruby to drop into a secret compartment.

THE KIDNAPPED LOVER (March 5).—Nadine Blair is a confirmed heart-breaker, and her father realizes the only cure for her proclivity is to find a man who will not make love to her. He contracts with Jack Harris, a young Englishman. Jack is to receive $100.00 weekly, but if he makes love to Nadine he is to forfeit all moneys paid him.

Jack is taken to the Blair estate, and attends a house party where Nadine at once tries her charms. Jack falls head over heels in love with Nadine, but pretends to ignore her despite her every inducement. Finally offended by his pretended indifference, knowing he does love her, and prevented for the first time in her life from having her own way, Nadine kidnaps Jack with the assistance of her guests, and imprisons him in a small garden house, there to stay until he asks her to marry him. His attempts to escape and his final surrender to the inevitable, are treated in active farcical fashion.

THE GUARDIAN'S DILEMMA (March 6).—Prof. Jaquin Delano joins a circus to study practical zoology. Old man Cummings is the guardian of Anita, a beautiful girl. Cummings rages because the circus tents are pitched so near his palatial home. Anita visits the menagerie tent, sees Jaquin and is impressed with his kind treatment of the wild beasts. Thinking he is only a trainer, she talks to him without an introduction.

Jaquin falls in love with Anita. Cummings searches for his ward, and finding her with Jaquin, takes her home. Jaquin searches for a runaway monkey and finds the pet with Anita. She discovers that Jaquin is a man of education and culture.

Cummings awakens one night and finds wild animals at large in his garden. He climbs a tree, yells for help, but Jaquin, the trainer, reminds him that he was ordered to keep out of the place. Cummings invites Jaquin to get the animals. His identity is disclosed and Cummings gives Anita's hand in marriage to Jaquin.

MINA.

AS HE BLEW HE BLEW (Feb. 18).—Homeless Harry, ensconced in a cosy corner of a freight car, is stealing a ride and a bit of sleep. The freighter stops at its destination and Homeless Harry is obliged to change cars.

At the Opera House, Battling Mike, the demon of pugdom, is meeting all comers; offering a prize of $5,000.00 to whomsoever should win over him. Homeless Harry reads the glaring announcement and decides to make a goal for the $5,000.00; but, not having finished his nap, he sits down by a tree to sleep, perchance to dream. No sooner has Homeless Harry dozed off than Smart Aleck, the boy wonder, places a toy balloon between the sleeper's lips and scampers away. As Homeless Harry sleeps, his rythmic breathing starts inflating the balloon, and, as the balloon swells, he dreams that he is in the ring with Battling Mike and that after two rounds of carnage he has vanquished the pugilistic terror, and earned a big roll, which Homeless Harry proceeds to "blow." Homeless Harry has spent nearly all his dream-money when the toy balloon, inflated to its limit, bursts open and punctures Homeless Harry's "blowing" career.

VALOR'S REWARD (March 10).—Dolly Grey, heiress, is courted by Frank Kley, her guardian's choice. While driving in the park her horse runs away. She is saved by Hurley, a handsome young officer. A mutual affection springs up between the two and Dolly's guardian, Miss Pierce, also becomes attracted to Hurley. He is invited to a lawn party. Dolly's marked preference for his company makes Kley jealous and arouses Miss Pierce's fury.

Kley and Hurley become rivals. Dolly refuses the former. He and Miss Pierce plot to abduct the girl. On a supposed slumming trip she is seized and told she will be held prisoner until she consents to marry Kley.

The following night Hurley visits the Gray home and learns of her absence. Leaving the house he sees Kley enter and, being suspicious, listens at an open window to the conversation. He determines to find the girl and eventually locates the room where she is held. He overpowers both her guards but on the way out is attacked by a gang. Hurley manages to escape with Dolly by means of a fire escape. Swinging head downward, he drops Dolly to the street. Meanwhile Kley and the guardian have been drinking heavily. They drive off in an automobile to visit Dolly and narrowly escape a collision with the taxi containing the officer and the girl. In swerving out of the way they dash over an embankment. When Hurley reaches the scene he finds the two bodies under the overturned machine.

BISON.

DIANA OF EAGLE MOUNTAIN (Two Parts—March 13).—Doctor Goring is on a vacation in the Kentucky mountains. Moran, the proprietor of the still to which the doctor comes, sends his daughter, Kate, to head the stranger off. The doctor and she engage in conversation. They are watched by Bill Driver, one of the moonshiners, who is in love with Kate.

Later the still is raided. The old man is wounded and taken prisoner. Kate flirts with the leader of the officers and while the latter's attention is off his prisoners, she jumps on the horse on which her father has been placed and dashes down the mountainside to safety. She discovers that her father has been seriously wounded. Kate then rides desperately through a cordon of officers and returns to the cave with Goring. The doctor attends to the old man and stays several days at the cave.

Kate and the doctor are attracted to each other. Her gratitude turns to love and she consents to become Goring's wife. Later we find her married to Goring. Her husband is wealthy and she is the leader of an ultra-smart social set. For a while she is contented with the novelty of her surroundings, but soon her heart hungers for the wild life of the mountains. Her old lover has served a prison term; on his release he seeks Kate in her city home. A ball is being given in her honor. Kate wanders out to the terrace, and indulges in reveries. Driver, her old lover suddenly appears through the shrubbery.

Goring has become more and more wrapped up in his profession. His love has never faltered, but he detests the butterfly life his wife is leading. There have been scenes, many and violent, between them. Goring goes into the garden to smoke a cigar and witnesses the scene between Driver and Kate.

He hears her tell Driver how she longs for the old life as well as her promise to Driver to go back to the mountains.

He does not know that Driver has brought a message from her dying father. He hears her tell Driver to meet her later with an extra horse. Later Kate discovers her husband seated at his desk. He does not notice her entry into the room. She tells him of her proposed journey. Goring does not reply. Kate upbraids him for not coming to the ball, for his neglect and his coldness. Then she changes her mood and speaks gently to him. Angered at his failure to reply, she tells him she is going back to the life she has always longed for. She enacts again the wild scenes in her life and lashes herself to a passion where her husband looks at her in contemptuous silence. She then tears down the curtains, smashes the bric-a-brac and leaves in a mad tempest of rage for the mountains.

She arrives at her old home in the cave in time to ease the last hours of her dying father. She and Bill Driver bury the old man in the cave.

Goring has followed his wife to the mountains, and finds her and Driver together. At first his rage overcomes him and he starts to kill Driver. When he learns of the death of Kate's father, however, a reconciliation takes place in the cave over the grave of the old man.

NESTOR.

HIS WIFE'S HUSBAND (March 12).—Jack and Billie are secretly married and start housekeeping. Jack's college chum comes to visit them. Everything is happy until word is received from Jack's parents that they are coming to visit him, bringing with them the girl they expect him to marry.

To save his inheritance, Jack persuades his chum to pose as the husband of his own bride. Many amusing complications ensue. Finally the college chum secretly weds the girl whom Jack's parents have brought with them.

The dilemma is finally straightened out and the two married couples receive the blessings of the old people.

STERLING.

THE KNOCKOUT WALLOP (March 12).—Louie, the candy puller, gets into an argument with his helper. So great is the argument that they finally decide to settle in a prize ring. A fight fan takes charge of Louie and secretly puts him through some training stunts.

The helper is handled by the candy shop flunky in like manner. At length both are ready for battle.

In the fight that follows, Louie and his gang meet the helper and his backers in the "Knockout Club." Louie puts it all over his helper till the flunky, who is accustomed to an occasional injection, gives him a shot in the arm from a hypodermic loaded with tobacco sauce.

The helper grows strong immediately and knocks out Louie with one wallop. He cannot stop with that, and cleans out the seconds in Louie's corner, wrecks the place and rushes outside where he pushes in the wall of a building, completely submerging those remaining inside. He then shakes a pillar, causing the roof to fall on his own head. When the building collapses the helper is buried in the ruins.

JOKER.

SOME NIGHTMARE (March 6).—Ernie loves that dream-producing pipe. But he won't work, and consequently has no money. He has a friend, however, who always has some bright suggestion to make. This time his pal has a wrong idea and tells Ernie to ask the wife for a loan. She kicks him out of her house. They are very nervous and go out on the street to take a desperate chance.

They successfully rob a poor blind man, and with the money go to Hong Hee, who rents them two pipes. They go floating away on a wonderful cloud and dream of riches and beautiful women, whom they fall in love with; but always the terrible spectre of Ernie's wife appears to spoil the dream, which grows more weird each passing minute. When all seems lost they awake. Happy to know it was not true, they both resolve to let the pipe alone in future.

BACK TO SCHOOL DAYS (March 8).—The sprightly widow and her daughter, Betty, are city boarders on the old farm. The village school master loses his heart to the widow, who considers herself too good for him.

Betty is bored with the "dry old place" and longs for some "nice young feller" to come along. She has her wish. Tom, a dapper city chap, comes to board at the farm. The widow "falls" for Tom. She places Betty in the background and walks off with him. The young folks are not so soft, and soon find a way to get together. Mamma tries to put Betty out of the running by making her daughter wear the clothes of a ten-year-old. She then frisks herself up to appear girlish.

Tom sees through the widow's schemes. He makes violent love to Betty, despite her "youth." Mamma is left in the cold. She plays another card, rushing Betty to the village school and turns her over to the old school master. But what's the use? Tom gets wind of this move, diguises himself as a pupil and joins Betty.

Mamma now thinks the field clear and hunts for Tom. Learning of his actions she rushes to the school where she finds Tom and Betty leading the youngsters through outlandish pranks against the infuriated school master.

Trained bears belonging to an Italian faker escape and enter the school. They are helping themselves to the kids' lunches when discovered. There is wild excitement and a rush from the school. In the confusion, Tom and Betty again escape the widow. They meet a parson and induce him to tie the marital knot. He is hastily complying when discovered by the widow from the school house window. She faints into the school master's arms. The warmth of his arms feel good after all and the widow forgets all about Tom and Betty when the school master proposes to her.

SHULTZ'S LADY FRIEND (March 13).—Shultz invests in a barber shop. But he makes an awful mistake. The men folks of Cow Flat shave themselves and all grow whiskers and long hair, with the exception of the bald-headed ones. The hair question soon becomes a serious matter to Shultz. Starvation looms ahead. At last his end becomes so apparent, that, to hasten matters, he hikes down to the railroad crossing and lays his neck across the rail. Coming along the ties to Cow Flat is "The Dancing Girl" dramatic troupe via the "Shanks' Mare Limited." Gail, the sweet leading lady of the outfit, spots the desperate Shultz. She also sees with horror the oncoming train.

It was a narrow squeak, but Gail saves Shultz. Then each see something of interest in the other. She feeds him with a string of frankfurters and gives him a pass to the afternoon matinee. The whole population of Cow Flat turns out to witness the performance of "The Dancing Girl." Gail becomes mighty popular with the men folks.

The troupe, however, goes broke when their manager skips out with their coin. Poor Gail is left in an awful fix. Her position without one cent is horrible. But she again meets Shultz, who has a brilliant inspiration. "With you as my manicurist, business would hum!" declares Shultz. The bargain is sealed.

Does busines hum? Well, you should see the maddening jam of the long-haired Cow Flatters scrambling for their turn to have their "paws" scraped by the "late leadin' lady." But the "late leadin' lady" will not stand for their disgusting whiskers. She refuses to touch a "paw" until all their faces are shaved clean. Shultz, therefore, does a rushing business. Along come a pair of expert French barbers. They are looking for a likely investment. They see the apparently immense business Shultz controls and lose no time closing a deal with him for five thousand dollars.

The overjoyed Shultz and Gail then make a getaway. "I'm elopin' with the leadin' lady," is the contents of the note the disgusted chagrined Cow Flatters find after Shultz flees. And the pair of Frenchies then scratch their chins in bewilderment at the sudden exodus of customers from the barber shop.

POWERS.

THE FATE OF PERSISTENT PETE (March 13).—Count Peterhof is attracted by Daisy, the daughter of Duke Delinquent, Daisy while on board ship flirts with the count, much to her father's displeasure. She tells the count that if he really loves her he will wash the decks beneath her feet. The count is a game bird and makes the deck spotless for her to walk upon despite the jeers of Daisy's friends. Later Daisy throws her handkerchief overboard and asks the count to dive for it to prove his love. The count again complies and is nearly drowned.

The count is a persistent lover and follows Daisy to San Francisco where he is thrown from the running board of her auto by her irate father. The following day Daisy and her father, the duke, start for the Sutro baths. The count trails them and also gets into the swimming pool. Complications then follow thick and fast. The count is afflicted with the Gallic habit of kissing everybody and everything in sight. The bath house attendants resent his osculatory practise and make things so hot for him that he finally is forced to flee for his life. Daisy enjoys the first good laugh she has had in months and even her battle-scarred dad, the duke, sees the humor of the situation.

LAEMMLE.

MARTIN LOWE, FINANCIER (March 14).—Mother Benson receives a letter from her daughter. The letter states that if the daughter's husband fails to raise $2,000 within a month, it will mean his ruin. The young bride asks help for her mother. The old lady has no such an amount of her own but she knows that her friend and neighbor, Martin Lowe, a bachelor, has a small sum of money. Mother Benson tells the bachelor of her trouble. Old Martin Loge is touched by Mother Benson's story and, having only $500, the savings of a lifetime, he is at his wits' end trying to think of a way to secure the necessary $2,000, to aid the the old lady. By chance his eye falls upon the advertisement of John Elder, a "Wolf of Wall Street," in which it is advertised that by investing a few hundred dollars in stocks and bonds, it is possible to make a fortune.

Martin decides to try his luck and mails the broker his savings, asking that he convert it into $2,000 within a month if possible. The broker has landed another victim. John Elder, the broker, has a daughter, who is in love with his secretary. The latter takes a little joy ride with his sweetheart. Later Elder and his wife become worried at their daughter's absence.

The young people speed far into the country. The young man becomes rather reckless and his machine is ditched in front of old Martin Lowe's little home. Martin and Mother Benson go to the rescue of the broker's daughter, who is soon in Martin's parlor near death's door. Martin summons a doctor at once. The secretary having informed Mr. and Mrs. Elder of the accident, arrives upon the scene in company with them. They enter Martin's little cottage. The broker gives Martin his card.

Martin is delighted to meet the broker and exhibits the worthless bonds he has purchased from him. Elder knows the bonds are valueless and realizes that he has been about to swindle the man who has saved his daughter's life. He lies and tells the old man the bonds have risen in value and that he will send him a check in the morning. The next day Elder desiring to repay Lowe's kindness, makes good the worthless stock and sends Martin $2,000, which he states is the price he has secured from the bonds.

Old Martin tells Mother Benson of his good luck. Silently he hands her the money, while she is unrestrained in her praise of his marvelous ability.

IN AND OUT OF SOCIETY (March 10).—The father attempts to cut into society with a flourish, but he comes out much faster than he goes in. His fields of conquest are the lobby and ball room of a fashionable hotel, where he attempts to charm a pretty woman. In so doing he neglects to ascertain whether she has a husband or not. Accordingly when the lady offers to loan him a pair of trousers for the ball, he does not know they are her husband's until the latter discovers him.

Reuben loses his trousers and gets into the ball room minus his dignity. He contrives to get out of this safely and the whole affair might have blown over had he not unknowingly gotten back into the husband's room and into his disappearing bed just as the latter was about to retire.

Any inclination between the two to make up was, of course, shattered by this event. Attempting to escape, Reuben runs into a lady's bath room and is then chased by her husband who is armed with two big revolvers.

A ROMANCE OF THE BACK WOODS (March 12).—Rosemary, a visitor from the city, wandering through the woods, is accidentally struck by a low-hanging tree branch. She tries to break the branch off, but finding it too strong, takes the sheath knife from her companion's belt and starts to wreck havoc with the offending limb.

The knife suddenly slips, causing a slight wound in her finger. Shaw, her companion who has fallen in love with her, leads her to Harry's cabin, where the finger is bandaged. Rosebary starts a flirtation with Harry, much to Shaw's displeasure, who, later upbraids her for her conduct. She reminds him of Harry's unshaven face and ragged clothes and tells him she was only having a little fun with "the poor hick." Harry overhears her remark and decides to retaliate. As a matter of fact, Harry is a wealthy sportsman from New York.

Rosemary rises early next morning, and decides to visit Harry. She finds a very different man. He is now shaved and wearing a fine suit of clothes. Rosemary is now more than ever desirous of completing her conquest. Harry has changed his tactics and holds himself very much in reserve. This gets on her nerves. Although she displays her art as a coquette there are no results.

Meantime, Shaw has followed and arrives just in time to see the flirtation. Rosemary becomes disgusted and tells Harry he had better go shoot his dinner and leaves him to meet Shaw, who is worked up to a jealous rage and starts to strangle her. Harry hears the quarreling and shoots Shaw in the arm. He then takes the repentant Rosemary back to the cabin, where he finds a note telling him to return home. Rosemary, finding herself in love with the man she supposed to be a hick, agrees to return to the city with him.

SIX OR NINE (March 11).—Here is the evidence the police secured against Jack Darcy within half an hour:

At a late hour at night he was seen climbing up the fire escape of the Hotel Magnificent, but before the woman who spied him could recover from her terror sufficiently to give the alarm, he had clambered in the open window of room 310. The next moment a pistol shot was heard. Darcy dashed out through the window, but was captured at the foot of the fire escape. He declined to give any explanation regarding his movements. Investigation showed that the occupant of room 310, a wealthy Westerner named Henry Grayson, had been shot to death in his bed. His daughter, who was in another room in the same suite, broke down when she was told of the tragedy. The police had no chance to question her. They figured they had enough evidence to hang young Darcy.

The Commissioner of Police took a personal interest in the case, for Grayson and his father had been boyhood pals. The elder men had planned that their children should marry and Grayson's trip East had been partly with that end in view.

At first the Commissioner believed Darcy guilty, then he began to doubt and finally proved the young man's innocence. His first clue was a card found in Darcy's pocket, an ordinary blank card with the figure 6 scrawled upon it. But when the card was turned the other way, it looked like a 9. His next clue was a severed electric light wire, his third a photograph.

Finally he reconstructed the tragedy and proved that the case was not one that the law could take cognizance of.

And the starting point was the card. Did it mean "six" or "nine?" When that was established the rest was easy. At least it was a simple problem for the bright young Commissioner of Police.

OUTSIDE THE GATES (Two Parts—March 14).—Sister Ursula is a novice in a convent in Southern Spain. Being sent to open the door to Perez, a peddler who comes with materials for the new altar cloth the nuns are embroidering, she sees Manuel, a young cavalier, riding by and is attracted by his youth. She struggles against the feeling but as Perez is showing his wares to the Abbess he throws about Sister Ursula, the better to display it, a length of beautiful fabric and she is thrilled with delight at contact with the rich stuff.

Perez, a sneering fellow, notes this and laughs at her behind the Abbess' back.

Having sold his goods he departs and Sister Ursula, left alone to wrap up the altar cloth, yields to temptation and wraps it about her like a gown, thrilled by a vision of Manuel and the realization of her own beauty. Horrified at her sin, she tears it from her and rushes to the Abbess to confess. In penance she is bidden to kneel in vigil before the altar all night. She keeps her vigil but is overcome with weariness and falls asleep on the altar steps. She dreams that she is back in the convent hall, decked in the altar cloth. Perez appears at her side. She tries to tear it, but it clings to her and turns into a gorgeous gown. Perez drags her to the window and shows her Manuel riding by. If she will come away with him he will give her dresses and jewelry and Manuel for a lover. She tries to resist, but the temptation is too strong. The gown changes to boy's attire and she leaves the convent as Perez's attendant.

Traveling with pack donkeys they come to the camp of some brigands in a rocky defile. Perez is welcomed as an old friend by the brigands and makes himself at home while Ursula tries to play the boy.

Manuel is described riding along up the pass. The robbers ambush him, and in the struggle he is dragged from his horse and knocked senseless. Ursula sees this from a distance and tries in vain to warn him. The brigands decide to kill him, but Ursula seizes a knife and springs to his defense. Her fierceness so amuses the robber chief that he spares Manuel's life and has him tied to a tree. Perez drugs the wine that Ursula is made to serve to the robbers and when they are asleep he takes Manuel and Ursula away. She binds up the wounded man's hurts and holds him in her arms all night, during which he never regains consciousness. As the dawn breaks Perez bids her come and gives her a medallion of herself in the grotesque gown to which the altar cloth turned. This she hangs round Manuel's neck before leaving him. He wakes, finds the medallion, falls in love with it and rides off to seek the original.

He comes to a posada, where a troupe of dancing girls, under the lad of Carmela, are entertaining the guests. Perez and Ursula also arrive there. Perez is hailed by the dancing girls as an old acquaintance and his supposed boy attendant, shy and awkward, is rallied by them. Manuel notices him, laughs and tells him he must be bold with the ladies. Carmela is doing her best to fascinate Manuel but he is secretly adoring the miniature that Ursula left behind her.

The girls jeer at Carmela for her failure. She, in fury, attempts to stab Manuel but Ursula rushes between and receives the knife in her arm. Manuel, touched by the devotion of the supposed boy, tries to examine the wound, but Ursula draws back in confusion. Manuel suspects her secret and pulls off her hat and her hair falls about her.

The girls rush to her aid and carry her off into the inn. Perez approaches Manuel, tells him that this is the lady whose portrait he has been adoring and offers him rich dresses. Manuel buys recklessly, the girls array Ursula and lead her out to him and he proclaims a feast. In the midst of it Ursula is mounted on a table and as all are acclaiming her the Abbess and her attendants, who have been seeking her and whom Carmela, in revenge, has put upon the track, enter and denounce her.

The people all draw away from her as a renegade nun. She drags herself to Manuel and appeals to him, but he turns from her in horror. She tries to denounce Perez as the real author of the trouble, but he vanishes in a puff of smoke. The people set upon her, beating her. She falls and is nearly dying.

Suddenly she wakes on the altar steps with the Abbess kneeling beside her and shaking her. She clings to the Abbess in terrified relief and they both kneel before the altar together in prayer.

THE TRUTH ABOUT DAN DEERING (Two Parts March 11).—Roger and Mary Lee hear the reading of their father's will by which Roger receives an undeveloped mining claim in Placer County, California. Roger leaves by the night stage for the mine. On his journey he becomes acquainted with "Piker" Brown, a decoy for the famous Dan Deering of Placer County. Deering is the proprietor of a typical Western gambling house.

It is claimed by those who have visited Dan's place that he is a cheat, but no one ever has been found to bring forth proof to support his allegations. The sheriff is worried about Dan Deering's outfit, but can get no conclusive evidence upon which to convict him. Finally a reward is offered for $500 to be paid to any one who can convict Deering of being a cheat.

"Poker" Brown and Roger Lee travel on together. "Poker" tells the boy of the great times to be had at a place called "The Miners' Rest," and invites him to stop there. Roger meets Dan Deering, who, apparently, proves to be his friend, with the result, however, that he is fleeced like the rest. An argument follows in which he treacherously attempts to kill Dan. To save himself Dan is forced to kill the youngster, who is secretly buried in a shallow grave on the hillside.

Mary Lee, alarmed at the continued absence of her brother, decides to follow him and save him if possible from the perils he is bound to encounter. She, too, meets "Poker," who impresses her with his gallantry. "Poker" informs her that "The Miners' Rest" is about the only place in that section at which she can stop. She takes his advice and accompanies him into the gambling house, where she is bewildered at sight of rough miners gambling and drinking, flashy girls singing, and whisky spilled everywhere.

She meets Dan Deering and is much impressed by his real manhood. "Poker" informs Dan that the girl apparently possesses a large amount of money and broaches a plan to get it. Dan, however, thinks differently. A quarrel ensues between them.

Dan makes the girl comfortable in his bunk room. Later he overhears "Poker" plotting with a gang of rough miners to break into the bunk room and steal the girl's money.

Even then they are approaching "The Miners' Rest." Dan loses no time. He rushes and together they keep off the infuriated miners. "Poker" is brought to his senses by the loss of two of his men and, fearful of the menacing guns in the hands of Dan and the girl, he and his companions withdraw. Next morning Mary tells Dan of her search for her missing brother and shows him his picture.

"Poker" overhears her story. Calling Dan to one side he tells Dan either to hand over his share of the girl's money or he, "Poker," will tell the girl that her brother met his death at the hands of Dan Deering.

To please "Poker," he having insufficient money to meet "Poker's" demand himself, Dan formulates a plan to which "Poker" agrees. Dan then tells the girl a lie regarding her brother and "Poker" backs him up. Later Dan signs a confession which will enable "Poker" to collect the reward offered for his conviction. Dan then tells the girl that her brother, Roger, met death accidentally by the explosion of his revolver and that he is buried upon the mountain side. Mary is heartbroken at the news. Together they visit the grave.

Later Mary prepares to leave by the stage for home. Dan leaves a note telling her he has been called away on important business and will not be able to see her before the stage pulls out. He then leaves "The Miners' Rest" forever. "Poker" rides at top speed for the sheriff's office armed with Dan's confession. Mary finds the note and is overwhelmed with grief at the thought of not seeing again the stalwart hero whom she has learned to admire. "Porker" Brown, in company with the sheriff and a deputy, rides back toward "The Miner's Rest." They hear a shot and turn aside from the mountain trail to investigate. They come to Roger's grave. Across it lies the body of Dan Deering.

determined that Nell shall accompany him as his wife when the "Nancy Day" sails.

Ledgard secures a donkey-cart and sets out for West View to win his wager. While there he meets Nell and falls in love with her. Avon encounters Haggard and wonders how he is connected with the girl. Later Reggie and his friends decide to visit West View to see their aristocratic friend at work and, finding him, proceed to have some fun. They are suddenly assaulted by Nell's father, who think Ledgard is a brother tradesman in distress. Faddon takes Ledgard to his home to escape a possible arrest and there Nell and Ledgard continue their friendship.

Haggard while drunk chokes old Jock and Nell runs away. Realizing what a mistake he has made, Haggard decides to beg forgiveness with a fiendish plan in mind. As the "Nancy Day" is about to sail, Haggard plans to drug old Jock and to force Nell to accompany him. That night the drunken crew, finding themselves short of a man, shanghai Ledgard and drag him to "The Humming Bird," a notorious taproom on the docks, where they cast him in a back room bound hand and foot.

At the same time Haggard visits the coster's home, gives old Jock the drugged rum and forces Nell to accompany him to "The Humming Bird," where the drunken crew are celebrating. Haggard clouts a few of the more curious and then casts Nell into the side room, unmindful of the shanghaied "Coster," Ledgard.

Finding her sweetheart a prisoner, Nell cuts his bonds with a piece of glass from a broken bottle. When the gang outside batter at the door she puts out the lights and steals out when the door gives way and the gang burst in. In a desperate battle, Ledgard is overpowered but, later, taking them by surprise, makes his escape. Hurrying to his club, Ledgard tells his friends that he has lost his wager, but— Meanwhile Nell has returned and sent her father to look for her lover, but the latter returns empty-handed. Nell is in tears when Ledgard, in fashionable attire and silk hat, appears looking for his donkey.

Nell is dumfounded at meeting such a "fine gentleman," but Ledgard seizes her in his arms and kisses her over the head of his donkey while old "Jock" shouts approvingly from his cabin door. Ledgard puts dad up in a good business and later educates Nell to the station in life which she occupies with grace and distinction.

THE DESTROYER (March 8).—Willard Foster becomes an idler and gambler. Owing to his family and social connections, he is able to retain his membership in several exclusive clubs, and has entree to the best society. Summer finds him in the country, where he meets Dorothy Trask. He wins her love and promises to marry her. The summer passes and Dorothy finds herself deserted. Under cover of night she steals away to hide herself and her tragedy in the city. Foster, too, is back in the city gambling.

Edgar Trask, Dorothy's brother, is an eminently successful young business man married to Helen Jordan, daughter of his wealthy partner. They have one child, little Billy, whom Trask worships. Helen devotes her time to society. Trask is notified by his mother (who is still living "back home" in the country) of Dorothy's disappearance and the cause. Trask confides his sister's story to no one. He employs Ray Hamilton, one of the shrewdest detectives in the city, to aid him in finding Dorothy. His wife overhears part of their conference. Her suspicions and jealousy are aroused and she accuses Trask of spending time and money on another woman. He refuses to explain. This precipitates a quarrel.

Trask is introduced to Foster at the club and not only detects Foster cheating at cards, but also discovers that he is a thief. Rather than have a row, Trask lets the matter drop; but Foster, after the manner of his kind, hates the man who has found him out and vows to be revenged. The following week Foster meets Helen, Trask's wife, at a reception. They are mutually attracted to each other and, unknown to Trask, they become friends.

Dorothy secures work in a department store. One day, owing to a chance meeting, Foster accompanies Helen on a shopping expedition. Dorothy sees them coming down the aisle. To avoid recognition by Foster, she turns her back. Helen, with the importance of persons of her class, complains to the manager of Dorothy's lack of attention. Dorothy is discharged.

The friendship between Helen and Foster progresses rapidly. Helen thoughtlessly accepts the many little attentions which Foster knows so well how to bestow. He calls frequently to see her. One evening Trask returns home unexpectedly and finds them under rather suspicious circumstances. He denounces Foster as a gambler and a thief, orders him from the house and forbids Helen to see him again.

The same night Trask receives a note from Detective Hamilton stating he has at last discovered Dorothy's hiding place. Trask thoughtlessly tosses the note in the waste-basket and hurries away to find his sister. His wife finds the note and, thinking it has reference to "the other woman" of her imagination, becomes insanely jealous. Foster, who has seen Trask leaving the house, calls again. Helen, angry, jealous, and in a reckless mood, is now willing to listen to him. Using the note as proof, Foster convinces Helen that her husband is false to her. Renewing his declarations of love Foster urges her to go away with him that night.

Dorothy is unable to find other employment. Her savings are soon exhausted. She is without food and unable to pay her room rent. She is on the point of ending it all when Trask finds her. Fearing she will repeat the attempt to take her life if she is left alone again, he induces her to go home with him.

Helen, dressed for traveling, is packing her satchel and preparing to leave. Foster, waiting for her, is impatiently pacing the living room. There Dorothy and Trask find him. When Trask discovers that this man who is trying to wreck his home is also the one responsible for the tragedy which has clouded his sister's life, his fury knows no bounds. Helen and Dorothy, mute with terror, witness the desperate fight between the two men, in which the furniture and the house are nearly wrecked.

Foster is thrown down the steps and his hat and cane thrown after him. Helen slips away to her room. With a prayer of thanksgiving that she has been saved from an abyss of shame, she hastily removes all trace of her intended departure. Picking sleepy little Billy up in her arms, she joins her husband and his sister in the beautiful scene of reconciliation with which the picture closes.

THE HAUNTING MEMORY (March 2).—By the bedside of his sick mother, young "Roderigo Perragini," an Italian lad in his fifteenth year, declares that he will always remember his father's face, although it is six years since the husband and father left Italy for parts unknown. The stricken mother, recalling the happy days when the father taught young "Roderigo" to play the violin, asks that she may hear the favorite selection of her husband's, which the lad plays so beautifully. Complimenting him on his playing, the mother implores that he continue to study and become a great musician. In a few years he is an accomplished player, and at the age of thirty years his fame has reached to America. Going to the United States under the nom-de-plume "Nicholas Celia," he becomes the rage.

While playing at a large social function he recognizes his father as the husband of his wealthy hostess, and learns that "Perragini, Sr.," has prospered beyond his imagination. The memory of his boyhood days inspires him to play as he never did before, which, coupled with his good looks and manly bearing, makes a strong impression on his hostess. Following the recital a flirtation is carried on between the young musician and his hostess, which leads to their being surprised by the husband, who tells his wife to return to their guests. On returning to his hotel, young "Perragini," with his mother's picture before him, vainly seeks a solution for his troubles. Next morning he decides to pay a visit to his father's house, and by telephone arranges an interview. Upon arrival he receives a more than friendly reception. When the voice of the father is heard in the lower hall, the hostess hurriedly hides her guest behind the portiers. The husband enters; and the instrument case which had been overlooked is lying in full view of any one entering the room.

The husband explains that he became ill at the office. Discovering the instrument case and his wife's agitation, he accuses her of intimacy with the young musician. Listening intently behind the portiers, young "Perrigini" decides to play his boyhood selection, which the father recognizes, and by his queer actions drives the wife from the room. Seeing the portiers move, "Perrigini, Sr.," draws them apart. His frightened gaze meets the calm features of his son's face. The father demands where he learned that selection. The son's reply that "it was my father's favorite when I was a boy" recalls the wrongs which he can never right to the now distracted father. His plea for forgiveness is unheeded by both his wife and his son, who leave him to suffer alone, broken in heart and spirit.

MAJESTIC.

A DAY THAT IS DEAD (Two Parts—Feb 28.)—Edward Grey visits a fishing town, where he wins the love of Elaine, a simple girl, living with her brother. Grey and Elaine are married. The young husband, however, grows weary of the humdrum fisher existence, and his attitude toward his bride changes. Then Enid, a woman from the sphere of life in the city, which he has left behind him, comes upon the scene. It ends with Grey deserting Elaine for Enid. The fishergirl, in her despair, tries to drown herself, but is saved by her brother. Grey soon finds that Enid is of a shallow, fickle nature. He quarrels with a rival and disgraces himself on her account. When Enid goes away with the other man, Grey returns to the fishing village to beg Elaine's forgiveness. He finds her brother alone, in inconsolable grief. Elaine is dead.

BOBBY'S BANDIT (March 2).—Bobby and Sally start out on a fishing expedition. But Sally's father, the village constable, sends his young daughter home, and Bobby is obliged to go alone. As he sits hauling in the catch he does not see a rough-looking man skulking in the woods just behind him. When he is ready to go home, the stranger takes away from the boy his two fine bass, and Bobby returns, disconsolate, to the village. There he sees the sheriff tacking up a sign offering 500 reward for the capture of a dangerous bandit. Bobby decides to join the search. Meanwhile, Sally's father, putting on a disguise, has made up his mind that he, too, will capture the outlaw. Bobby, seeing a man in rough clothes go into Crawford's carriage house, runs and locks him in. Then he and Sally get the sheriff and posse. They surround the barn, and when they open the door out rolls the constable. Bobby gets a scolding. But then suddenly he remembers the man who took away his fish. This time he puts the sheriff and the constable on the right track.

HIS RETURN (March 5).—Harry is a wild youth; he drinks a bit and gambles. His father is wealthy and tries to curb the boy, but is unable to. His ward, a girl of fifteen, too young to really love, but who greatly admires Harry. He, being older, is very condescending; she, mutely adoring. One day after a debauch, Harry quarrels with his father, and, much to the sorrow of the ward and his father, runs away.

Some years pass with no word from Harry. The ward, now grown, loves Harry deeply and repels the advances of a young swain of the neighborhood. The father finally dies, leaving a will in favor of Harry, provided he returns within a certain time. In case he does not appear within that time the money goes to the ward. On the last day of grace Harry turns up from his wanderings, very shabby, very much in love with the memory of the ward, and still swaggering as of old, in spite of his shabby, almost ragged clothes. He learns of the will and its conditions. He sees the ward and is madly in love with the girl, the promise of whose beauty as a child is now more than fulfilled in womanhood. He sees (as he mistakenly thinks) her lover kissing her hand, and is angered. He wants her himself, as well as the fortune. However, he keeps his presence a secret. He is ragged, unkempt, unfit for such a girl. The old swaggering manner sloughs off and he goes away, leaving his father's ward to the fortune she deserves and to the prospects of a worthier marriage.

MINERVA'S MISSION (Two Parts—March 7).—Minerva comes home from school filled with the idea that she has a great mission in life. All society needs reformation. She has her maiden aunt come to live with her as chaperon, and Minerva immediately starts in by reconstructing her. The trust company that has charge of her fortune is represented by young Mr. Grant, who looks on with dismay at the operations of Minerva and tries to dissuade her, but without success. She stops him from smoking and he complies—when she isn't looking. She discovers this and quarrels with him. A laborer making some repairs at the house attracts her attention when she finds him drinking a pail of beer with his lunch. She remonstrates with him and questions him about his home life. As a result she visits his mother's home and tries to educate the family, much against their will, lavishing money on them. The boorish workman, misconstruing Minerva's interest, puts on his Sunday best when she calls, and at last insults her. When she repulses him, his cupidity makes him covet her money and he resorts to force to get it. She manages to get word to the banker's son, who comes with policemen and rescues her.

A TEMPERANCE LESSON (March 9).—John Hammond is a wealthy gentleman of advanced years who has married a young and pretty wife. Shortly after their marriage an old friend of Hammond sends him two bottles of very choice liquor as a present. Mr. Hammond calls the servants in and cautions them against any one of them daring to touch a drop of this precious fluid. No sooner has he gone to his office when the servants, one at a time, come in to test the liquor, with the result that each becomes not ingloriously, but quite obviously, under the influence.

On his return home, he finds the household in a sad condition and one of the bottles empty. Rescuing the second bottle, which has not yet been taken from its wrapper, he takes it to his office and locks it in the safe. That night his wife is taken sick and the doctor prescribes a dose of this particular brand of liquor. Mr. Hammond hastens to his office, opens his safe, and secures the bottle, but is mistaken for a burglar by a watchful policeman, and is pursued to his home. Arriving there, he explains to the officer. Finding that his wife in the meantime has recovered, and convinced that intoxicants are not proper things to have in the house, he makes the officer a present of the bottle. Outside the officer and a friend proceed to open the precious package, only to find that the bottle is grape juice.

RELIANCE.

THE DOUBLE CROSSING OF SLIM (Feb. 24).—Mr. Brooks, a young millionaire, shows his wife a diamond, which he has recently bought. While she is finishing packing his traveling bag for a short business trip, Mrs. Brooks hears her husband go to the safe and then to his desk in the library. At the station Brooks is recognized by Croaky and Slim, who have read in the paper about the purchase of the diamond. They plot to meet that night at Brooks' house. Croaky buys a fake gem, scheming to deceive his pal. The crooks enter Brooks' home and force Mrs. Brooks to open the safe. But first she has been able to phone the police, who arrive just as the burglars are about to make their escape. Croaky has handed Slim the false diamond, and, thinking to double cross him, he gives the slip. Slim is captured and the gem examined. When he learns that he has been duped, he tells the police where Croaky will dispose of the real diamond. The detectives surprise Croaky in the act of selling his loot—and then it is discovered that his gem also is paste. Mr. Brooks reaches home to find his wife in hysterics. Learning that the safe has been robbed, he laughingly consoles her. And then, going to his desk, he unlocks a drawer and takes out the genuine diamond.

THE MAN WITH A RECORD (Two Parts—Feb. 27).—Jim Doyle, an ex-convict, is unable, on account of his record, to keep a job. His mother sends him to sell her watch, and the pawnbroker by mistake enters his name opposite the number and description of another watch which has been stolen. Murphy, a detective, and an enemy of Doyle, is put on the trace of the stolen watch. He investigates the pawnshop records and arrests Doyle, who receives a speedy trial and is sent back to prison for five years. The mother's watch disappears. Three years later, Doyle gets word from his sister that his mother is dying. He manages to escape from prison, and again Murphy is put on his track. Doyle evades the detective, but while trying to rescue a young girl from injury, he is run down by the governor's automobile. The governor's daughter has Doyle taken to a hospital, where later he is placed under arrest. At his request the governor's daughter goes with a doctor to Mrs. Doyle's bedside. The dying woman recognizes in the watch the doctor has the one she sent her son to pawn three years before. The doctor tells how he bought it at the pawnshop in his student days. The governor's daughter takes up the case with the board of pardons and before his mother dies Doyle is reprieved.

YOUR BABY AND MINE (March 3).—The joy of living disappeared for Bob Sands when his baby brother came. Not that his parents purposely neglected him—but, of course, the new baby claimed most of their attention. When Bob played noisily, he was warned not to wake the baby and was made to play far from the house. Expecting sympathy, he tells his playmate, Hilda, about the new arrival. Hilda's maternal instinct was aroused and, much to Bobbie's disgust, when she is taken to see the baby, fondles it with great delight. Hilda is the proud possessor of a child's auto. So later when Bobbie offers to give her 25 cents and his baby for the auto, she gladly accepts his offer.

Unseen, Bobbie manages to take the baby from the house and the trade is made. Mr. and Mrs. Sands are frantic when they discover the baby gone, and Sands hurries out to inform the police. Mr. and Mrs. Crane are also the parents of a new baby, and Crane is so joyous that when the doctor presents his bill he gladly pays it, although it leaves him with only one dollar in the world. He tells his wife to make the money go as far as possible. Mrs. Crane buys some potatoes from a peddler, who gives her a quarter with other change for the dollar. She puts the money carelessly on the table, then with the baby on her lap starts to peel the potatoes.

The baby shows distress, and Mrs. Crane, seeing that the quarter is missing, thinks the baby has swallowed it. She hastily wraps the baby in a white shawl and sends her husband with it on the run to the doctor. Mr. Sands, on his way to the police station, sees Crane running with a baby. As his baby also had on a white shawl, he takes Crane for a kidnapper, takes the baby from him and beats him up. As Sands is on his way home with the wrong baby, Hilda, who has the baby with her and has been spending her money in the candy shop, comes out of the shop and puts the baby on the stoop while she opens the bag of candy. Crane, in pursuit of Sands, sees the baby in the white shawl on the steps and, thinking it is his own child, hurries with it to the doctor. Mrs. Crane finds the missing quarter and hurries to the doctor to prevent an operation. She arrives in time, but faints as she is presented with the wrong child. Mrs. Sands' joy turns to sorrow when her husband presents her with the wrong baby. She is hysterical and Sands 'phones for the doctor. A few explanations and the doctor understands how the mix-up occurred. He soon straightens out matters and everyone is happy except Bobbie, who expects to be punished for his misdeed, but his parents realize that he is only a boy and resolve in the future to treat him with a little more consideration.

THE LUCKY TRANSFER (March 10).—Jim Dodson, a poor workman, has been in the habit of begging a street car transfer in town, in order to ride home each night from work.

Ford and Ransom, a couple of crooks, rob a store and among the things taken are a quantity of stamped envelopes with the name and address of the firm printed thereon. Helen, of the "Herald," tries to ferret out the robbery, but is unsuccessful, until one day Ford writes a letter and gives it to a passing little girl to mail, first scratching out the name on the stamped envelope. Helen bumps into the little girl, knocking the letter to the ground. Picking it up for her, Helen notes the scratched-out name and address, and follows the child to the crook's shack. There she discovers part of the loot, but is captured and tied up by one of them. Leaving her securely tied, Ford goes down town to meet his pal, and on a street car they plan their getaway.

Ford gives Ransom the address of the shack, and the hiding place of the loot, and writes it on a transfer slip, to be sure he doesn't forget it. Getting off the car at the transfer point, he drops the transfer and Jim hurriedly picks it up and gets on the car. The conductor is talking to Fields, a detective, also working on the case, and shows the transfer with its message to Fields. The latter, reading the message on it, leads a run to the rendezvous, rescues Helen and captures the crooks and the loot.

EX-CONVICT 4287 (Two Parts—March 13).—Malcolm Forbes is sent to state's prison for forgery, serves eighteen months and is known at the prison as prisoner No. 4287. Scotty Decker, a hold-up man and thief, known as prisoner 4163, is discharged the same time as Forbes. They part at the prison gate and ten long years pass. Forbes has prospered and under the name of Herbert Bradford is a very successful business man. Happily married, he works and thinks only of his wife and six-year old baby. One of his clients sends him some stocks to take care of during his absence. Bradford, placing them in his safe, finds his old discharge letter, given to him the day he left state's prison. It comes like a ghost from the grave to him, and he determines to destroy it. He is about to set fire to it when he is interrupted, and quickly places it in his pocket. Under the stress of business he forgets he placed it in his pocket.

The next morning, when leaving hime for his office, a button falls from his coat. His wife gives him another coat. Arriving at his office he is seen and recognized by his old fellow prisoner, Scotty Decker, who is very much on the down road. Scotty gets mad and, finding a card with Bradford's home address on it, goes there intending to blackmail the wife with her husband's secret. In the meantime Mrs. Bradford in mending the coat finds the prison letter that falls from the pocket. Though heartbroken at the discovery, she determines to keep the secret from her husband.

But Scotty arrives at the home and, entering the library, sees the letter and gets possession of it and beats it back to the office. Bradford's interview with Scotty made him think of the letter he left in the coat pocket, and, much worried for fear his wife should see it, rushes home, only to discover the secret is known by those he loves. He determines to die and end it all, but is prevented by the minister. Scotty is struck by an automobile and carried to the hospital, where he does, but before doing so, sends for the minister and, giving him the prison letter, asks forgiveness. The minister returns to the Bradford home and brings the letter, which Bradford burns. Happiness is supreme in the household thereafter.

$1,000 REWARD (Feb. 26).—Madeline's mother is a widow and her twin sister, Marion, is crippled. Mrs. Goddard takes in sewing, and Madeline sells newspapers. The daughter of a wealthy man becomes interested in the little newsgirl, and on further acquaintance, May Gordon persuades her father to pay for an operation on Marion Goddard's hip. They take Marion home to their beautiful house to recuperate. Meanwhile, Red Hogan, wanted for burglary, breaks into the Gordon mansion with Whitey, his pal. Marion blocks his operations and effects his arrest. Mr. Gordon has offered $1,000 for Hogan's capture and this he now insists upon awarding to Marion. But she will not take the money. Mr. Gordon retaliates by making Mrs. Goddard and both Madeline and Marion members of his own household.

A NEWSPAPER NEMESIS (Feb. 28).—Spike, a desperate character, wanted by the police, breaks into a jewelry store in the early morning, where he is surprised by Smith, the proprietor. The crook kills the jeweler and makes his escape. The authorities are completely at a loss to trace the murderer. Molly Sayre, a reporter, intensely pitying Smith's widow and child, determines herself to bring the guilty man to justice. In disguise she frequents the slums of the town, where she meets Spike. Instantly she suspects him. At last she wins from him

Grant receives credit for a daring arrest, and he and Molly are married.

ON THE BRINK OF THE ABYSS (Two Parts—March 2).—Jim Watson has but one redeeming trait—his love for his sister. Thinking that he has killed a man, he escapes to New York, where he becomes the leader of a band of gentlemen crooks. Mary Watson marries John Strong and moves to the metropolis. Strong becomes rich through an invention he has perfected. Absorbed in his work, he unintentionally neglects Mary, who becomes infatuated with one of her husband's business associates. Then the Iago steps in. Jim Watson enters Strong's house, and discovers that it is his sister's home. He overhears her being tempted. He realizes that it is a trap and that her husband is on the point of catching her in a compromising position. It is a choice between making his own get-away and saving his sister. He chooses the latter. When Strong comes into his wife's room he finds that her caller is her brother. Meanwhile the police arrive, and Watson, in trying to escape, is shot.

SELF-HYPNOTIZED (Feb. 27).—A doctor shows his wife a poison bottle which he has taken away in the nick of time from a would-be suicide. He empties it, and then answers a hurry call out of town. His wife, alone in the house, surprises a burglar at work. At the point of his gun he makes her serve him with a cup of coffee. But she contrives to work in the poison bottle in such a way that he believes he has swallowed the contents and becomes very ill. The doctor returns, pretends the case is serious and telephones for an assistant to help him perform an operation. The "assistant" proves to be a policeman, and the "operation" is handcuffing the thief.

PRINCESS.

ON ACCOUNT OF A DOG (Feb. 26).—John Blake cannot abide dogs. His young wife and Bob Mitchell, his partner, are very fond of them, however, and when the partner takes Marie to the dog show there begins to be trouble. Blake happens upon a note from Bob to his wife, telling her that he has a plan whereby she can find happiness, without her husband's knowledge. Furious, Blake follows Marie and Bob to a hotel. There, to his chagrin, he sees through a keyhole his wife fondling a poodle pup. Thoroughly ashamed of himself, he tells Marie that hereafter she may have all the pets she wants.

AMERICAN.

HEART OF FLAME (Two Parts—March 1).—Keith Gordon, a young violinist, the protege of Von Esdorf, an old music teacher, has acquired the magic touch, but lacks "the heart of flame." His teacher tells him it will surely come. Maylenheimer, the impresario, through long friendship for Von Ezdorf, agrees to hear young Keith play, and is so impressed that he offers to contract for a concert tour which will bring both fame and fortune to the young violinist. Keith, longing for the open, begs his teacher to take a trip to the top of a nearby mountain.

Proceeding on horseback, they stop at the "Silver Star Inn," a rough log cabin, conducted by Nita, an old gypsy woman. Keith, while fishing in the woods, meets Zira, a mountain girl. While roaming the woods together they meet Checo, a savage gypsy knife thrower, in love with Zira, who vows vengeance on Keith and plots with old Nita, the inn keeper, for his destruction. Von Ezdorf, coming upon Keith and Zira in the mountain wildness, is enraptured with the wild melody Keith is playing. Von Ezdorf claims it is genius, but Keith claims he is inspired by "his heart of flame" as he calls Zira. Having outstayed their time, Von Ezdorf receives a letter from Malenheimer demanding their immediate return, and Keith reluctantly departs, promising Zira that he will return. They exchange tokens, vowing their love.

Returning to the city, Keith makes his debut, playing his own composition, The Heart of Flame. His success is assured and Von Ezdorf is happy, but Keith turns indifferent to the praise showered upon him. Continually thinking of Zira, he decides that he will return to the mountain, and so tells Von Ezdorf. Thinking only of Keith's career, Von Ezdorf determines to thwart his plans by informing Zira that his genius belongs to the public, and that if she really loves him she should give him up. This she agrees to do.

True to her promise, Zira informs Keith that she has made a great mistake and really loves Sheco. Keith departs, bewildered and downhearted, and Checo, who overheard their conversation, advances his unwelcome love. During a struggle Checo accidentally received a slight knife wound, which so enrages him that he vows to kill Keith at once. Beppo, a gypsy girl, who is jealous of Zira, overheard Checo and Nita plotting, and informs Zira of Keith's danger. Zira follows Checo to the city, and at the stage entrance finds him with drawn knife making his way through the crowd of admirers which surround Keith. As he raises his arm to throw his knife Zira springs upon Checo, and in the struggle he stabs her.

Keith, advancing to the prostrate form, recognizes his sweetheart, and, gathering the body in his arms, carries her to his dressing room. Overcome with grief, Keith acts as if in a trance, unconscious of all around him. Not knowing the delay, the audience clamors for Keith's appearance. Von Ezdorf and Maylenheimer plead with Keith to go on, as the audience is leaving. Von Ezdorf's pleadings stir Keith to his duty, and he consents to appear on the stage.

With a heart full of sorrow he renders his selections to the delight of his audience. Returning to the dressing room, his grief is complete, and closing the door he gives vent to his sorrow over the body of his "heart of flame."

A COSTLY EXCHANGE (Feb. 28).—Fred Moore and Ned Bates have new fall overcoats just alike. For the rest, Moore has a jealous wife, and Bates an engagement ring, which he intends to present to Miss Clara Morrison. Ned meets Clara to take her to the matinee. She gives him her gloves to hold and he puts them in his overcoat pocket. He has forgotten the ring and they stop at the office for it. Ned slips the solitaire into his pocket, and then, it being a warm day, takes off the coat and throws it over his arm. As he passes the door, Moore calls Ned into his office to sign a legal paper. The latter throws down his coat. Moore's overcoat is hanging across a chair. In hurrying off, Ned exchanges the overcoats. After the theater, Ned and Clara discover that the ring and the gloves are not in the overcoat. They notify the police. Moore comes home late that night, after a gay evening at the club. In the morning his wife discovers a pair of white gloves dangling from a pocket of his overcoat. There is an unhappy scene at the breakfast table—and Moore rushes off to the office without his coat. He drops into Ned's office and absent-mindedly helps himself to the identical overcoat. Mrs. Moore threatens divorce over the phone. A call from Clara, who recognizes her gloves, only rouses that lady's jealousy the more. Meanwhile Ned and the detectives, whom he has put on the trail of the lost overcoat, arrive at Moore's house. Moore has returned and is trying in vain to explain. Then the two men find the two coats, just alike—and a light breaks upon four distracted minds.

ON THE HIGH SEAS (Two Parts—March 5).—Dirk Morgan, one of the trusted members of a powerful band of international crooks, received word that the steamer Empress left Melbourne with a secret consignment of gold; the letter also contains plans of the steamer's hold and cabins. Dirk books passage for himself and Anne and they board the steamer at Sidney. Anne, who has deserted her husband and baby a year before to go with Dirk, is now tiring of the life she is leading and is filled with remorse when she thinks of her little daughter, Stella, and her husband. Dirk manages to secure the bow cabin and cuts a hole through the partition, thereby working his way to the vault wherein the gold is secured. By means of an electric drill he gains entrance to the vault and removes the gold. This he places in a canvas bag. He also fills a pillow case with provisions from the ship's stores room, through which he passes on his way to the vault. These he stows in the life boat of the bow cabin and plans to cut same loose and drift away in the dark that night. He also plans to blow up the boat by means of an electric fuse to prevent himself and Anne being overtaken.

That night the ship gives a party for children and Anne, while waiting on the deck for Dirk hears a voice which she thinks she recognizes. She creeps to the dining saloon and there sees her little daughter singing, and learns that both her husband and child are passengers on the ship. This decides her; she cannot go through with Dirk's plans and murder her own child. She rushes into the cabin and, grabbing the electric bomb, makes for the deck and after a fierce struggle with Dirk, who meets her as she is leaving the cabin, she throws the bomb into the water, thus causing an explosion. The passengers and ship's officers rush from the saloon to learn the trouble. They come upon Dirk and Anne struggling. Dirk has a pistol and is firing shots at Anne. He is held by two sailors and he and Anne taken to the saloon. Stella and her father come on with the rest of the passengers and Stella sees and recognizes her mother. She runs to her, calling mama. In the excitement Dirk breaks away from the sailors who are holding him and clambers up the mast to the main deck. The sailors rush on deck to look for Dirk and, discovering him, begin to fire at him. He is hit and falls from the main mast into the sea. In the saloon a reconciliation takes place between Anne and her husband through Stella, who refuses to be separated from her mother.

WINNING BACK (Two Parts—March 3).—Ruth Castle plans to surprise her husband on their fifth wedding anniversary with a very elaborate dinner and promises their two little children that they may eat at the big table that night. Rex, her husband, is infatuated with Yvette, a dancer, and, having forgotten all about the anniversary, has a date with Yvette, whose birthday it is. He buys Yvette a beautiful diamond necklace which he leaves in his overcoat pocket. Ruth peeks in his pocket for her expected present and discovers the necklace. She is much surprised when Rex leaves without having given it to her. She goes to the theater and sees Yvette there with the necklace on. She realizes the truth. Ruth goes to Rex's brother, Wallace, and tells him her troubles, insisting that he take her to a brilliant Bohemian cafe. There she becomes reckless and smokes and sings in spite of Wallace's protestations. She makes a hit with one of the frequenters of the cafe and goes to his table which is filled with friends where she is the life of the crowd. Rex and Yvette come in and Rex is amazed to see his wife. He knocks her admirer down and out and drags Ruth home. There Ruth tells him she does not want to be good if it means losing his companionship. Rex realizes how dear Ruth is to him and they become reconciled.

DOMINO.

IN THE WARDEN'S GARDEN (Two Parts—March 4).—Jim Haley, an ex-crook, unable to get work, cannot support his wife and child, Thelma. Jim runs across Shifty Anderson, a crook stool pigeon for the police, and Shifty persuades Jim to return to his old trade and burglarize a residence that Shifty has picked out. Jim consents, since it is a case of life or death for his wife. Shifty tips off the police and Jim is pinched and caught with the goods and sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years.

Jim's wife dies, leaving Thelma a dependent child. Unable to support Thelma, a kindly neighbor woman takes the child to an orphan asylum. Jim is heart broken and swears to kill Shifty for his treachery if fate ever throws him in his path. The warden of the penitentiary to which Jim is sent and his wife have lost a child by death and they resolve to adopt another to raise. They visit the orphanage and adopt Jim's child, not knowing that she is the daughter of a convict. Shifty gets in bad and is sent to the same prison where Jim is. Jim sees Shifty one noon in the prison mess room and tries to kill him but guards prevent him.

Shortly afterward word reaches the warden of an attempted prison outbreak. The warden searches for the ring leaders to punish them. Shifty tells him that Jim is one of the ring leaders, though Jim is innocent. The warden throws Jim into the prison dungeon and laces him in the "jacket," a terrible instrument of torture, to make him confess and betray his fellow-companions in the plot. The following morning Jim escapes from the jacket and by impersonating the guard he has overpowered, escapes from the prison, though wounded in his getaway. The hunt for the fugitive has no more than started when the real outbreak occurs within the walls. Shifty joins the mutineers and is shot down by a guard. Jim gets away from the prison and takes refuge in the warden's garden, unawares of where he is. Thelma, playing in the garden, finds Jim unconscious and revives him. Jim recognizes her as his own child. She aids Jim to escape. He tells her before he leaves that her Daddy will come back for her some day.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode 6 -Two Parts—Feb. 17).—As June is fleeing from the gambling house, she is glimpsed by Ned from a street car. But the conductor refuses to stop in the middle of the block, and by the time Warner has alighted and rushed back, the runaway bride is nowhere to be seen. Meanwhile she has reached in safety the home of Mrs. O'Keefe, the hotel bell boy's mother, and her protector. Mrs. O'Keefe, being the widow of the most popular patrolman on New York's police force, instructs some of her departed husband's friends, whose beats are in that neighborhood, that Marie and June are good friends of hers, who do not wish to be found. Enough! When Blye and Warner appear in the vicinity and question the policemen about a young girl, they are deliberately sent on a wild goose chase. But, as so often before, Blye at length calls upon Tommy Thomas. She drives around to the neighborhood, in which the man with the black vandyke has reason to believe his quarry is in hiding, and is lucky enough to see June coming out of Mrs. O'Keefe's.

Already Tommy Thomas has arranged with a Mrs. Villard, who wants a companion, to let her bring June to her. She invites the runaway bride into her car, and they drive to an employment agency with which Tommy Thomas has had an understanding. The farce is put through, and June is taken to the magnificent estate of Mrs. Villard, a young and handsome woman of clearly good intentions. That same evening June has an adventure. She overhears some tenants of Mrs. Villard's quarrelling, and hurries over to the squalid home of the Groggs. She finds Groggs in a drunken frenzy, his wife beside herself, hurling pots and pans. And then June lets herself go and her fiery denunciation of the drunkard soon sobers Groggs. He promises to reform, and the runaway bride realizes that there was but another symptom of the man-wife-money problem, which so besets her.

Returning to Mr. Villard's house to dinner, June meets Charles Cunningham. Tommy Thomas also is one of the guests. Once, she fancies, she sees through the velvet curtains of the room the sombre visage of the man with black vandyke.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode 7—2 Parts—"The Tormentors").—June returns to Mrs. O'Keefe's for her clothing and Marie. Scarcely have they taken their farewells of the widow when Ned Warner, the Moores and the Bletherings arrive—to find the detectives and the policemen battling on the stoop, and no sign of the runaway bride. Meanwhile the two girls have driven to Mrs. Villard's. Unknown to them, Gilbert Blye is in the house. He observes their arrival with satisfaction, and as soon as the girls have gone upstairs he instructs their hostess and leaves. That afternoon Mrs. Villard tells June that they are going downtown. She takes her unsuspecting companion to Garrigue and Co., marine brokers. There she explains to her that Mr. Blye is planning a yachting trip to southern waters and that he has invited them to join the party. This announcement throws June into a panic. She refuses to go. Presently Blye, Cunningham and Edwards reach the office, Tommy Thomas with them. All their efforts to persuade June, however, are vain. Across the court, Bobby Blethering from his office window sees June arguing with the man with the black vandyke. He phones Ned. Before the distraught bridegroom can get there, June and Mrs. Villard are fleeing in a taxi, pursued by Blye and his companions in Cunningham's limousine.

"ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE" (Lieber—Five Parts).—Rose Fay one day is riding in a railroad parlor car and suffers an insult by a fellow-passenger, from whose brutality she is defended and saved by a handsome young stranger, who, assured that she will not be further molested, disappears from the scene. But Rose has fallen in love with her savior, and her love does not diminish by the lapse of three years. One day she is visiting Sing Sing in company of her father, the Lieutenant Governor of the State, and among the convicts she recognizes her deliverer in the person of Lee Randall alias Jimmy Valentine, who is suffering imprisonment for a crime of which he so vehemently and convincingly pleads his ignorance that the Lieutenant Governor secures his release.

He is given a chance of retrieving his reputation; his appointment to a position in a bank of which Mr. Lane is president is the means. He goes straight. His old associates are after him, but he wards them off. The detectives try to pounce on him for offences of which he may be convicted, but he adroitly proves an alibi every time.

Jimmy enjoys a reputation of being the most expert safe opener known. The touch of his delicate, sensitive finger tips is irresistible. One day a little girl, sister to Rose Fay, his fiancee, is accidentally locked in the bank safe. Nobody is at hand who knows the combination that will open it. The child seems doomed to suffocation. In the crisis Lee Randall comes forward. With finger tips that have been pared to the quick for the work, he toils steadfastly and silently until he opens the safe. The child is released. But on the evidence of his marvelously nefarious skill the waititng detective arrests him. The intervention of Rose, however, secures Lee's final deliverance as the detective concedes that she has more need of him than the State of Massachusetts.

A DEAL WITH THE DEVIL (Three Parts—Feb. 15).—In the hope of becoming rich and famous, Walter Fabre, a medical student, devotes all his time to study and refuses the invitation of his fellow-students to join them in merry-making. Walter falls asleep and dreams that Mephistopheles appears and tells him that he can make his fame and fortune by giving him the power to foretell the death or recovery of a patient; in the event of death Mephisto will appear at the head, and in case of recovery he will appear at the feet of the patient. To prove his superhuman power he tells Walter that he will save the life of the King, who has been given up by all authorities. Walter gains admission to the King's bedside and while diagnosing the case, Mephistopheles appears at the foot. The King recovers and Walter becomes famous.

Some time later a beautiful young Baroness and her mother are out driving and the latter is fatally injured in an accident. The young Baroness, Ida Shinting, summons Walter and when he arrives at the bedside he sees Mephisto at the head, and knows the meaning thereof. He is so charmed with Ida's beauty that he beseeches his master to spare the Baroness' life. Mephisto agrees, but warns Walter that in return he will some day take from him his dearest.

Ida and Walter are married; five years later their little daughter is taken seriously ill. Finding Mephisto at her head Walter tries to thwart him by turning the child around. Again Mephisto takes his place at the head. Then the father, trying to cheat him again, places his daughter in a chair. She dies, however, and shortly after the funeral Walter himself becomes sick; he discovers by his head Mephisto, who says that he has come to exact punishment for the attempts Walter made to deceive him. Walter awakes with a start, and realizing that fame and wealth are not the only things in life, merrily joins his colleagues.

THANHOUSER SYNDICATE CORP.

THE $20,000,000 MYSTERY (Episode Fifteen—Reels 29 and 30—"The Robbery of the Ruby Coronet").—In spite of the temporary balking of her plans, as set forth in Episode Fourteen, Madame Duval does not swerve from her design to get Zudora in her power. It happens that the band have learned of a ruby coronet, presented to Mrs. Copeland, a wealthy society leader, as a birthday gift. Through the secret influence, that she possesses in many widely separated classes of society, Madame Duval obtains an invitation for herself, Captain Radcliffe and Bruce to a birthday ball, which Mrs. Copeland is planning to give. From a similar source, she obtains the combination of that lady's private safe, where the jewels are wont to be kept.

Mrs. Copeland's maid and her butler also have designs on the jewels, and on the morning of the ball, the former manages to get the combination of the safe for her confederate. In the evening, just as Captain Radcliffe and Bruce are about to inspect Mrs. Copeland's boudoir they are disturbed by Hook, the butler, who is bent on the same mission. The conspirators are not aware of this, although Bruce suspects something. A night or two after the ball, Madame Duval directs her "strong-arm" lieutenants, Bill and Ike, to steal the jewels from the hiding-place, previously located by Captain Radcliffe and Bruce. But the worthy pair reach the house only in time to give chase to Hook, the unscrupulous butler, who disappears over the garden wall with the jewel-filled boxes, just as they appear on the scene. Unfortunately for him, he lands almost in the arms of Bruce, who is on watch.

Meanwhile, the Copelands, returning from a late function at a friend's, discover the robbery, and Tom Hunt is called in to trace the thieves. With Jim Baird he sets out after Hook, toward whom suspicion points with deadly certainty, and the couple locate the butler in a nearby house. By leaping from a second story window, however, their quarry eludes them, and they then turn their attention toward Bruce, whom they have reason to think has also had a hand in spiriting away the prized coronet. The trail leads them to the old Blaisdell mansion. Before they reach it, however, Bruce has already come and secreted the stolen coronet behind a spreading pair of stag antlers that hang in the library of the old house. It has happened also, that Madame Duval, never neglecting a chance to make Zudora captive, has already planned to use the old house as a prison for her prey.

Fortune favors this latest plan of the band's chieftainess, for Storm, motoring with Zudora, has an accident happen to his steering gear, his automobile becomes unmanageable, and dashes into a tree, just as Madame Duval, Captain Radcliffe and Bruce, who have been trailing them, drive up. In the collision Zudora is thrown out, and Storm, striving to restore her to consciousness, is only too glad to accept the proffered aid of Madame Duval, whom he does not recognize in the darkness. Without a moment's hesitation Storm lifts his inanimate sweetheart into Captain Radcliffe's car, and they drive off to the old Blaisdell mansion, where Storm carries her into the library and places her in a big Morris chair, while the others pretend to send for a doctor.

As Storm stands solicitously beside the stunned girl, Bill and Ike steal noiselessly up behind him and pinion his arms. A moment later, in spite of his desperate struggles he is borne away, leaving Zudora to her fate.

But it is not to be for long. Baird and Hunt, suspecting Bruce of some hand in the robbery of the coronet, have trailed him to the house, and after a spectacular struggle they rescue Zudora and recover the much-sought coronet.

KRITERION SERVICE.

(The following are synopses of the pictures to be released on the Kriterion Program during the week of Monday, March 1, to Saturday, March 6, inclusive).

THE STAGE OF LIFE (Alhambra—Two Parts).—Mercedes Hoover, star of a theatrical company, considers her baby an unwelcome burden. Her neglect of the child is the cause of many bitter quarrels with her husband. At the home of Hal Bickfort, an actor in the same company, a baby has been born dead and the grief and disappointment have bereft the mother of her reason. After a particularly heated quarrel, during which the baby has been accidentally struck with a bottle, leaving an ugly scar on its neck, Hoover takes the child and leaves it with the Bickforts—where the joy of holding the little one in her arms restores Mrs. Bickfort's sanity.

During rehearsal, a shooting scene is being enacted and a "prop" gun is required. After some search, one is found and Mercedes again tries the scene, fires the shot and the next moment her husband, who has been playing opposite her, drops dead to the ground, the gun having been loaded.

Years pass and the child has grown into a beautiful girl, and developed talent as a moving picture actress. She is very happy with the Bickforts, who she believes are her real parents. Time has not dealt well with Mercedes. Lines of poverty and dissipation mark her face and she is forced to earn her living by doing menial work in a cheap road house. While taking some outdoor scenes, the moving picture company stop near the road house, and Marie goes in for a glass of water. It is brought her by Mercedes and something about the woman moves Marie to pity and she places some money in her hands as she leaves.

The next day, Mercedes arrives late for work and is discharged. Aimlessly she wanders about and at length secures a position as "an extra woman" with the moving picture concern. She is put in a scene with Marie, and while bending over her, she suddenly catches sight of the scar on her neck, and at once recognizes her child. She falls in a faint and is carried away by Bickfort, who is standing nearby. He recognizes Mercedes and offers her money, pleading with her to go away and not reveal the fact that she is Marie's mother. Refusing the money, Mercedes sorrowfully leaves the studio and goes wearily to her poorly furnished room. There she writes a letter full of self accusation and repentance and addresses it to Bickfort. The next morning she is found dead by neighbors.

BACK OF THE SHADOWS (Two Parts—Santa Barbara).—Jim Arnold, a dope fiend, calls on Quan Ming, a Chinese servant employed in the household of Dr. Franklin, to obtain some "hop." The Chinaman takes him up to his room and there provides Jim with a "layout." A little while later, the doctor smells smoke and rushing upstairs finds Jim surrounded by flames, the bed having caught on fire. He drags the unconscious man out of the room, quenches the fire and telephones the police who call and take Jim away. Finding some opium on his servant, he immediately discharges the Chinaman.

The doctor shows the opium to his wife, who is very much impressed by what has taken

Mr. Exhibitor:-

Do you know, Mr. Exhibitor, it was a great moment in Mr. Anderson's life to stand in the Auditorium of the World's greatest Motion Picture Theatre, "The Strand," in New York City, and see the final justification of his one great idea, an idea representing eight years faithful application toward a definite purpose.

Remember, Mr. Exhibitor, when Anderson first advocated the use of the gold fibre surface, he was ridicyled, laughed at, and his failure predicted. But he did not fail, and that night in the Strand Theatre, last April, when he viewed a perfectly projected motion picture thrown on his own gold fibre screen, just as he had made it years ago with his own hands, that was ample recompense for all the jeers and criticisms he had endured.

Now, "Sir", Mr. Anderson is offering you, by the square foot, the product of his brain, a part of himself, in reality--The Waterproof--Washable Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, having every improvement of modern chemistry and geometrical optics with the knowledge gained in years of practical screen production combined to produce the "perfect" projection surface.

Truly a joyous moment for Mr. Anderson and a wonderful opportunity for you.

place. The doctor is called to go to visit a patient. While he is away, his wife picks up a piece of opium and examines it. Her curiosity aroused, she tastes it. Suddenly a peculiar drowsiness overwhelms her. The discharged servant steathily enters the room and sprinkles some opium into the fire. The fumes fill the air, and Mrs. Franklin is unable to shake off their effect. The Chinaman silently slips a card in her hand and leaves. The card reads: "Private Smoking Parlor for Veiled Ladies—Conducted by Hong Yee."

The next day she cannot resist the temptation to visit the place designated on the card. Heavily veiled, she calls and is admitted into an Orientally furnished room by Hong Yee, the proprietor. The discharged servant then proceeds to tell the other Chinamen who the woman is, and Hong Yee becomes very much interested. They plan to keep her prisoner, and while she is under the influence of the drug they tatoo a dragon on her left cheek. Quan Ming takes some of her clothing and her pocketbok and drops them on a dock near a sleeping tramp, who delivers them to the police. The next day the papers contain accounts of Mrs. Franklin's suicide suggested by the furs and pocketbook which were found near the water's edge, and her husband is heartbroken at her disappearance.

Years pass and the doctor's wife is now a confirmed fiend, unable to tear herself away from the habit. Time has robbed her of her beauty and she has become haggard and aged-looking Hong Yee who has tired of her, has her put out, and she gets into a quarrel on the streets, is arrested and put into prison. Her daughter, Ruth, is interested in slum work. While visiting the prisons, she sees Mrs. Franklin and takes pity on the wretched woman. Before she leaves, Ruth gives her a Bible. After Ruth has gone, the doctor's wife picks up the Bible and discovers her daughter's name on the flyleaf. She is overcome with grief that her own child should find her under such circumstances, and collapses. The prison guards enter and roughly drag her out of the prison and push her into a chair. She looks about her wearily. Suddenly she sees her hubsand leaning over her and her child beside her. Her husband smiles and then she realizes she has been asleep.

THE CRUMPLED LETTER (Two Parts—Monty).—While on a two week's vacation, True, a bookkeeper employed by Mr. Fuller, a well-to-do banker, meets his employer's daughter, Dora, at a summer resort where the two fall in love. Mr. Fuller comes out to spend a week-end with his family and takes his manager with him. The manager, who has been watching True and Dora dancing all evening, resents the bookkeeper's attentions. He takes Dora aside and tells her she has been dancing with her father's bookkeeper. This does not change her regard for True, and when the time comes for him to go back to work, she gives him one of her photographs.

The manager has been planning to rob his employer's safe, and has hired a crook whom he has met in a saloon to do the work for him. The saloon is raided and "Slim" sends the manager a note, telling him he "was unable to do the robbing that night, on account of the raid, but would be on the job very soon." Soon after, the bookkeeper and the manager gets into a quarrel which soon leads to blows. As the manager falls to the ground from one of True's punches, the letter falls out of his hand and True picks it up and reads it, just as Mr. Fuller walks into the office. He will listen to no explanations, refuses to read the letter which True shows him, and the bookkeeper is discharged. Eventually the safe is robbed by the manager's accomplice, and the blame put on the bookkeeper.

"True" decides to try his luck in the Alaskan goldfields, and sends his sweetheart a note telling her he will take the 11 o'clock boat. Dora rushes into an auto but arrives on the pier just as the boat is pulling out. She collapses into the arm's of True's mother who has come to see him off, and together they return to the girl's home. She becomes ill and the woman is kept as her nurse.

Several weeks later, ill fortune overtakes the Fullers and their palatial home is seized by the sheriff. The bookkeeper has struck luck and returns home with his pockets full of gold nuggets. He calls at Dora's home just as the sheriff is taking possession. Fuller at first demands his arrest for his supposed robbery of the safe, but True again presents him with the crumpled letter, and when Fuller reads it, he turns on his manager angrily. As that gentleman is endeavoring to slip out quietly, he is caught and placed in the sheriff's hands. True then relates his good fortune and offers to buy the home back. Fuller extends his hand and apologizes to his one time bookkeeper, and Dora rushes into the room and in his arms. And no one interferes with their happiness.

THE SAND RAT (Two Parts—Kriterion).—Jim Neal and Mollie Wells are sweethearts. Molly is living with her mother in a small cabin out West. The mother is devoted to her daughter; she is lamentably poor, ekeing out a miserable existence by taking in washing. She realizes that she cannot give her daughter the advantages she would like to and finally she determines to rob for the sake of her child. Disguised as a man, she robs the paymaster of the smelter works of a large sum of money. During the robbery, she drops her handkerchief, which is found later by the sheriff and gives him a clue to her identity.

Buck Carter, another sweetheart of Molly's, is as equally favored by Molly as Jim Neal. The employees of the smelter works roast Jim, the sheriff, for his failure to arrest the thief. Jim's great love for Molly prevents his arresting her mother. The name the men have given the robber is the Sand Rat. Jim happens upon a tender love scene between Buck and Molly and after the withdrawal of Buck, he upbraids Molly for her fickleness. She, in turn, tells Jim that he should have spoken to Buck, not to her, branding Jim as a coward. Owing to the failure of Jim to arrest the Sand Rat, the manager of the smelter company seeks outside aid. The Sand Rat is almost trapped and wounded, but makes her escape, subsequently hiding in a cave, the location of which is known to Jim. He finds the woman wounded to death and finally takes her home; he places her on a bed and leaves a letter for Molly telling her of the circumstances of her mother's death and his knowledge of the crime. The girl's heart goes out in gratitude to Jim. The identity of the Sand Rat is never revealed but the men are led to the cave which she inhabited by Jim, and are satisfied by the evidence they discover there that the Sand Rat is dead.

DIRTY DAN'S DEMISE (Thistle).—Little Sarah, an innocent country girl, is betrothed to Handsome Frank, the hired man, and all indications point to a happy marriage and a peaceful life, when Dirty Dan, the city chap, stops at the farm while riding through the country and asks for a night's lodging, an accommodation the simple country folk readily offer him.

Little Sarah attracts Dirty Dan's attentions and he attempts to win her away from Frank, without success. Little Sarah remains true to the love of her youth and repulses him. Dan's anger is aroused and he lures Sarah away from home in the dead of night by leading her favorite cow past her window and coaxing her to moo as though in need of aid. Little Sarah goes in search of her and this affords Dan the opportunity desired.

He seizes her as soon as she gets away from the house and attempts to carry her away. Frank, however, is also aroused and together with father, starts to the rescue. Dan has a mile start but he has failed to reckon on Frank's machine, which rapidly overtakes him. At last Dan's horse shys, throwing him and little Sarah in front of the oncoming car. Leaving Sarah to her fate, Dan seeks safety in a tree, but Sarah is saved by Frank, who then starts his revenge. Several rushes against the tree shake Dan's grip and at last he falls to the road, where the machine puts an end to him and his villainous work.

RESOURCEFUL BILLY (Santa Barbara).—Billy is not looked upon with approval by his girl's father, who orders him out of the house. Nothing daunted, Billy writes him a letter saying that he will still succeed in marrying the girl, despite all objections. Father accepts the challenge and replies that he will offer $50,000 if he can carry out his boast.

The girl's father has the house closely watched by detectives and the girl guarded. The cook leaves and a new one is advertised for. Billy is on the job. He disguises himself as a cook and is hired. The next day the new cook is taken sick and sends for a doctor (his friend), who advises him to send for a minister.

The minister is brought into the cook's room and Billy and Bee are married right then and there. They then face papa and claim the $50,000. As he writes the check, he cannot help smiling at resourceful Billy.

IN RAW COLOR (Two Parts—Trump).—Henry Gore, a man of no integrity, practically sells his daughter, Alice, in marriage to Alfred Jackson. Although Jackson realizes that he is buying the girl, his affection for her is decent enough and it may be that he figures he is doing Alice a good turn in taking her away from her father. He does not know, however, that between the girl and a certain Allesandro Ettori, instructor in a drawing school to which Alice has been going, there has sprung up a great attraction. Alice cannot force herself to break off her relations—innocent enough—with the young Italian. She does not tell him of the marriage her father has arranged for her, yet she is frightened because of the obvious passion the drawing instructor shows toward her. Ettori's attentions to Alice have aroused the jealousy of Maria Ferone, the model of the school. This young woman is a simple sort of person who has worshipped Ettori for a long time, and who, although really expecting no return for her devotion, is happy when she can serve him slavishly and follow him about with dog-like care.

Alice finally leaves the school and her fellow-students give her a farewell supper. To this affair she brings Jackson and for the first time announces her approaching marriage. The students rejoice, but Ettori is thunder-struck. Maria is pleased, because she now feels that Ettori will have more thought for her. Ettori, in his own chamber, where he has erected a sort of shrine to Alice, upbraids the girl for her faithlessness. She almost succumbs to his reproaches and advances, but the entrance of Jackson saves her.

Later they are married and, as she soon finds out, unhappily. Maria also suffers, in spite of the fact that she and Ettori would now be closer together. Once Ettori, supposedly sketching her, is so obessed with the thought of Alice, that he draws her instead of the model. Unable to be without a sight of her, he rushes to her house and finds her in her own studio hard at work to forget the incompatability that lies between herself and her husband. Ettori's attractions again overpower her; she realizes her love for him but sends him away. Jackson, learning of Ettori's visit, is overcome with jealousy. He accuses his wife of loving Ettori and, moreover, in a rough marital way, forces her to kiss him, whereupon she breaks from him and, going to her room, writes him a note that she does love Ettori and that she is going to him.

Meanwhile Ettori has returned to his room to find the shrine he has erected to Alice destroyed. Maria, in a jealous fit, has wrecked it. Maria hides behind a curtain and in terror watches Ettori's rage. Suddenly Alice comes in and tells Ettori she is ready to go with him. He rejoices and makes preparations to leave. Maria comes from hiding, locks the door and confronts Alice. Finding Alice unmoved, Maria pleads for Ettori, his career, his future but Alice is still unmoved. Ettori returns and to prevent his leaving with Alice, Maria stabs her. Maria slinks out of the studio and meets Jackson, hastening to find his wife and ask for forgiveness. When he asks for his wife, Maria can only point to the room, where she lies dying. He rushes into the room and sees his wife dying and hears her prayer for forgiveness.

FATE'S VENGEANCE (Paragon—Two Parts).—Unknown to John Anderson, wealthy land owner, Jane Warren and her invalid mother are threatened with eviction from their humble cottage by Anderson's agent. Later, Jane almost forced to beggary in an effort to secure supplies and medicines, meets Harry Anderson, John's younger son, also personally unknown to her, and in pity for her destitute condition, he gives temporary aid. Jane hastens home with the supplies only to find the house in the hands of Anderson's agents and her mother in a dying condition.

Walter Anderson, the elder son, dissipated and an habitue of gambling clubs, loses heavily and forges a note in his father's name. Harry learns of the note but shields his brother in the hope that some way of meeting the note before it is due may relieve Walter of the stigma of forgery. Meanwhile, Jane, embittered and hateful of the upper classes generally, has found temporary shelter in the tenements where she has met and becomes associated with a band of anarchists.

During a slumming expedition, Walter sees and is enamored of Jane. Fearing arrest, he dons old clothes and takes rooms in the neighborhood. He meets Jane and eventually learns of her connection with the band, for which he professes sympathy. Later just before the maturity of the note, he returns to his father and asks for money with which to meet it. Angered, Anderson, Sr., refuses the advance and tells Walter that he must raise the money himself within twenty-four hours or else be disinherited. Walter returns to his rooms in the slums.

A meeting of the anarchist band takes place that night at which chance is to determine which member of the association is to be chosen to put out of the way some wealthy oppressor of the masses. Walter takes the opportunity to stop the wheel of chance by trick opposite Jane's number. According to the law of the band, the loser is permitted to choose the victim and Walter suggests to Jane that the man who had them evicted from their home be made to pay. Later, she leaves for Anderson's home to carry out her mission. Walter accompanies her to Anderson's home ostensibly to aid and keep watch for her while she is within the house.

Anderson, Sr., about to retire, is suddenly aware of some one present in the room. He glances up to find himself looking in the muzzle of Jane's revolver. Behind the curtains, eagerly watching is Walter. Jane tells Anderson of what his grinding, money grabbing policies have brought upon her. Looking over Jane's shoulder, he suddenly calls behind her. She turns for a fraction of a moment and he seizes the hand holding the revolver. They struggle. Walter emerges slightly from behind the curtains, half inclined to join in the fight, when suddenly the revolver explodes and he receives the bullet meant for his father.

Harry, entering the front door, comes upon the scene. Jane, appalled at what she has done and horror-struck, moreover at the broken figure of the old man before her. She recognizes Harry as being the one of all who has aided her. In a few words the situation is explained. Jane tells them of Walter's part in the plot against his father and the old man, realizing the enormity of the hardships the girl has had to bear, forgives her. As a further appreciation of the conditions she has related, Anderson, Sr., endows an institution for the investigation and alleviation of such cases as hers and places Jane at the head of it. Later she and Harry become engaged and take up their new work together.

THE POWER OF MUSIC (Alhambra).—A miner sends home a box of gold dust to his wife with a note telling her he has struck it rich. This so excites his son that he leaves home to seek his fortune in the West. The boy reaches an Indian encampment where his skill at playing the mouth organ is regarded with superstitious awe by the Indians, and the chief, who is enchanted with the music, has the boy fed and well taken care of.

The boy's mother, anxious over him, goes out West with her little girl. Her approach is observed by a half-breed who leads a band of Indians out to capture the "white squaw." She is dragged from the wagon and taken to the encampment, while the little girl who has been overlooked, wanders about by herself.

On seeing his mother being brought in by the Indians the boy rushes to her and embraces her, then explains to the chief that she is his mother. The chief, who has taken a great liking to the boy, angrily dismisses the half-breed and, giving the boy a gun, tells him to go with his mother in search for his little sister. The half-breed stealthily follows them as they leave and finally attacks the boy from behind, choking him and trying to wrench the gun away from him.

In the meantime the little girl has been found by her father and together they go to look for mother. They arrive near the spot where the half-breed is strangling the boy and a shot aimed from above by the father succeeds in putting the half-breed out of commission and soon the family is again reunited.

SYD AND HIS SWEETHEARTS (CK).—Syd, the village Beau Brummel, is preparing to go and call on his sweetheart when his nephew pushes him into a tub of water where his aunt is washing some clothes. Syd leaves the house with the back of his pants wet and meets Ann, a girl friend of his. They talk a few minutes and then Syd continues to his sweetheart's house. He asks her father on the porch where Marty is and the father tells him that she is out in the yard feeding the chickens, where Syd promptly goes to find her. He frightens the chickens and she throws some chicken feed in his face. Later Syd asks Marty to go for a walk. The father objects, so Syd straps him into his invalid wheel-chair and takes him along by force.

In the meantime a tramp has robbed Ann and she tries to find Syd to tell him. While Syd is trying to steal a kiss from Marty, a cowboy in an automobile lassoes the wheel chair, dragging it along with Marty's father in it. As Syd and Marty see what has happened, Ann comes up and all start after the chair. Finally the chair becomes loose from the auto and continues its flight into a creek. Syd and Ann fall in after it and get it out. The father beats Syd and he and his daughter leave Syd and Ann, who say goodbye and go home.

In the meantime the tramp has come to Syd's home and attempted to steal a pie but is frightened away by the dog. Syd, on arriving home, eats the pie and blames it on the tramp, whereupon his Aunt drives the tramp away with a hose. The tramp returns and steals Syd's pants while they are out to dry and Syd is compelled to wear one of his Aunt's dresses when he goes out to make an apology to Marty and her father. They drive him away, however, and Syd then goes to Ann's house. She receives him encouragingly. Whereupon Syd and Ann embrace and Syd pops the question.

SHADOWS (Punchinello).—Mr. and Mrs. Jones' home adjoins that of Mr. and Mrs. Busybody and a side window of the latter's home faces the dining room window of the Jones' of which the blind remains always lowered. Therefore every evening, when Mr. Jones embraces his wife their shadows are projected upon the blind and always witnessed by envious Mrs. Busybody.

One evening Jones tells his wife that important business will detain him at the office, although in reality he and two friends engage in an absorbing game of poker. To dispel the loneliness, Mrs. Jones goes to the theater with a lady friend.

Sue, her maid, seeing the coast clear, brings her sweetheart, Joe, in the dining room, and they embrace and kiss in fashion "a la Jones." Mrs. Busybody, seeing the slim shadow of a man and the graceful shadow of a woman upon the blind, concludes that Mrs. Jones is entertaining a strange man, as she is familiar with Jones' shadow which is a bulky one. In consequence, she waits for Mr. Jones to arrive and fills his mind with suspicions of his wife.

Mr. Jones, on reaching the dining room finds cigarette smoke, and a mysterious pair of pants Suffice it to be said that a serious disruption takes place in the Jones' household. Mr. Jones goes to Mrs. Jones' bedroom and drags her out of bed. He accuses her of infidelity. Following this the fun waxes fast and furious to a most ludicrous finish.

ALLIANCE.

JACK CHANTY (Masterpiece—Five Parts).—Malcolm Piers, a son of an old and aristocratic family, after losing his wealth as a stock broker, turns over valuable securities belonging to his clients to Garrod, his secretary, and, without saying farrewell to his friends, sets out alone for the land of forests and gold in Northwest Canada. The secretary, false to his trust, gambles with these securities left in his charge, foses them and allows his departed employer to be accused of being an absconder.

Piers arrives with but the assets of a merry heart, a banjo and the determination to carve out of the wild a new fortune for himself. Dropping his old name, he is daubed Jack Chanty by his new associates and because of his good fellowship, wit and honesty is looked up to by miner, woodsman and half breed.

Jack was on his way down Spirit River floating with the tide, his banjo plunking and heart beating with joy, for at Fort Cheecer lived Mary Cranston, his quarter-breed sweetheart. The twice-a-year steamboat arrived at the Fort and simultaneously with Chanty, having as passengers Sir Bryson Trangmar,lieutenant governor, his daughter and entourage. In the party is Chanty's old secretary, Garrod, now in the service of Sir Bryson. The sight of the party stirs up old memories in Chanty's heart and, much to the discomfort of Mary, he allows Luedd, the lieutenant governor's daughter, to carry on a flirtation. Sir Bryson is secretly on his way to worthless placer claims which he has purchased, and engages Jack as guide and Ascota, an evil-hearted half-breed, as camp manager.

It is an old truth that we hate the object which we fear and such was Garrod's sentiment toward Chanty, whom he refused to recognize. Ascota, who is in love with Mary, bears Jack a jealous hate, and both he and Garrod plot the guide's undoing. The party reaches the claims and find them utterly worthless when Garrod stumbles upon Chanty's rich diggings. Here he tells of the crime which Jack is falsely accused of, and the governor "jumps" the claims, substantiating his pretensions by citing the law which bars legal fugitives from working gold lands, and orders that Chanty be arrested.

Chanty's ire is aroused. Defying the governor, he sets out to prove himself innocent. Garrod escapes, and, through the aid of Mary and her brother, Jack, after a series of thrilling escapes, exonerates himself. Garrod meets his death from exhaustion while Ascota jumps from a mountain peak to escape the vengeance of Chanty. Jack returns to civilization lured by the governor's daughter. Disgusted by the shallowness of these people, back to the wilderness he flies to Mary Cranston, who is waiting for him.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES (A drama adapted from the novel by the famous author, Sir A. Conan Doyle—Four Parts).—All who have read the celebrated novel remember the Great Dane that terrorized the superstitious community surrounding the home of the Earl of Baskerville. The death of Sir Charles of Baskerville was connected by the tenantry with the reported appearance of the dreaded hound. Subsequent to the Earl's death, his nephew, Henry, fell heir to the estate. He was notified by the attorney to come to Baskerville but received a warning from another source to remain away. Despite the warning, Sir Henry goes to the manor where he meets Mr. Stapleton, the caretaker. He also learns of his uncle's animosity against Roger, another nephew who was disinherited. Following his coming, Sir Henry soon has cause to fear the hound. He sends an urgent sall to Sherlock Holmes, a great detective. The call is intercepted by Stapleton, who impersonates Holmes. The real Holmes learns of the interloper and goes to Baskerville to investigate. A series of remarkable and terrifying events follow, which almost result in the death of Holmes as well as the Earl and his entire household. Even Miss Lyons, Sir Henry's charming neighbor, nearly becomes a victim of the evil genius who is plotting the ruin of Baskerville. After a harrowing experience, the detective succeeds in killing the monstrous hound.

Holmes doubles his efforts to unravel the dreadful mystery and enlists the aid of Barrymore, a discharged servant. Barrymore informs Holmes that Stapleton is the author of all the deviltry. The detective lays a trap for Stapleton, who unwittingly falls into it. After a terrific struggle he is overcome by Holmes and Barrymore. Not until his confession is it discovered that Stapleton is in realty the disgraced nephew, Roger, who, for revenge, planned the destruction of Sir Henry in a desperate endeavor to gain control of the Baskerville estate.

THE TROUBLES OF RUFUS.—Rufus and Rastus, sons of Ham, and blacker than the ace of spades, roll into town in a side-door "pullman." Times are mighty hard, but being an ambitious coon, Rufus soon lands a job with Hiram Jones, a rube. Mandy, an ebony-hued Venus of elephantine proportions, who also "shirks" for Hiram, kindles the spark of love in the breast of Rufus, the dusky Romeo. Rastus, learning that Rufus has landed a job, decides to become a "son of rest" and sponge on his friend. Rufus' love dream gets an awful jolt when he learns of Lothario, a rival smoke. But Mandy picks the darker shade of black and decides to support Rufus for the rest of his natural life.

Meantime Rastus waxes fat on the bounty of his pal who regularly deals out a generous amount of pie. Rastus, however, goes on a hunger strike for chicken. Rufus and he raid Jones' hen-roost but are seen by Lothario, who sees a good chance for revenge against his successful rival. He squeals to Jones, but the foxy coons bury their feast when they see the angry farmer approaching.

Mandy's wedding day rolls round. She and her "man" hie themselves to the parson's to hear the fatal words which will make them man and slave. Lothario, however, decides on desperate measures. He informs the constable that Rufus is "de perloiner ob dem chickens," and leads the way to the minister's house. Rufus is pinched by the constable before the final words are spoken. This, of course, leaves Mandy without a husband. The difficulty is solved, however, when the blushing Lothario is elected.

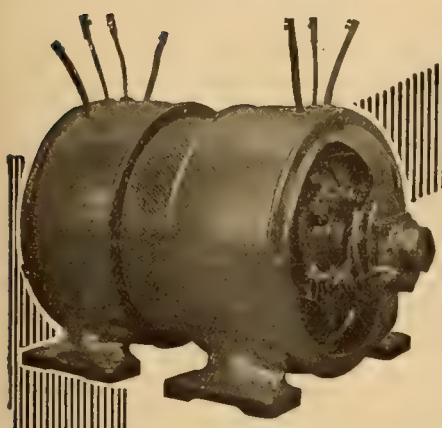
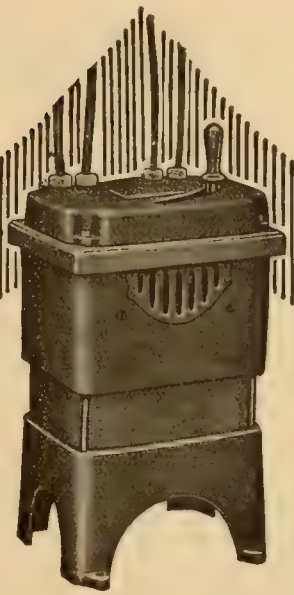
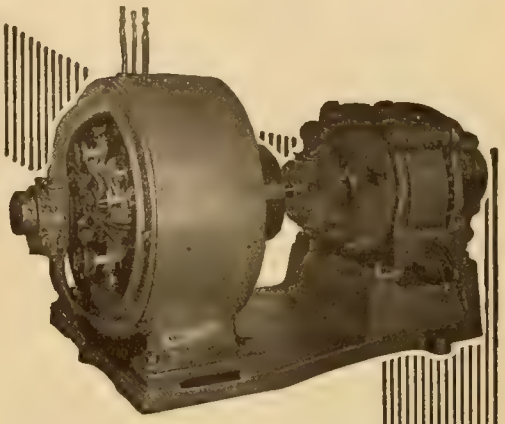
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.



The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

Quality—surpassing quality—is the word that the mind always associates with the pictures seen on the Peerless Day and Night Screen.

Brilliant, pure white and black; sharply defined pictures please the audience, and they will come back again to see them. THAT IS WHAT THE EXHIBITOR WANTS.

DAY AND NIGHT SCREENS, Inc.

SOMETHING
EVERY EXHIBITOR SHOULD KNOW

FILMS

By far the greatest of MINA Films' many advantages is that they are different from other one reel comedies. There isn't anything better and there isn't anything else just like them. For that reason MINA Films give distinction to any program. On top of that they are always funny and skillfully produced. They are the something new in the film world which no live exhibitor can afford to overlook. Released Thursday through the General Film Co.

A Comfortable Seat

MAKES THE Show Complete

AS owner or manager of a moving picture theatre, you know the importance of comfortable seating arrangements.

There is no seat so cozy, attractive and restful as the upholstered chair, covered with

DU PONT FABRIKOID
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

CRAFTSMAN QUALITY

Such seats are inviting to patrons, a credit to good taste and a positive indication of the desire to have every detail of the theatre harmonize with the high character of the attractions featured.

This superior quality of artificial leather is extensively used in many of the leading theatres. It is far more durable than coated splits. It is made in a plain or embossed finish, in various colors and thus making surface cleansing easy, quick and cheap—an item of cost to be kept at the lowest.

IF you are to renovate your seating accommodations, or increase the capacity of your theatre, or contemplate installing a reserve section requiring a better seat, we will be glad to send samples and quote prices.

The Avenging Conscience

by D.W.Griffith

"THE AVENGING CONSCIENCE" may be described as a "Mystery Story," but not in the ordinary sense of the words. It is the sort of mystery conceived by the weird imaginative genius of Edgar Allan Poe and then transplanted to the screen by the wonderfully vivid and artistic methods of D. W. Griffith. The Avenging Conscience had its first presentations in New York at the Strand Theatre, where it broke all records. It is in six reels.

Bookings accepted for Iowa, Wisconsin, Indiana and Michigan. Send for heralds on "The Escape" and Weber and Field's two-reel comedies.

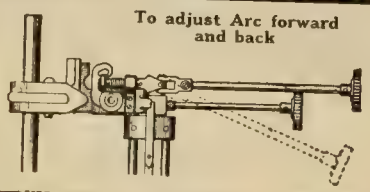
To adjust Arc forward and back



Special Top Carbon Tilt Control for Regular Model Simplex Lamp

THIS device will be appreciated by every operator using regular model Simplex Lamps. It is necessary to make frequent adjustment of the arc (forward and back), particularly on alternating current. To make this adjustment from inside the lamp house while the arc is burning is inconvenient, annoying and even dangerous.

Complete instructions for making connection and attaching to lamp are sent with each device.

Price $5.00 net, prepaid anywhere in the United States.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

OF COURSE!

READ THESE LETTERS and See How Exhibitors and Feature Rights Men are Making Money with DEAGAN'S MARVELOUS UNAPHONE

Carthage, Mo., Nov. 27, 1914.
J. C. Deagan, Chicago, Ill.
Dear Sir: I cleaned up $105.00 here yesterday. Am making more money twice over than any other "Feature" man I have run across. And it's all because of the advertising I do with the Unaphone.
The instrument is a positive wonder for getting business and is proving a regular bonanza to me. Money wouldn't buy it from me if I could not get another.
(Signed) W. R. HART,
Vera Cruz Feature Film.

Lafayette, Ind., Dec. 10, 1914.
J. C. Deagan, Chicago, Ill.
Dear Sir: Am having immense success with the Unaphone, which reached me three days ago. I now find that I can cut out all newspaper advertising, all handbill distribution, and do away with the expense of advance work entirely. Simply make arrangements with the next town by 'phone and do all my advertising with the Unaphone in my car on the day I arrive. I also use it in the lobby. During the three days I have used it my receipts have almost doubled over those of any other three days in the last two months. The instrument is exactly what I have been looking for: It is just what the exhibitor needs, and I want to thank you for sending it so promptly.
(Signed) J. H. MARTIN,
Feature Films.

Size 34 x 26 x 10 inches
Weight 110 lbs.

Brazil, Ind., Dec. 28, 1914.
J. C. Deagan, Chicago, Ill.
Dear Sir: The Unaphone is sure a money-getter. I am traveling with Feature Films. I don't book ahead at all. Just run in town and book the day I am in. Everybody wants me just as soon as they hear the music. I am sure getting the money.
(Signed) M. C. STEWART,
Feature Films.

Anderson, Ind., Jan. 1, 1915.
J. C. Deagan, Chicago, Ill.
Dear Sir: Just a word to let you know that we find the Unaphone the best advertising medium we have ever used in our line, and we think (in fact, we know) the Unaphone as put up by you is responsible for three-fourths of the business that we do. We would not be without it and would use nothing else. We attract more attention with it than with all the other mediums combined. We heartily recommend it as a business-getter, and we respectfully request that you refer to us when in need of a boost for the Unaphone.
(Signed) T. D. WILLIAMS, Exhibitor.

The Unaphone is a musical novelty instrument of unusual merit, especially designed for moving picture theatres. The Unaphone is played from piano keyboard. Any piano player or drummer can play it. Superb in tone and volume. Can be played soft or loud. Nothing better for the orchestra pit, lobby concert, or street advertising. Better than a brass band. Place in automobile with banners advertising present or coming feature attraction and drive around town playing latest popular airs. Piano player on front seat with keyboard in his lap. Real novelty draws enormous crowds. Instrument will pay for itself in a few days. Price $225.00. Sold on easy terms. Write today.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

Grace Darling

Is Traveling to the Panama Exposition

for the

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL

GRACE DARLING is probably the most popular young lady in the wide world. She has been commissioned by the Editor of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial to visit strange places and peoples, and to report her observations and adventures, both on the motion picture screen and on the printed newspaper page.

Unquestionably, the publicity given to Grace Darling is universal in its extent. The publicity will drive people into your theatre just as it has on the serial motion picture plays.

Simultaneously with written accounts of her travels that appear in the great Hearst newspapers every Thursday, there also appear picturized versions of her travels in the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial. The publicity is invaluable to every exhibitor of motion pictures.

Everyone is anxious to follow Grace Darling's journey both on the screen and in the newspapers. The idea means increased financial revenue for the exhibitor. The brains of the most versatile newspaper men, journalists who have made the tremendous circulation of the Hearst newspapers, are combined with the brains of the men who have made the Selig Polyscope Company's Pictureplays famous, to make this the ONLY feature department in a news reel of greatest possible benefit to YOU, Mr. Exhibitor.

Photoplays of Quality

Mr. Edwin Thanhouser is back again! His return to the managership of the firm that bears his name will be accepted throughout the film world as a promise of things well worth watching for. The name THANHOUSER has meant great things in film production. It will mean even greater things.

The Final Reckoning

(Two Reels) Released Tuesday, March 9th.

This thrilling drama of love and adventure has its climax in a fearful fight between a desperate gang-leader and the police-official hero on the dizzy top of a giant dam 175 feet from the ground. Florence LaBadie in the leading role. Cast also includes Morris Foster, Justus D. Barnes and Ernest C. Warde.

Little Bobby

(One Reel) Released Sunday, March 14th.

Six-year-old Bob's love for his father-cobbler is so great as to inspire him to forsake his toys and go out to earn money in order that his father's wish for home might be realized. Bob gets the money. It is a sweet comedy-drama admirably interpreted by Helen Badgley, the Thanhouser kidlet, and Ethel Cooke and Harris Gordon.

Princess Films

"DO UNTO OTHERS"—One-Reel Drama. Released Friday, March 12th. With Helen Badgley, Leland Benham, Harris Gordon, Ethel Cooke.

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 7

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

Beatriz Michelena in "Mignon," has been very successful because of the beauty and daintiness of the star and the interesting, well acted play taken from the famous opera by Ambroise Thomas, which is to-day part of the repertoire of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City.

The Cosmo Theatre in Gary, Ind., ran a good sized advertisement on the play calling special attention to the five-piece orchestra, its director and a well-known singer who sang excerpts from the opera. At no time during the history of the Cosmo Theatre has the original price of admission, 10c, been raised, no matter how important the attraction.

Even when photoplays which were shown in Metropolitan theatres at from 25c to $1.00 admission were shown the Cosmo price remained unchanged.

But by advertising Beatriz Michelena in "Mignon" as they did—by giving it proper musical setting, the Cosmo Theatre made the showing of this film so important an event that they made the price 20c, and played to packed houses at that price.

Ideas like this are the things that make profits for live exhibitors.

In no other program are there so many opportunities to do unusual things as there are in the World Film program.

Any exhibitor can use this method of handling "Mignon" and can use ideas along similar lines for other World Film features.

We shall be glad to hear from exhibitors who have done unusual things like this with World features so that we can tell our other exhibitors what they have done, for the mutual benefit of everybody concerned.

A Phenomenal

SUCCESS

Already Proven by the Greatest Advance Bookings Ever Known in the History of Serials —

Another smashing triumph for the Universal.

When the Universal says a serial is GREAT—every exhibitor on earth knows it's true.

The very first announcement of the Universal's masterpiece, "THE BLACK BOX," made exhibitors everywhere prick up their ears.

Next came the word that this greatest of all photoplay serials, by E. Phillips Oppenheim, the world's greatest writer of mystery stories, produced by the greatest of directors, Otis Turner, at the world's greatest studios, Universal City, Cal., was backed by

THE GREATEST ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN EVER CONCEIVED AND PRODUCED TO MAKE A PHOTOPLAY SERIAL A WHIRLWIND SUCCESS FOR EXHIBITORS.

THEN the BOOKINGS POURED IN. From cities, towns and villages all over the country they came. An overwhelming stream of bookings by telephone, by wire and by mail. A torrent, a sweeping avalanche of appreciation never before equalled. And all because Exhibitors KNOW that

When the Universal does it, it's BIG.
When the Universal says it, it's SO.

We urge those who have not kept in touch with the big doings in the moving picture field to BOOK "THE BLACK BOX" NOW. Tomorrow may be too late. Wire or write your Exchange immediately while there is time

Majestic Advertising Methods Endorsed

(William A. Johnston in the "Motion Picture News")

THE "Majestic" policy of advertising, in my opinion, not only is ethical, but it is mighty good advertising—good for the exhibitor, good for the producing company. I have but one criticism to make of this advertising. I would play up—and continue to—with all the emphasis type can give—the line that reads:

"Majestic and Komic Guide for Exhibitors—in which we aim to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases." EACH "Majestic" advertisement gives the release date and a very brief synopsis of each of the current releases. Then is added a frank criticism, sometimes adverse, as, for instance, "not as well acted or produced, as would be believed for a Majestic."

If these criticisms are always fair, as I assume they are, then this is downright good advertising.

It is not only truthful advertising, but it is clever advertising, because it secures the very best result advertising can accomplish, namely the customer's confidence.

It does great credit to the business acumen and producing ideals of the man who inaugurated it.

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

BOBBY'S BANDIT (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, March 2. A laughable as well as interesting story of the village boy who captured an outlaw, featuring Bobby Feuhrer and "Teddy" Sampson.

HIS RETURN (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Friday, March 5. A pathetic story of a young man's return and his renunciation of the waiting girl of whom he knew himself unworthy. Featuring Miriam Cooper and Elmer Clifton.

MINERVA'S MISSION (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, March 7. A satire on people who think they have special missions in life, featuring Dorothy Gish. Minerva sets out to reform everybody and gets herself into trouble.

BILL GIVES A SMOKER (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, March 7. No. 18 of the Paul West "Bill" stories. This is a story of cigarette smoking that makes a good average number.

A TEMPERANCE LESSON (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, March 9. A comedy featuring Spottiswoode Aitken, showing how a man and his wife came to realize the value of total abstinence in their household.

HER BURIED PAST (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, March 14. A strong dramatic story, not produced quite up to Majestic standard, but holding interest throughout. A girl reporter discovers through a tragedy the secret in a wealthy woman's life and later suppresses the story.

CAUGHT BY THE HANDLE (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, March 14. Fay Tincher in a brand new characterization as the awkward slavey who finally discovers the smuggled diamonds.

The Exclusive Distribution of the One-Reel STAR COMEDIES of World Comedy Stars Film Corporation

After prolonged negotiations with every possible distributing company, Mr. Lewis J. Selznick had no trouble in convincing Mr. Philip Gleichman, President of the World Comedy Stars Film Corp., that this was the greatest, and most thoroughly organized marketing organization that could most advantageously distribute an unusual program like this.

These star features are specially written for such famous stars as

Lew Fields

Now appearing as a star in the "High Cost of Loving," famous for his associations with Weber and Fields, and one of the best known comedians on the stage, who made his debut before the camera in "Old Dutch."

Richard Carle

Now co-starring with Marie Cahill in "90 in the Shade," at the Knickerbocker Theatre, N. Y., formerly star of "The Tenderfoot," and later co-star with Hattie Williams in "The Doll Girl."

Tom Wise

enjoyed in "A Gentleman from Mississippi," and now in "The Song of Songs" at the Eltinge Theatre, New York.

Jeff de Angelis

Star of "Fantana" and "The Beauty Spot"

Kathryn Osterman

Recently starred in "A Persian Garden," and "Piff, Paff, Pouff."

Lulu Glaser

Famous as "Dolly Varden," "The Madcap Duchess," and "Dolly Dollars."

Florence Tempest

The most fascinating boy in vaudeville, noted for her work with "Tempest and Sunshine."

Paula Edwardes

who as "Winsome Winnie" and "The Princess Beggar" is pleasantly remembered.

"THE FIGHT" IN FILMS.

Mr. George W. Lederer gave a private view yesterday afternoon at No. 126 West Forty-sixth street of the result of his first effort as a producer in the motion picture field, a screen version of "The Fight," by Mr. Bayard Veiller. It is in six acts. Mr. Lederer has striven for originality in his production.

The characters speak their lines just as they do on the legitimate stage, the spectators being able to understand from the movement of the lips a great deal that is said. He has insisted upon all being natural, no theatric poses being permitted, and the action is well brought out. Explanatory lines are flashed on the screen just before they are spoken, and the spectator always keeps the thread of the story.

"The Fight" was written for Miss Margaret Wycherly, who appeared in it in the Hudson Theatre last season. The unpleasant features that characterized the theatre production have been eliminated, the play dealing now with the intrigues of professional politicians, hypocritical reformers and the various elements of the vicious world, to prevent the election of a woman candidate for mayor who has promised to sweep clean the town.

Miss Wycherly is featured in conjunction with Mr. John E. Kellerd, and they are ably supported by Miss Katherine La Salle, Mr. Charles Trowbridge, leading juvenile in "Daddy Long-Legs"; Miss Edna Hibbard, Messrs. Albert Gran, "Tim" Cronin, Wilbur C. Hudson and Ernest Carr.

Mr. Lederer is to start the production of another feature film drama at once.

THE BIG EDISON WEEKLY FEATURE

WINSOME, GIFTED MARY FULLER

in the

3-Act Feature, "The Master Mummer"

(Released Monday, March 15—3000 feet)

This feature, splendidly produced for the masterpiece feature service, now cut down to three brilliant reels, is drama intensified. Taken from the absorbing and vivid-action book of that master plotter, E. Phillips Oppenheim, it affords the talented Mary Fuller great opportunities that she rises to with rare emotional power and with compelling sincerity. As the Princess, robbed of her throne, hounded by desperate conspirators and forced into poverty—but finding love—this gripper has a universal appeal.

Mabelle Trunnelle and Edward Earle

in

"For the Man She Loved"

(Released Saturday, March 20—1000 feet)

As the poor girl stenographer whose silent love for her rich employer stops at no sacrifice for his sake, Mabelle Trunnelle, with the sincere naturalness of her art, presents a strikingly true figure with an unfailing sympathetic and suspenseful response. Wholesome yet wholly absorbing in action.

"The Animated Grouch Chaser"

is a warranted laugh getter

By the clever cartoonist, Raoul Barre

It will be released March 17 and 550 feet of it will immediately start chasing away the most confirmed grouch ever hatched. These lively, animated (moving) cartoons are so human-like in funniness but more funny than any mortal ever could be. Try it on yourself and get infected with laughs.

All Edison Films are passed upon by the National Board of Censorship and released through the General Film Co.'s Program.

THE NEW E DRAMAS BOTH HOLD AND PULL

EDWARD EARLE AND BESSIE LEARN

in a remarkable 2-act play

"In the Shadow of Death"

(Released March 19—2000 feet)

This highly dramatic version of Mary Imlay Taylor's story, "Fate and the Pomegranate," is tenseful in the pathetic plight of two young lovers wrapped in the death-grip of circumstantial but damning evidence. The undercurrent of the Parisian world of thievery seethes around them and drags them down to the vortex of ignominious death by the bloody guillotine. Even its simplest scenes hold as do all of Director Ridgely's work when he has such capable emotional exponents as Edward Earle and Bessie Learn to work with.

Yes—Ha! Ha! Here they are—"WADDY AND ARTY" IN

A Double-barreled Bill of Fun

"HER COUNTRY COUSIN"

(Released March 16—1000 feet)

"SEEN THROUGH THE MAKE-UP"

(Released March 17—450 feet)

"ARTY"

"Arty" (Housman) in "Her Country Cousin" is the confoundedest boob that ever blurbed and the ridiculous fun he kicks up in trying to copy the city ways of "Waddy" (Wadsworth) would get a laugh in any language. "Arty" gets "learnt" all right, but Waddy gets burnt.

"Waddy," in "Seen Through the Make-up" seeks a wife whose face will both fry an egg and look like one. His joy frolic with the widow who, though beautiful, would marry him, is a merry fun maker. "Arty's" there, too, with his convulsing foolishness.

"WADDY"

Facts and Comments

IT IS always a delicate matter for an exhiibtor to admonish a patron. Where the proper atmosphere has been obtained a rebuke for objectionable conduct is never necessary, and wherever the exhibitor has failed to create the right atmosphere a rebuke is, in nine cases out of ten, worse than useless. We have seen audiences in poorly managed theaters where the disorderly element had the upper hand and where a riot was imminent at all times. On the other hand we have seen audiences which would have repressed even the slightest manifestation of disorder in the most summary way. There is one sort of nuisance greatly afflicting the exhibitor and the public. We refer to the persons who insist on reading the titles out loud or rather of shouting them at their hapless neighbors. The persons who have this habit are of course without even a pretense of good breeding, and they ought to be dealt with severely either by a warning on a slide or by a vigorous personal remonstrance. A party of film men sat next to one of these pests in a big theater on Broadway. Just as one of the suffering neighbors was searching for a bottle of ammonia a long series of Russian names in a war film brought the offender to a standstill.

FEW of us realize it, but the fact is that we have a great responsibility in providing titles for our pictures. Thousands and tens of thousands learn their English from the screen and they are not all immigrants. Titles are always carefully read and their style and composition are bound to have an influence on the millions who go to motion picture theaters. For these millions the screen is the only dictionary. Where Webster instructs his thousands the screen teaches its tens of thousands. It is plain, therefore, that we should at all times strive for the greatest possible degree of correctness in grammar and accuracy in spelling. Too many of our newspapers, especially the "yellow" brand, descend far below accepted standards and create a language which is full of vulgar words and bad grammar. The screen ought at all times to maintain the purity of the King's English.

THE co-operation of exhibitor and producer is constantly bringing the most desirable results. Years ago the exhibitor was left to his own devices after being furnished with his "show." Then the producers began to help him with "literature" which was good as far as it went. Today, more than one of the great producers has a bureau which makes a specialty of aiding the exhibitor with suggestions and with good advertising matter such as slides, press notices, photos, and often some entirely new ideas for getting the money. The exhibitor encouraged by the spirit which animates the producer, is put on his mettle and the results are most satisfactory both to the producer and to the exhibitor. This spirit of co-operation is growing, we are glad to say.

WE KNEW that the absurdities and perils of censorship would come like a train following folly and here is another striking proof. In Ontario a Catholic Archbishop has appointed a man to watch the motion picture for any features that might be objectionable from a Catholic point of view. The Orangemen of the district are up in arms over this appointment and now want a censor that will judge the pictures from the viewpoint of the Orangemen. Thus the seed of dragon's teeth is growing as it did of old whenever human folly prevailed over reason.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in this issue prints more material which we hope will be of service to the exhibitor in the campaign against censorship We refer also to page 1418 of the last issue dated March 6. We propose to aid in the campaign in the future as we have in the past. There has been no battle against censorship in which THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD was not in the forefront asserting the rights of producer exchangeman and exhibitor. In these columns, in public meetings before legislative committees THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has fought and will fight for what it ardently believes to be the best interests of the entire industry. We are glad to observe that producers, exchangemen and exhibitors are rallying for the support of the position long ago outlined in these columns. The day will come when censorship will no longer be a vital issue, but the day is not near at hand and we will have to present an united and courageous opposition before we can intone the paean of victory.

Truth Crushed to Earth

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE was once a man called Count Cagliostro, no relation of Ananias, nor even second cousin to Baron Munchausen, but he was quite as distinguished in the noble art of lying. He utilized the gifts of science to hurt people rather than to help them, preying upon those whose faith he had enlisted by billboard methods. All the energies of his mind were bent upon getting something for nothing. He did not, like Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford, awaken to a realization that he could have done just as well, if not better, if he had used his talents in lines strictly legitimate—he died ignominiously in prison, universally detested. Sic semper Cagliostro communi consensu. In plain English, instead of bad Latin, common consent would send the modern charlatans the same way, to the betterment of the race. Especially in moving pictures could we get along very well without those who pretend to knowledge, skill and importance they do not possess and prey on a generous public.

Men who are worth while prove it in the unconscious expressions of themselves. They try to help fellow-creatures within their immediate reach and thus become world factors, contributing their little mite to the realization of human hopes. We all realize that false ideas exist in the minds of millions, that the world would be better off at this moment if millions of those minds in Europe were rightly adjusted, but we can do very little as individuals to bring about finer sense of natural justice because of limited fields of influence. What goes on the screen is quite another matter. Audiences should not be shown what is obviously false in characterization and deduction.

We are asked to swallow stuff that would choke a hippopotamus. We are asked to believe that criminals divide their booty near an unshaded window, where any passer-by could look in, that they discuss their plans where they can be easily overheard, that whenever one character has an important communication to make to another they do not take the precaution to make sure they are not overheard—they do not even look around to see if some eavesdropper is listening. Picture characters do not burn up compromising letters and documents—they drop them where they will be most easily found. If a gentleman in good standing is convicted of crime on evidence that would not incriminate an occupant of Hotel de Gink, no intelligent effort to save him, even to get at the motive and find the real criminal. He will change his dress suit for the stripes unless the real villain opportunely dies confessing the deed.

Though most of us would prefer to construct foundations of intelligence for the next generation to stand upon, there are plenty of Cagliostros left, men who care nothing about misrepresentation so long as it brings in a little money, but it is possible for the best element in production to sharply scrutinize screen stories before they are enacted in the studio. They might refuse to sanction what is false, just as they would refuse the stamp of approval to any legislative act opposed to the best interests of our people. These screen visualizations enable us to make truth so attractive and error so repulsive that releases seen by millions will take on tremendous social value. With truth ever beckoning to higher planes of enlightenment, why permit the widespread circulation of what is false and misleading in this splendid new art of expression.

Day after day moving picture audiences are called upon to witness the eternal triangle, an old theatrical expedient copied from French plays, in which it is set forth that the cause of married unhappiness is the presence of a lover in the relation. Nearly all of the drawing-room stories and practically all the divorce situations present the triangle complication, varied only by unimportant incidents and reaching a favorable solution only when the child puts papa's hand in mama's hand and they embrace.

All very well as an occasional dish, but wearisome as a regular diet. A close second is mama's flights in society and papa's selfish devotion to business. Now why not ask writers to give us stories portraying the true reasons of misunderstanding in married life? Such a course would furnish abundant comedy as well as some intense dramas, and the plays would have that holding fascination always endowed by truth. There are thousands of interesting stories bearing on disagreement or unsuitability among husbands and wives, from a hundred different viewpoints, which would be far more satisfactory than the infernal triangle. It ought to be barred for a while.

Then there is the painted actor from Los Angeles or from Lobster Square impersonating an Indian. It is useless to idealize that degraded specimen of humanity. Use redmen as Ince does, real Indians, in portrayals of their savagery. It is almost as disgusting to see a sweet white girl made up as one of these copper-faced aborigines. There is nothing truthful about the representation and it is so obviously false as to sicken intelligent people in an audience when it does not excite derision. If there is to be any realism express it in characterization. Show people as they actually are in all the acts of their lives. That gives a story the vigor of plain truth.

There is nothing more inane in the pictured story than a forced situation. We have a young and inexperienced girl set out to discover a crime. She changes her clothes—that is all she really does—and walks straight to a tough resort and sits down at a table next to one where the criminal is nervously reading an account of his deed in the morning paper. We have the author who becomes famous a few weeks after submitting his novel to the publisher. We have the prospector strike gold and become a millionaire before it is satisfactorily determined that he has found a true vein or merely a "pocket." Most of us have to struggle for years to accomplish anything and nearly every inch of that struggle is strewn with difficulties. The solution of problems by rational methods, the subjugation of difficulties by courage and intelligence, constitute one of the strongest attractions of a play. Bar out the impossible and a good deal else that is a strain upon our powers of belief.

I would eliminate all plays that beg the question. Once a problem is presented, it must be solved by natural methods, excepting always farce comedy. Stories which assume an order of things far removed from the realms of physical reality should be, at least, logically faithful in their assumptions. Above all things the photodrama should place within the reach of human nature the best that human nature is capable of producing. We have come a long way out of the gloomy darkness of error into the bright encouragement of trtuh, but there is still a journey before us, and moving pictures should not set false and misleading lights on our course.

The Philadelphia Plan

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE organized exhibitors of Philadelphia deserve no little credit for starting a novel and most effective plan to win the support of the public in the fight against censorship.

For an account of their mass meeting and entertainment we refer the reader to the news columns of The Moving Picture World. We think it well, however to outline a few general rules which might with profit be observed in other cities where similar entertainments and mass meetings are to be held.

In the first place it seems to us that the entertainment which is offered as an inducement to the public to come and attend the meeting ought to be as near to perfection as possible. There should be at least one rehearsal. In most cases two, or even three, rehearsals would be better. Particular attention should be given to the kind of program offered on such an occasion. An ordinary motion picture program will not be half as effective as a program selected with special reference to the objects and purposes of the meeting.

Let us remember that the object is to win the public support in the fight against censorship. We must, therefore, show pictures which emphasize in a peculiarly emphatic manner the power of expression which resides in the screen. The main part of the program, therefore, ought to be serious and full of moral and dramatic power. If we can get a picture which advocates some great social reform and advocates it skilfully. we ought to give the preference to such a picture. The Philadelphia exhibitors most wisely selected the striking Vitagraph feature "The Silent Plea." A picture of this kind and quality shows for what noble purposes the screen can be used, and is in itself the strongst kind of an argument against censorship. I do not say that there are no other pictures which may not serve the same purpose. I remember Edison pictures dealing with social reforms and Universal pictures dealing with similar suitable themes The Vitagraph Company donated the use of the picture and I have no doubt that it will entertain other applications. In fact, the exhibitors may be assured of the advice and co-operation of the producers, who no doubt will be able to make many good suggestions for the program and who will be found willing to donate the pictures for this particular use. A fine scenic picture, preferably colored, ought to be on such a program without fail. The market abounds in fine subjects of this character, and there is scarcely an exhibitor who does not immediately recall some particular splendid picture of this sort which has lingered in his memory. The comedy, which is as important as the rest of the program must, above all things, be absolutely clean and free from even the faintest suggestion of vulgarity.

Not enough stress can be laid on the importance of music. It is ridiculous to think of offering just a piano. The music ought to consist of at least a modest orchestra, and it ought to be thoroughly rehearsed. Too much attention cannot be paid to the light and the projection It seems strange that on so many important occasions the matter of projection is largely left to take care of itself. It often happens that a meeting of the kind we have in mind cannot be held in a regular motion picture theater, and that no booth is available and wiring, etc., has to be attended to in every detail. All these facts should be carefully noted and acted upon by the committee in charge of the entertainment. If the entertainment is to take place at two o'clock, it is foolish to expect a smooth performance if the operator does not begin to try out his light and examine his reels until one-thirty. None but thoroughly competent and excuse-proof operators should be employed. The most beautiful excuse will not help in "delivering the goods."

Another thing that should receive the most careful attention of the committee is the decoration of the stage and the environment of the screen. A small sum will be found sufficient to buy enough flowers and decorations. Here, too, a competent man of acknowledged taste and experience should be employed. The object of the entertainment is to please the public, to put them in good humor and make them well disposed toward the speakers. It is an ancient rule of oratory that the speaker must win his audience in his opening. The old Romans used to call this the "captatio benevolentiae." There is no "captatio benevolentiae" comparable to a good entertainment.

It is well not to overload the program with speakers. Pictures and speeches should follow each other according to a well-arranged and well-tried plan. Three speakers are enough. If they know what they want to say the audience will give them the needful attention It would be well to have programs printed and distributed, showing the sequence of pictures and speeches.

There is one thing which the speakers will do well to remember. As a rule a man who has become absorbed in a subject and who has viewed it from every angle, is apt to forget that his audience may not know even the first principles of the subject. Now, the safe way is to assume that your audience knows nothing about censorship. Before they can appreciate your arguments against censorship you must be sure that they understand what censorship is. Do not hesitate, therefore, to go into the first principles of the subject and explain what is meant by censorship. The simpler and plainer your definition is the better your audience will follow you. Stick to elementary things. The most beautiful flight of oratory will be wasted on the desert air if your auditors have only the vaguest notion of what you are talking about. Go along the line of least resistance. It is well to have at least one speaker of local prominence. If you can get all local speakers so much the better. People always listen with more attention to a man whom they know.

You will reap but a part of the benefits of such a mass meeting and entertainment if you fail to get your proper share of publicity in the daily press. The Philadelphia affair, successful as it was, had no regular publicity man, but it received ample notice in every Philadelphia daily. The way to get to the people and lay your grievances before them is through the platform and through the press. It is also suggested that a set of strong anti-censorship resolutions be ready and submitted to the meeting for approval at the end of the performance. The Moving Picture World has good literature for anti-censorship meetings which may be distributed among the audience and which they can take home for a more careful reading. This literature will be sent on application to any exhibitor who cares to ask for it.

Let us remember, too, that some good results will follow from such meetings immediately even if censorship is not killed outright. The public likes to become acquainted with the motion picture and all its connections. They will go away with more respect and more affection for this form of entertainment. You are planting a seed that in nine cases out of ten will bear fruit

How to Fight Censorship

What the Exhibitor is Able to Do With a View to Educating the Public on the Meaning and the Evils of Censorship—Some Suggestions for Publication in Local Newspapers—Subjects for Slides

By W. Stephen Bush.

NOW that exhibitors are taking up the question of fighting censorship with so much energy and determination, The Moving Picture World desires to aid them in every way possible. We think that much good may result from a judicious distribution of the article in our last issue entitled, "The True Catechism of Censorship" and printed on page 1418 of that issue.

We note with great satisfaction that the press is beginning to grasp the danger of censorship as far as its own welfare is concerned. We have always pointed out that censorship of motion pictures is an entering wedge for the curtailment of the freedom of expression in general. It is therefore suggested that the exhibitors strive to gain the active cooperation of the press in their respective localities. This may be done by sending items to the papers specially dwelling on the menace of censorship to the press.

Let us give the readers an example of how an intelligent campaign against censorship will at once enlist the aid of the press. The great mass meeting of protest held recently in Philadelphia and reported in this issue, was fully and sympathetically reported in the daily papers. Now comes one of the oldest and influential Philadelphia newspapers, The Evening Telegraph, and comments on the question editorially in the following concise and forceful article, which we reprint verbatim:

WHY THIS CENSOR?

Why should a special department to censor moving pictures be supported by this State? If such censorship is necessary why are not ordinary theaters, and even newspapers, subject to special censorship?

Between the public and improper films there stands always the common law. This authority may be invoked at any time and by any person who questions the propriety of a picture. Americans possess an instinctive hostility toward censorships which has kept the press and the platform free. Why are motion pictures held in a special class?

This short and pithy comment would probably never have been published if the mass meeting of exhibitors had not made a public issue of censorship and called the general attention to the subject. We hope to see this article reprinted on as many programs in Pennsylvania and Ohio as possible.

It would be a practical step toward the eventual abolition of censorship if exhibitors everywhere enlighten their patrons on the evils of censorship and supply to the press such articles as will most probably be published. We, therefore, print here four paragraphs or articles on censorship containing special references to the danger which threatens the freedo mof the press.

"The motion picture is the most powerful medium of expression through which knowledge or amusement may be conveyed to the human mind. It is more direct than the alphabet. Being such a valuable medium of expression it ought to be free like the press. We do not confound liberty with license. The men behind the picture want the same legal status which is accorded to the press: liberty, with law and order. Regulation of the motion picture ought not to go one inch further than regulation of the press. This means the picture ought to be free from previous restraint, but held fully accountable for any abuse of its liberty."

Another paragraph of about equal length and likely to find a place in the daily press is this:

"The late Mayor Gaynor of New York, one of the most learned jurists in the history of America, said that in all his researches he had been unable to find an American statute, whether Federal or State, which even attempted to abridge the liberty of the press. He attributed this remarkable fact to the inborn American repugnance to interfere with the press in the lawful and useful exercise of its functions. Americans do not believe that the press is infallible or impeccable, but they have found out in the course of two centuries that with all its evils it is the most powerful agency for the preservation of our political freedom. Why does not the same rule apply to motion pictures, which are the most powerful medium of expression known in the history of mankind."

We subjoin another and somewhat longer article:

"Censorship of any kind, whether applied to newspapers or to motion pictures or to the stage, runs counter to all the traditions of the American people. It took nearly two hundred years to establish the freedom of the press. There was a time when the Government of Great Britain demanded to see and know and to control all printed matter of any kind. Printing presses could only be maintained by the express permission of the government. The first voice raised in favor of unlicensed printing was the voice of John Milton, who pointed out that censorship of any kind was incompatible with the freedom of the State and the liberties of the people. He called it an 'engine of oppression and tyranny, which could never accomplish any good under any circumstances.' The 'licensing' of papers and printing shops continued, however, for pretty nearly a century after Milton's immortal plea. The freedom of the press was fully established and vindicated in the colonies a decade or so before it came to pass in the mother country. Censorship for the press is, or at least seems, impossible in this country to-day, but it is true nevertheless that the 'price of liberty is eternal vigilance.' If the doctrine is upheld that motion pictures must be submitted to the police or other state or local officials it may prove an entering wedge to abridge the liberty of the press. Russia is to-day imposing a censorship upon the press and it makes no distinction as to any other medium of expression. Every newspaper and every picture must have the stamped approval of the Czar before the subjects are permitted to read it."

We add a fourth article, somewhat longer. The idea is to offer articles of varying length. If the long article is rejected the short one may be acceptable:

"A great danger which confronts the freedom of the press and the platform is the doctrine that the state has the right to control in advance every public expression of opinion, etc. Agitation for censorship of motion pictures may lead to just such a result. The American way is to let the people enjoy the utmost freedom of discussion. Open and unrestricted discussion leads to the best and strongest action. Now there is no finer forum for discussion than the motion picture screen. We are too apt to think of the motion picture as just an amusement. The motion picture is far more than a mere form of entertainment. It may and it often has been used as a means to advocate important social reforms or to show the evil consequences of social abuses. Recently the so-called motion picture censors of Ohio condemned a picture, not because it was immoral or obscene or because it tended to corrupt the young, but because it showed a wealthy employer of labor stinting his employees and giving largely to well advertised charities. Surely that was a legitimate subject for a play or a screen performance. We may disagree with the idea of the author. In that case the screen is open to us on equal terms to show our side and to refute him. That would be the American way. In Ohio this play fully allowed in every other state, was summarily suppressed because, forsooth, 'it encouraged class hatred,' according to the view of a lady censor. The vesting of such tremendous arbitrary power in the hands of one or two individuals is repugnant to the spirit of our laws, and our traditions. If indecent or immoral pictures are shown the law now on the statute books is quite sufficient to deal with the evil. Two men who showed so-called 'white slave' films in New York were indicted, arrested and tried before a jury. The jury looked at the picture and found the men guilty of an indecent exhibition, which is a misdemeanor at common law in every state in the Union. The pictures are under the constant supervision of millions of patrons who take their wives and children to their favorite motion picture theatre. That is all the supervision necessary. A warrant for the showing of an unlawful picture can be sworn out by any one."

We suggest that these articles be offered for publication in the local papers. They might also profitably be printed either wholly or in part in the programs which are distributed to the patrons.

The Moving Picture World will soon be ready to distribute anti-censorship slides at cost, probably in a week. Slides of course can be had anywhere almost, and we hope that exhibitors will have their own slides made wherever facilities for doing so exist. In the meantime we offer another set of anti-censorship slides which are subjoined herewith:

If you want to get the "meat" of the censorship question and find out just what it means to you as a friend of the pictures and as an American citizen, ask for the pamphlet, free at the door.

If you believe in the motion picture and its free development, write to your legislators to vote against censorship.

Do you realize that the Moving Picture is the entertainment of the People? Why should the amusements of the people be restricted?

Censorship means Inquisition. Americans want no Inquisition. Vote against Moving Picture Censorship.

In Russia the government prescribes the amusements of the people, American freemen are their own judges. Why go backwards and permit censorship?

Public opinion favors laws against bad pictures but it abhors the tyranny of censorship.

Censorship places the motion picture industry with its big investment and its vast army of employees at the mercy of cranks and politicians.

Of all amusements the motion picture is closest to the people. The people watch over its morality and they need no salaried politicians or censors to tell them which is which.

The present law is ample to deal with objectionable pictures in every town, city or state. Censorship is an unnecessary burden upon the taxpayers.

Pictures are the best way of expressing thought. They were here before the alphabet. They are the most direct way of reaching and teaching the mind. Why hamper the picture with censorship?

Objectionable Publicity

Motion Picture Man Characterizes Article in Saturday Evening Post as Injurious to Business.

A RECENT issue of the Saturday Evening Post—the one published in Philadelphia by the Curtis Publishing Company—contained an article on the motion picture business under the signature of William A. Brady, a New York theatrical manager of some standing. While all good publicity men in the picture business agree that Mr. Brady put over a good story for the World Film Corporation, with which he is affiliated, they have little else than criticism for the publishers of the Saturday Evening Post for printing so many erroneous statements regarding the motion picture business. The Moving Picture World has it from reliable sources that the publishers of the Philadelphia weekly have been deluged with letters of protest from the motion picture trade and are said to be trying to "square" themselves for the evident "slip-up" on their part.

How the article in question impressed the members of the motion picture trade is shown in a leter to the Moving Picture World by Herbert C. Hoagland, of the Selig Company, which we print in full:

Chicago, Ill., Feb. 24, 1915.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City.

Dear Sir:—Will you permit me space in the valuable columns of your publication to call attention to a new annoyance that must be born by the long-suffering manufacturers of Motion Pictures? Not only are the business men, engaged in a great and important industry, badgered by special taxes, state and local censors, reformers, so-called, etc., but great injury is also given to their business by the misleading articles and stories that are appearing more and more frequently in the magazines and other publications.

It seems that the higher classed the publication, the more ready and willing is the editor thereof to accept and pay for at highest rates the work of some writer, who, with superficial knowledge of the film game, nevertheless takes his pen in hand and dashes off a page or two of the "inside history" of the motion picture art.

The American people have been given the false conception by such articles that every motion picture manufacturer is rolling in wealth; and "millionaires made over night" is a most common and favorite expression. It should be stated here that motion picture manufacturers of the better class are business men who worked onward and upward and builded their industries after the manner followed by any other line of trade. Few of them are millionaires and one manufacturer reputed to have made a million dollars in eight years, has been in the motion picture game for nearly twenty years.

Articles purporting to present facts as to the wonderful prosperity to be uncovered in the motion picture industry are not only misleading, but they tempt the unwary to invest in stock promotion schemes. Many have invested their savings in some "wild cat" concern only to lose their money.

A recent article in the Saturday Evening Post has created amusement among those who have long been affiliated in the motion picture industry. Here are a few pearls:

"* * * One can do in pantomime in a foot or so of film more than he could do in ten minutes if his characters talked." (That is to say, allowing 150 minutes of actual open stage to an average play, all the business of that play could be put over in fifteen or thirty feet of film!)

To quote again: "Until then (eighteen months ago) none of the stars of the American stage, no good writers, and not any of the better plays had been exploited. * * * The one-reel comedies and two-reel plays of the professional picture playwriter have small vogue today, though some of the smaller houses still stick to them."

Another statement: "* * * Apart from the aforesaid feature companies are * * * and the Lubin Company. These companies have ceased producing short films and are now doing features."

Again: "* * * The General and Universal Film Companies have also dropped the shorter film and entered the feature field."

And finally: "* * * The vogue of the old moving picture actor has gone. His place has been taken by such favorites as Ethel Barrymore. * * *"

In view of the wide circulation of the Post, we think such statements are injurious to the film companies. The General Film Company has not dropped the short film. The Selig Company, not only produces special features known throughout the civilized world, but we also specialize in one and two reel pictureplays. There will always be a demand for the shorter length releases of worth, for they add variety to the programs. Eighteen months ago, many elaborate productions had been produced, including stage plays. The professional writer of motion pictures never enjoyed the prosperity that he does today. When the playwrights of the legitimate stage, the novelists, and the short fiction writers submit work, in nine times out of ten, it must be put in shape by the "professional moving picture 'playwriter,'" so-called. There is also a great demand for his original work.

The vogue for the "old" moving picture actor is decidedly not gone. What actor or actress who today enters the motion picture work can claim popularity with Kathlyn Williams, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Stella Razeto, Maurice Costello, Crane Wilbur, Arthur Johnson, Francis Bushman and half a hundred other motion picture players?

The Lubin Company and the Universal Company have not dropped shorter film, but rather specialize in releases of one and two reels.

There are many axes to grind in any profession, but it ill behooves editors of standard publications to be deceived by the incorrect, misleading and frequently unjust statements of those writers who are in no position to speak authoritatively of the great profession of motion pictures.

Yours very truly,

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY,
Per H. C. HOAGLAND.

Felix Malitz-Pathe Guiding Spirit

FELIX MALITZ, vice-president and managing director of Pathe Freres and the Pathe Exchange, Inc., was seen the other day at the fine new offices of the Pathe organization at 25 West 45th street, New York, and asked to make a brief biographical statement for the benefit of our readers. Mr. Malitz was modestly disinclined to talk about himself, but the following was learned from some of his associates:

He was born in Brandenburg, Germany, January 10, 1876, and received his education in the famous "Gymnasium Zum Grauen Kloster," where Bismarck was a student. He early became identified with French business life and for twelve years was the managing director of a very large French company. His chosen field was the organization and direction of a large force of salesmen and other employees, and he is recognized as an expert in that field.

Felix Malitz.

The value of Mr. Malitz' services to the houses he was identified with is proven by the fact that repeatedly after he left them and at long intervals apart efforts were made to bring him back, surely the sincerest form of praise.

Under his direction the Pathe American business has been put upon a scientific basis of commercial efficiency, and his ideas have already borne fruit in a largely increased business.

VITAGRAPH TO SHOW EXPOSITION PICTURES.

At a private showing before the public commissioners and other public officers, the Vitagraph Company will present the following program at the Vitagraph Theatre, 44th Street and Broadway, Sunday morning, March 14, at 10 o'clock: "Park Honeymooners," "Children's School Farm," "Public School Athletic League," "Young Engineer," "Human Cauldron," "Fire Fighters," "Sonny Jim at the Mardi Gras," "John Jay Park and Scenes in Prospect Park," "Historical New York," or "The Matchmaking Professor," "The Locked Door," "Board of Education."

These are the films made by the Vitagraph Company for exhibition at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco, Cal.

David Horsley's Big Plans

Pioneer Producer on Way to Los Angeles to Open New Studio for His Productions.

DAVID HORSLEY left New York Thursday, March 4, for Los Angeles, where he will personally direct the work of laying out new studios for his productions. Mr. Horsley has evolved a brand new idea in studio construction, highly original, and fraught with possibilities heretofore undreamed of by the men behind the camera. Regarding his trip Mr. Horsley said:

"I have some wonderful advantages on my side now, and I'm going to put everyone of them to work with a view to making my films the most unusual and desirable pictures on the market. In the first place, I have a long lease on a plot of ground nearly six blocks square right in the heart of Los Angeles. Properties of all sorts, and city scenes of most any description are right outside my gates. Next I have the world famous Bostock Animals, unquestionably the most highly trained and select specimens in captivity. The twelve original trainers whom Bostock acquired in various corners of the earth, including Captain Bonavita, the king of all lion tamers, and Harry E. Tudor, who has managed the wonderful outfit for the last twelve years, are all under contract to me and now with the animals, which are already established as an independent show enterprise on my Los Angeles studio property. Then comes my new Duplex Double Exposure Camera which permits of trick work and double exposure photography such as have never before been possible with other cameras invented up to this time. Some enthusiastic director who saw this device in operation called it "the Wonder Box"—well, it certainly does work wonders, if I may with modesty say so myself. Why, I can put over some performances between animals and human actors that will cause an audience to sit up and gasp. And all this highly mystifying and seemingly perilous action, through the use of the trick camera, becomes a hundred times more safe and simple than picture making under the methods now necessarily practiced by the producers of animal films. In addition to this, my camera saves no end of time for the director. The possibilities for comedy production along brand new lines are almost beyond calculation. All scenarios must be constructed especially to fit this camera, and consequently I have had to devise an entirely different style of studio.

"The plans which I have just perfected call for an arrangement totally different from any now in use. My long association with the producing side of motion pictures has taught me the weaknesses and drawbacks of the average studio, and I have been able to overcome these in my new layout and to effect a great economy of time and space."

Mr. Horsley expects to have his new studio finished and to start his new productions in them within six weeks from date. His plans call for an outdoor Jungle allowing seven different sets and including an artificial brook, waterfall and lake. The interior studio is to be so arranged that six duplex sets can be set up in rotation, with the camera mounted in the centre on a rock steady, automatically adjusted pedestal, with the foregrounds, lens angles, focal depths, etc., all diagramed and laid out. The director is thus enabled to work in rotation without the loss of a moment for the setting or resetting of scenes. Clever mechanical traps permit the entrance of any kind of animal at any part of a scene at the required instance, both in the Jungle and interior sets, with covered passage ways connecting the arena and dens of the animals in their permanent quarters in the Bostock Arena which adjoins the studios. A bridge which may be dressed in any style from rustic to bascule, for use in scenes, will be used for the safe passage of the people ensconsed in the productions. Elaborate scene docks, dressing rooms, laboratories and office buildings will form the boundaries of the Court.

Mrs. Horsley and their two children, Stanley and John, the latter having earned the title of "youngest film star" by appearing in a special picture last October at the age of seven days, accompanied Mr. Horsley to California. They expect to be away about two months.

GLADYS HANSON AND WALTER HITCHCOCK IN "THE CLIMBERS."

Miss Gladys Hanson recently arrived at the Lubin studio in Philadelphia. She will be starred in Clyde Fitch's "The Climbers" under the direction of Barry O'Neil. Walter Hitchcock, who has been leading man for some of the best known stars in the country, will play one of the principal parts in this photoplay, the scenario of which was made by Clay M. Greene.

Big Send-Off for Laemmle

Universal Employes Will Wave Flags in Grand Central As Party Begins Its Journey to Universal City.

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Manufacturing Company, is to be given a hearty send-off by Universal players and officers of the company when, on March 5, he with a large party takes the train for the transcontinental trip to formally open "Universal City," of which he is the founder and which is to be exclusively devoted to the making of motion pictures. There will be a procession with a band down Broadway from the head offices, 1600 Broadway, to the station. The faces of Mr. Laemmle and his players are so well known that few indeed who see the string of automobiles pass will need to ask what is going on.

Among those who are to leave with Mr. Laemmle are Mrs. Laemmle, their two children and maid; Louis Laemmle, his brother; F. Schrader; P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal; Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Hoffman; Hy Mayer, the cartoonist; Homer Croy, the humorist, and Mrs. Croy; M. Fishel; Mr. Milton I. D. Einstein; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wolf; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Grau; and George Magee.

The party is due to arrive in Chicago Saturday and on Sunday evening they will board the Universal Special, a train which has been chartered by the Universal and will pull out of the Dearborn Street Station over the Santa Fe route at 6 o'clock.

This train will consist of four Pullmans and a dining-car and the Laemmle party will be increased by a large number of moving picture exchange men and exhibitors, newspaper men and representatives of the Universal scattered throughout the middle west.

Bookings have been reserved on this train for over two hundred of the leading moving picture men of the country, among whom are: C. D. Mattingly, Oklahoma City; R. C. Cropper, Kansas City; W. J. Page, Cincinnati; C. Hague, Toronto, Canada; E. F. Dardine, Charlotte, N. C.; W. A. Paterson, Chicago; J. Schnitzer, Indianapolis; C. A. Clegg, Calgary; Mr. Metzger, Portland, Ore.; A. F. Beck, St. Louis; A. A. Schmidt, Buffalo; J. A. Eslow, Boston; Witt Cochrane, Chicago; Mr. Hopkins, Buffalo; Mr. Thompson, Cleveland; Mr. Lux, Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. N. Depinet, Dallas, Tex.; Mr. and Mrs. Van Husen, Omaha, Neb.; Mr. and Mrs. Bryson, Minneapolis, Minn.; Mr. and Mrs. Carrick, Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Swaab, Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Johnson, New York City; Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Mock, Chicago; Messrs. Plough & Flaherty, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Lederman, Des Moines, Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. George Weegs, Detroit, Mich.; Mr. Oldknow, Atlanta, Ga.; Mr. and Mrs. Fitchenberg, New Orleans, La.; N. F. Brentlinger, Indianapolis, Ind.; and P. J. Morgan, Cleveland.

On Monday the Universal Special is due to arrive at Kansas City and will leave that city at 9.10 in the morning for Denver, where they are scheduled to arrive at 10 o'clock on Tuesday morning. At Denver they will be met by the mayor and other city officials and will be entertained by them until evening when they will once again board the special and start for Grand Canyon at 7.45 o'clock. They are due to arrive at Grand Canyon at 3.40 Thursday afternoon and will remain there for twenty-four hours viewing the grand sights of the Grand Canyon, leaving again Friday evening for Los Angeles.

The party will rest from their long trip on Sunday, the 14th, and on the following Monday amid the blaring of trumpets, playing of bands and flying of banners President Laemmle, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon will officially open the first and only municipality of its kind in the world.

BEYFUSS COMING EAST.

Alex. E. Beyfuss, general manager of the California Motion Picture Corporation, is expected to arrive in New York City in the near future to conclude some important negotiations in the interests of his company. The California Corporation's next feature-production, "Lily of Poverty Flat," based on Bret Harte's famous poems, will be released on the World Film program during the month of April, and is expected to equal, if not to surpass, the same producer's initial effort, "Salomy Jane."

AUGUSTUS CARNEY WITH MUTUAL.

Augustus Carney, perhaps better known as "Alkali Ike," is now a member of the Mutual Hollywood studios.

He will appear in comedy roles in forthcoming Reliance and Majestic photoplays.

Before joining the Mutual ranks, Augustus Carney worked in Essanay and Universal pictures.

Big Doings With Bosworth

West Coast Producers Double Ground Space—Secure Oscar Apfel and Obtain Contracts for New Stars and Plays.

IT was announced the early part of this week by Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Vice-Special Representative of Bosworth, Inc., at the company's New York offices, that extensive improvements affecting this concern's future output are in the course of preparation and that several new and important plans are now being perfected.

Deeds were passed on Saturday, February 27th, whereby the concern doubles its ground space and a large force of laborers, workmen and mechanics are now busily engaged in making additions to the present plant. Building permits have also been issued for additional store rooms, scene docks, paint frames, etc., and a new stage measuring sixty by ninety feet has just been completed.

On Monday, March 1st, Oliver Morosco returned to the studios bringing with him several new contracts covering the motion picture rights on new plays and stars and work will immediately be taken up in preparation for the production of these additional acquisitions about which more will be announced in the near future.

Oscar Apfel, for the past year associated with the Lasky studios and who has been directly responsible for the production of such successes as "The Squawman," "The Master Mind," "The Circus Man," "The Ghost Breaker" and "Cameo Kirby," joined the Bosworth producing forces on March 4th. Mr. Apfel was formerly director for Pathe, Reliance, Majestic and Edison Companies, and has met with great success in the production of big subjects for Lasky since his affiliation with that company a little over a year ago. Bosworth, Inc., is to be congratulated on the acquisition of such an able film producer and with such stars and plays at his disposal as Bosworth, Inc., are obtaining, big things are to be expected as a result of this combine.

Bosworth, Inc., has shown great activity since its association, several months ago, with Oliver Morosco, the well known theatrical producer, who now heads the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and many important announcements have emanated from the officers of this organization, including those of contracts with such stars as Elsie Janis, Maclyn Arbuckle, Fritzi Scheff, Dustin Farnum and other theatrical people of equal prominence, as well as the acquiring of motion picture rights to many recent triumphs of the legitimate stage. The work of production has been going on with ever increasing magnitude during the past few months with the result that despite frequent additions, the premises have been found entirely too small to accommodate the activities of the concern. With the area of the plant now doubled, the producers will be able to take care of the increased volume of work in connection with the fulfillment of the new plans.

Owing to the heavy strain of work caused by the many recent releases, the doctors have ordered Hobart Bosworth to take a complete rest. He will take an extended vacation, probably a long sea voyage, and as a consequence may possibly dispose of his financial interest in the firm. In this event there will be no change in the business policy of the company, except to produce more society dramas and well known plays with stars in the leading roles. No more of the western type of drama will be produced.

"HEART OF MARYLAND" IN DEMAND.

Ever since the Tiffany Motion Picture Corporation completed their production of Belasco's famous stage play, "The Heart of Maryland," with Mrs. Leslie Carter in the role she created, and showed the finished picture to a few friends at the Longacre Theatre, there has been an insistent demand from prominent distributing concerns and service corporations trying to procure the rights.

A director of the Tiffany organization has stated that to his knowledge every big distributing concern had made an effort to secure the picture, but that before the Tiffany people would dispose of the rights to any firm, they wanted to investigate and would then, if agreeable terms could be arranged, grant the rights to the distributing organization catering to the largest number of high class exhibitors and with the largest following.

"The Heart of Maryland" was staged at Los Angeles by the Tiffany Motion Picture Corporation under the personal direction of Herbert Brenon and Mrs. Leslie Carter. Numerous big scenes punctuate the six reels. In additions to Mrs. Carter there are several others of the original cast in the production. Before "Heart of Maryland" was staged, other producing companies announced that they had bought the screen rights to the play, but Tiffany and Mrs. Carter proved they had the rights by going right ahead with the staging.

Sing Sing Gets New Projector

Owners of New York's Strand Theater Present Prison with New Simplex Equipment.

SINCE Thomas Mott Osborne has been Warden of Sing Sing Prison much interest has been displayed throughout the country in his work of uplifting the prisoner. The methods adapted by Mr. Osborne are unique and yet matter of fact. Entertainments are now given in the prison chapel for the purpose of broadening and educating the minds of inmates, who attend these entertainments unaccompanied by guards.

The inmates, of course, look forward with much pleasure to these shows, and an entertainment committee has been appointed who make up the various programs.

Moving pictures are the favorite form of entertainment, and it is declared by officials at the prison that the inmates learn more from the great variety of subjects shown on the screen than they possibly could by other form of instruction. The majority of the inmates do not care to read books, and there are also a great number of foreigners who are unable to read the English language. The moving pictures therefore in connection with the lessons given the inmates at school have great educational value.

The owners of the Strand Theater have sent film subjects to the prison from time to time and learned that they have had much trouble with the moving picture machine. Accordingly, Max Spiegel, secretary of the Mark Strand Theater Company, sent R. Alfred Jones and J. Victor Wilson, of the Strand's executive staff, to the prison to see if anything could be done to improve the moving picture entertainment there. The managers reported that a new picture machine and full electrical equipment was required. Mr. Spiegel at once ordered a new Simplex machine with full electrical equipment sent to the prison.

When the projector arrived at the prison Mr. Osborne telephoned to the Strand, and S. L. Rothapfel, the managing director, took the Strand's chief operator to the prison and installed the instrument. Mr. Rothapfel will go to the prison and put on the first moving picture show given with the new machine, and he says that it will be done in regular Strand Theater style.

Edison to Have Theater

The Claremont Will Devote One Night Each Week to the Weekly Program.

THE Edison Company has completed arrangements with Manager Fred Dollinger of the Claremont Theatre, 135th Street and Broadway, New York, whereby that theatre will be given over Thursday night of every week to the Edison Company and the complete Edison weekly releases for the week previous will be shown.

The first such night was Thursday, March 4th, and the event was planned as a gala occasion. About twenty of the Edison artists were present. Manager Dollinger advertised the night widely and extended most cordial invitations to all fellow exhibitors to see, at one theatre and on one night, all the releases of the Edison Company for one week.

The following releases, from Wednesday to Friday, were shown: "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," 2,000 feet; "The Experiment," a drama, 1,000 feet; "In Spite of All," the Fiske play, in three reels; "Hypno and Trance," a 1,000-foot Wadsworth and Housman comedy, and "That Heavenly Cook," a 1,000-foot comedy.

Frank McGlynn, who took the part of Lincoln, appeared on the stage in exactly the same position as "Lincoln," in his costume and makeup. The same idea will be followed out with Gertrude McCoy and Robert Conness who take the lead in "In Spite of All."

The Claremont is one of the finest theaters in the Washington Heights section and is of the best type of a well-appointed motion picture theater. It seats 1,500, and is beautifully decorated. Manager Dollinger is one of the most progressive of managers and is enthusiastic that his departure will bring returns and prestige as unusual as the time and thought put into the plan.

KRITERION EXCHANGE OPENED IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Fred S. Meyers, formerly of the Laemmle Film Service, and one of the best known exchange men in the West, has enrolled under the Kriterion banner and has opened his offices in the Palace Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minnesota, under the name of the Minnesota Kriterion Film Exchange. Mr. Meyers is one of those "on-the-go" men, and Kriterion Service is fortunate in securing such an able representative.

"The Birth of a Nation"

The D. W. Griffith Feature Film Company Makes Its Debut With a Most Sensational and Spectacular Production, Dealing with the Civil War and the Period of Reconstruction.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE two outstanding features of Griffith's remarkable production, "The Birth of a Nation," are its controversial spirit (especially obvious in the titles), and the splendor and magnificence of its spectacles. Based in the main on "The Clansman," it breathes the spirit of that well-known book. "The Clansman" was a special plea for the South in the forum of history. The screen-adaptation has made the plea far more passionate and I might say partisan than the book or the play. It is impossible to give the reader a good idea of this production without sketching at least briefly the views and sentiments expressed and sharply emphasized and reiterated by the distinguished author. The very introduction tells us that the South never had a fair record made of its trials in the Reconstruction Period. We are told both in pictures and in titles that African slaves were brought to this country by Northern traders who sold them to the South. Puritan divines blessed the traffic, but when slave trading was no longer profitable to the North the "traders of the seventeenth century became the abolitionists of the nineteenth century."

We next see a typical Northern congregation assembled to hear a sermon. About the platform from which the preacher addresses his audience stands a group of colored children. The preacher takes a young colored boy and passes with him through the congregation. A motherly looking old lady stretches out her arms in sympathy toward the child of the black race, but immediately repulses him with every manifestation of disgust caused by the odor which we must assume the boy carries around with him. Much is then said in titles about "state sovereignty" and we are reminded of what we read in school of Southern statesmen like Calhoun and Toombs and Northern statesmen like Vallandigham.

Allegorical Scene Illustrating the Horrors of War (Griffith).

Mr. Griffith then unfolds a picture of conditions in the South before the Civil War, showing both in titles and pictures that the slaves had easy hours, plenty of time for recreation, comfortable quarters and kind masters. Here a strange and puzzling character is introduced in the person of a man said "to have risen to great prominence in the House of Representatives in 1860." This man, who plays a very prominent part all through the production, is called "Austin Stoneman." The titles make it plain that this is a fictitious name. Stoneman has a daughter who is never allowed to enter his library. The reason for this must be found in the illicit relations between Stoneman and a mulatto woman. The latter is "insulted" by Charles Sumner. She works herself into a fury of passion. Stoneman enters to find her with part of her upper body exposed. The scene ends with Stoneman kissing the mulatto and with this title: "Thus the fatal weakness of one man blights the nation." The man called Stoneman bears a striking facial and physical resemblance to the man who succeeded Lincoln in the presidential chair. The description of him in the titles forbid the belief that he is identical with President Andrew Johnson. He is an altogether mystical and apocryphal personage whose identity remains veiled to the very end.

It would be difficult to overpraise the spectacular part of these reels. Mr. Griffith has given us a sample of what he can do in staging military spectacles in his wonderful picture of "the Battle," released in the summer of 1911. Here he surpasses himself. The march of Sherman from Atlanta to the sea made the audience gasp with wonder and admiration. Nothing more impressive has ever been seen on the screen and I have to refer to "Cabiria" for a standard of comparison. Nor are the war spectacles the only impressive spectacular features. Two of the most wonderful pictures ever seen on the screen are Lincoln, signing the first call for volunteers and the surrender of Lee to Grant at Appomatox. It may be said in passing that a finer impersonation of Lincoln has never been witnessed on any screen or on any stage. The audience was deeply stirred by the inspired portrayal of Lincoln and when it became known that the artist who had given the portrayal was present the audience gave him an impromptu ovation between the first and second part. He lived up to the best of Lincoln traditions both in appearance and in action. The assassination of the martyred president is shown in full detail on the screen. It was a task full of difficulties and one misstep might have proved fatal. The great tragedy is "acted o'er" in the most irreproachable and touching manner.

It must be mentioned too that Mr. Griffith has again shown himself a master in creating and prolonging suspense to the agonizing point. His favorite method of chasing pursued and pursuer through one room after another is still effective and always has the desired effect on the audience. When speaking of the spectacular features of "The Birth of a Nation," I must not forget his treatment of the Ku-Klux Klan. The weird and mystical garb of these defenders of "Aryan race supremacy" has given the director splendid opportunities which he utilized to fullest. When these "crusaders of the South" are seen mounted on superb horses, dashing furiously through field and forest and river to rescue innocent maidens from brutal assault or to punish "wicked Africans," the audience never fails to respond, but applauds while the spectacle lasts.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the photography is exceptionally fine in a production to which Griffith lends his name. He shows a good deal of his renowned skill in working "close-ups," creating many tense and thrilling situations.

The acting is such as might have been expected with a director of the type and power of Griffith. He has the art of bending his intruments to his uses. They work in strictest obedience to his orders and as a result the Griffith idea is always transferred to the screen with a negligible loss of power and directness. Mr. Walthall's performance was particularly fine. This gifted artist invariably succeeds in merging his personality into his part. He might at times have shown a little trace of the grime and the hardship of soldiering. It seemed somewhat improbable that a soldier could look so trim and spick and span after what "the little Colonel" passed through. The parts of Stoneman and Silas Lynch were well taken care of, the old "southron" was a piece of very clever character acting. Not enough praise can be given to the settings, both exterior and interior. Mr. Griffith is justly famous for his ability in these things.

The audience which saw the play at the private exhibition in the Liberty Theater was a most friendly one. It was significant that on more than one occasion during the showing of the films there were hisses mingled with the applause. These hisses were not, of course, directed against the artistic quality of the film. They were evoked by the undisguised appeal to race prejudices. The tendency of the second part is to inflame race hatred. The negroes are shown as horrible brutes, given over to beastly excesses, defiant and criminal in their attitude toward the whites and lusting after white women. Some of the details are plainly morbid and repulsive The film having roused the disgust and hatred of the white against the black to the highest pitch, suggests as a remedy of the racial question the transportation of the negroes to Liberia, which Mr. Griffith assures us was Lincoln's idea.

Scene from "The Birth of a Nation" (Griffith).

Whatever fault might be found with the argumentative spirit found in both the titles and the pictures there can be no question that the appeal to the imagination will carry the picture a good way toward popular success. In the South of course where memories of Reconstruction horrors are still vivid, the picture will have an immense vogue. It is altogether probable that its many fine points will outweigh its disadvantages in every other section of the country.

Griffith Film Scores

"The Birth of a Nation" Is Enthusiastically Received by Capacity Audience at the Liberty Theater.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S much-heralded "The Birth of a Nation," founded on Thomas Dixon's story, "The Clansman," had its initial public presentation in New York at the Liberty Theatre on March third, before a capacity audience, including many listed in the Who's Who of filmdom and a large number of men and women prominent in literary and society circles. No picture presented in New York has been viewed by more exacting spectators and few, if any, have elicited such spontaneous and frequent applause.

D. W. Griffith.

At the close of the first of the two acts into which the production is divided, Mr. Dixon responded to calls for a speech. He said that he considered the picture superior to his book and likewise to his play, staged eight years ago. He declared that no one save the son of a soldier and a Southerner could have made such a picture, and introduced Mr. Griffith as the greatest director in the world.

Mr. Griffith stepped just far enough beyond the wings to be visible from all parts of the house. In a few concise sentences, delivered clearly and with dignity, he said that his aim was to place pictures on a par with the spoken word as a medium for artistic expression appealing to thinking people. He voiced the conviction that important advances are being made in that direction and thanked the audience for the reception being given "The Birth of a Nation."

The first general showing of approval came early in the picture with the depiction of thickly peopled street scenes in a Southern village previous to the war. Then, with the spectacles of towns burning at night, and a succession of battles, some of which were fought by the light of bon-fires, the applause was nearly incessant for a full half hour. In the second act it was evident that the audience felt the grip of the story and sympathized with the work of the Ku Klux Klan battling against negro domination. The dramatic points of the story scored, as did a number of comedy incidents. The audience was quickly moved from suspense to laughter and back again to suspense.

In showing the film, the stage at the Liberty Theatre appeared merely as a black background on which the screen was placed. Mr. Griffith, it is said, refused all suggestions for scenic decorations, holding that attention should not be distracted from the picture. The music on Wednesday evening, supplied by an orchestra, with the occasional singing of popular melodies by a chorus, was well in keeping with the action of the screen and particularly inspiring in the battle scenes. It was composed by Joseph Carl Briel. To lend an appropriate touch to the surroundings as one entered the theater, were men in the uniforms of Union and Confederate soldiers, while the girl ushers were costumed after the fashion of young ladies in the South of 1860.

The dramatic critics of all of the New York daily papers attended the premiere and in almost every instance the picture was reported at length and in glowing terms. H. E. Aitken and Edwin Thanhouser headed the delegation of Mutual officers, directors and actors present, and there was a liberal representation of men prominent in the artistic and business departments of other companies. The demand for seats so far exceeded the supply that hundreds of people were turned away at the box office and behind the loge chairs the line was three deep throughout the evening. As a popular attraction, "The Birth of a Nation" looks like a sensational success.

Hazel Dawn Returns to Famous Players

HAZEL DAWN, who has just returned to New York from her successful starring tour in "The Debutante," in which she has won a phenomenal personal triumph, will return immediately to the management of the Famous Players Film Company, who control her exclusive film services, to appear in an elaborate film version of the famous stage success, "Niobe," by Harry and Edward A. Paulton, the comedy of a Greek statue that comes to life and has a great deal of amusement at the expense of contemporary mortals.

Hazel Dawn.

Maude Odell, the popular actress, who had an important part in "The Debutante," will also appear in the star's support in the film subject.

The humor of the play is derived from the fact that the president of an insurance company brings to his own house, for safekeeping, the precious statue of Niobe, which his company has heavily insured. Electricians wiring the house at the time inadvertently wrap the electric coils about the feet of the statue, and the current passing through the wire brings the statue to life. The perfectly moral president finds himself in a delicate and amusing position in trying to explain to his shocked wife and other members of his household the presence of the scantily clad maid running wildly through his home. All ends well, however, when the owner of the statue calls for Niobe, who, with the assistance of the electricians, returns to her ancient and peaceful condition.

Hazel Dawn made her debut in motion pictures, it will be pleasantly recalled, in "One of Our Girls," a former Famous Players production.

Making Big Battle Scenes

How the Producers of "The Heart of Maryland" Sought Correctness in Details.

A DIRECTOR makes forty-nine scenes without an obvious slip, an anachronism mars the fiftieth scene and unholy is the joy of those who detect it. The discovery produces a comforting glow of superiority, it bears out faith in the sharpness of one's perceptions and is altogether gratifying to self esteem. It is easy to overlook the thought, the pains and the money expended in the making of the forty-nine other scenes.

Probably Herbert Brenon was not guiltless of errors when he directed "The Heart of Maryland," with Mrs. Leslie Carter in the role that she played 3,500 times on the stage. Soon the Tiffany Company will release the picture and then somebody, no doubt, will point out his sins of omission and commission. Meanwhile it is interesting to record a few incidents in the production of this six-reel film. They are worth it.

Imagine that the party, numbering twelve and including Mrs. Carter, Mr. Brenon, William E. Shay and Joseph Mac-

Tiffany Director Brenon Instructing Mrs. Leslie Carter in the Belfry Scene of "The Heart of Maryland."

Donald, has left the special car chartered between Chicago and Los Angeles, and that it has journeyed to the Tiffany ranch, a broad sweep of plains and rolling hills beyond the city limits. A full-fledged church is being erected with real glass windows, a belfry and a bell; for "The Heart of Maryland" without the bell that didn't toll would be something quite different. In due time the church is completed at a cost of $3,000 and utilized as a storage room for uniforms, cameras and the countless appurtenances of a motion picture troupe. Also, in due time it is burned.

Awaiting the actors are nine camera men who have ten weeks of work and three days of active warfare before them. The peaceful fields are broken by lines of trenches in which the soldiers are to lie. There are 600 of them, drawn from the state militia and divided into the armies of the North and the South. Even in the 350 tents for the conflicting forces, there are differences in design, such as existed during the Civil War. Among the cavalry horses gathered from various California cities are fifteen trick horses loaned by the Miller Brothers 101 Ranch. They know how to fall and play dead, and to mount them a like number of trick riders has been engaged.

Commanding the cavalry is Captain Gunn, Major Light of the National Guard is in charge of the infantry, whereas the artillery is under Captain Ford. For a week preceding the battles these officers meet for conferences with Director Brenon and every detail of the campaign is discussed. Tests are made of seven kinds of powder, to learn which produces the most spectacular effect when exploded. Previous to the charge, the soldiers are assembled and the full meaning of the day's action is explained that they may obey commands intelligently.

On the day of the big scenes—a mild Sunday in the middle of December—twelve deputy sheriffs are on the side lines to control a crowd of 10,000 spectators, and in case of accidents, three ambulances with a corps of nurses are within call. The sky is clear, each man knows precisely what he is expected to do and without so much as a sprained anke being suffered by the combatants, two great battles of the Civil War are fought and won and lost. Then a banquet for the men, another for the officers and everybody is ready to call it a day's work.

And these scenes are by no means all of "The Heart of Maryland." During the ten weeks that Mrs. Carter remained in Los Angeles, 24,000 feet of film were photographed, just four times the length of the completed picture. Whether the cameras were focused on rushing troops, a burning church, or merely a simple interior, Director Brenon took the time and spent the money needed to get things right. If you have a fondness for figures, the estimated cost of the production is $100,000. If you want to know whether Mrs. Carter actually clasped the clapper of the bell and swung from the belfry tower, the producers say she did.

PRIOR BROS. WILL OPEN ANOTHER HOUSE.

J. F. Pryor, vice-president, and George W. Prior, secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the Southern Amusement Company, Inc., of Danville, Va., will open another moving picture theater in the new brick building that L. M. Francisco is erecting in that city. It is contemplated that the auditorium will house 640 persons when completed. The dimensions will be 30 by 145 feet. The orchestra instead of being in the conventional pit will be placed upon the stage, surrounded by greenery. The name of the new house will probably be the Paramount. The Southern Amusement Company runs the Bijou and Majestic theaters in Danville and the Bijou in Greensboro, N. C. C. M. Vanstory is president of the company. Upon opening the new house, the company might abandon the use of the Majestic as it does not lend itself so readily to exploitation of moving pictures and is better for legitimate shows.

BLEICH LEASES PEOPLE'S THEATER.

Adding another moving picture theater to his list of photoplay houses, G. A. Bleich, of Owensboro, Ky., has taken a long lease on the People's Theater, a once famous play house in that city. The structure will at once be rehabilitated and converted into a first-class moving picture theater. No name has yet been selected for the place, and it is Mr. Bleich's intention to select one by a voting contest. It is expected that within the next two months or so the renovated theater will be ready for the big business that it is destined to receive under the management of Mr. Bleich. While vaudeville will also be booked, moving pictures will be the main attraction. Besides owning the Empress and the Princess in Owensboro, Mr. Bleich is also the proprietor of the Princess in Henderson, Ky.

EDMUND HAYES TO HEAD OWN FEATURE CO.

Edmund Hayes, the well known vaudeville star, is to head a feature film producing company of his own in the manufacture of five-part comedy films featuring himself and other famous stage comedians whom he has engaged. The first release will be "The Wise Guy," a play he has acted over the American continent for years and one that is known to thousands of theater goers. A well known motion picture director who is now with a big feature company, will produce the pictures under the personal direction of Mr. Hayes, who is backing the venture with his own capital.

"WAS HE A COWARD" (I. S. P. CO.)

The I. S. Plaut Company releases a feature entitled "Was He a Coward" in which Miss Margaret Vale, niece of President Wilson, plays a prominent part. The picture contains a number of thrilling incidents contributed by "Dare Devil" McPhee, who jumps from bridges, cliffs and upon moving railroad trains. These events are shaid to be of a most startling nature. The feature is advertised in this issue of the Moving Picture World.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

PENNSYLVANIA'S PROTEST.

Public Mass Meeting Held in The Forrest Theater at Philadelphia to Agitate for Repeal of Censorship Law—A Fine Entertainment Brought Large Crowds, Which Listened Eagerly to the Speakers on Censorship—Other Meetings are Planned in Various Parts of the State.

A NEW plan of gaining the support and the sympathy of the public in the fight against censorship was carried into effect in Philadelphia when a mass meeting of protest and a motion picture entertainment were held on Friday, Febrary 26, in the Forrest Theater on Broad Street. The Forrest Theater is easily the best known and the most prominent theater in the Quaker City.

Several thousand tickets of invitation had been sent out for the mass meeting which was scheduled for two o'clock in the afternoon. The invitation read as follows:

INVITATION

to attend

FREE EXHIBITION OF MOTION PICTURES

Forrest Theater, Broad and Sansom Sts.

Friday, February 26, 1915, 2 P. M.

The purpose of this Entertainment is to afford the public an opportunity of seeing a high grade motion picture exhibition and hearing noted speakers discuss the law governing the Censorship of Motion Pictures in Pennsylvania.

Before you reach a conclusion as to whether or not you wish to have your constitutional "Right of Freedom of Expression" restrained by law, permit us to give you our side of this most important question.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE,
CHARLES SEGALL, President.

In response to this invitation about two thousand people came to the theater. It was indeed a representative gathering of Philadelphians from all walks of life. A splendid program had been arranged. It was short, but the interest of the public never lagged for an instant.

The proceedings were opened by Charles Segall, the President of the Philadelphia local organization of exhibitors. He bade the spectators a hearty welcome and briefly explained the object of the meeting, which he said was to assert and vindicate the freedom of the screen. He devoted a few minutes to describing the power of the screen, assuring his hearers that the subject of censorship would be handled later in the meeting by competent speakers. He thereupon gave way to the first picture, a two-reel Keystone comedy, which soon had the entire house in high good humor. Everybody was seemingly glad to be there and there were salvos of laughter galore. At the end of the picture Mr. Segall introduced as the first speaker of the afternoon, W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World.

Mr. Bush spoke at some length. He said that the exhibitors not only in Philadelphia but in every other part of the country felt sure of the support of the public in their fight against censorship. He explained what consorship really meant by an illustration. A man, he said under our law had the right to buy type and paper and ink and set up a newspaper office or a printing shop and no person in his senses would ask him to submit the proofs of his articles or his pamphlets to the police or to some other official authority before putting his articles or pamphlets into general circulation. Censorship meant a previous legal restraint. Censorship meant asking permission of the government before publishing a paper or a picture or a book. English-speaking nations have now enjoyed the freedom of the press for more than 150 years and it has worked so well that no man in public life would dare to come forward with a measure to abridge the liberty of the press. There is no difference whatever between the blank films and the blank page in a book or a newspaper. Both were mediums used for expressing thoughts, opinions and ideas. The printing press was used for one medium, photography was used for the other. The comparison was perfect in every way. The men in the moving picture industry asked for no immunities or exemptions from the operation of the laws which regulate and restrict the freedom of expression. The press, though free, is responsible for any abuse of its freedom. Freedom of the press cannot be pleaded in defense where an editor has committed a libel or has printed some lewd, obscene and immoral matter. The motion picture is ready to assume the responsibilities of the press. Indeed, at the present time the motion picture is considered a publication when such a view would be to its disadvantage and it is at the same time denied the privilege extended to publications. The speaker mentioned the case of a man who considered himself damaged because a producing company had published his portrait on the screen without his permission. He recovered a heavy verdict on the ground that the showing of his picture on the screen was a publication just the same as if the screen had been a book or a newspaper. The present law is ample to deal with bad pictures. A couple of promoters who had shown objectionable pictures in a Broadway theater had been arrested and charged with maintaining an immoral exhibition which was an offense at common law. They demanded and received a jury trial, were convicted and sentenced under the existing statutes. Censorship, therefore, is not necessary to vindicate the law. The speaker pointed out the immense arbitrary power which was vested in the man who could open or shut the door of the motion picture theater. He said that this meeing was in no sense a warfare on individuals.

"I readily concede," said the speaker, "that the censors here and in Ohio are actuated by good motives and are entirely above temptation. How do we know that this state of affairs will continue? How do we know that their successors in office will be able to boast the same rugged moral health as the present incumbents of the office? No one can deny that the temptation to abuse such great power is hard to resist. Aside from all this who will stand before you on this platform, put his hand on his heart and say: 'I am so much better than the rest of mankind, so much wiser and so much more enlightened than the rest of mankind. I feel that I can tell the rest of my fellows what is good for them to see and what is not.' I have seen and conversed with all the live American censors and I must say that on first acquaintance they seemed to me to be moulded out of much the same clay as you and I. This law was put on the statute books of this commonwealth without discussion, without even an attempt to consult the interests which are so vitally affected by censorship and all its attendant consequences. It is difficult for me to say that such a noble invention which derives its source from the heavens above and which is providentially destined to spread light and drive away darkness will ever be put under such a galling yoke as censorship. The genius of the American people is against any such interference. We intend to get acquainted with the plain people, with the voters everywhere and we appeal to you as to a jury which has the fate and the progress of the motion picture in its hands."

After Mr. Bush had finished the Vitagraph picture, "The Silent Plea," which the producers had donated for the occasion, was put on the screen. It was not long before the sublime pathos of this feature had begun to grip the audience. They followed the picture with the tensest attention and many a tear was shed when Edith Story so masterfully portrayed the agonies of a mother's soul. Few pictures finish as strongly as this and a wave of electric applause ran through the theater when the climax came.

After this picture Samuel F. Wheeler, former secretary of the League in Philadelphia and the owner of a number of motion picture theaters, spoke against censorship. He criticized the chief censor for his attempt to raise his salary from $1,500 to $4,000 per annum. He said that the liquor interests were opposed to motion pictures for obvious reasons and that these interests were really behind the present law for censoring motion pictures. Mr. Wheeler made many witty sallies at the expense of the chief censor. They were keenly enjoyed by the audience. Mr. Breitinger, the chief censor, had been invited to attend the meeting, but failed to put in an appearance.

Mr. Wheeler was followed by Jacob William Binder, of the National Board of Censors. Mr. Binder explained in detail the workings of his board, which he said represented the highest efficiency in voluntary censorship. The question of passing on pictures, he said, was not left to a few individuals, but was referred to the opinions of advisers, who were taken from every walk of life and whose judgments in nine cases out of ten were really representative of public opinion. Mr. Binder was followed very attentively and frequently interrupted by applause.

The exhibitors state organization, it is understood, proposes to hold similar meetings in other large cities of the commonwealth in the immediate future.

HORSTMANN LEADS FIGHT.

Arousing Massachusetts Exhibitors Against Federal Censorship.—An Example for all Picture Men.

ERNEST H. HORSTMANN, president of the Massachusetts Exhibitors' League, spent two days of last week in New York City, where he was in consultation with Executive Secretary Maguire of the National Board of Censorship regarding the Smith-Hughes Federal Censorship bill, which the National House Committee on Education has reported as favorable.

President Horstmann has displayed great interest in this bill and realizes the dangers that will result from its passage. He has already aroused the Massachusetts exhibitors to voice their protests on the bill to the congressmen from their respective districts. It was Horstmann himself who started this ball rolling when the Olympia Theatres Company of Lynn, of which he is a member, wrote to three members of Congress and have already received replies from them in which they have stated that they will give this bill their consideration. If all exhibitors throughout the country displayed as much interest in the welfare of the motion picture industry as is displayed by the head of the Massachusetts League it is a certainty that the bill for Federal Censorship would meet an ignominious death.

For three years, Mr. Horstmann has led fights in the Massachusetts legislature against bills favoring state and municipal censorship of films. Not once during this entire period has he received the support of the entire body of exhibitors in the Bay State. This work has not only meant a sacrifice of valuable time, but a financial loss as well.

At the present time, President Horstmann is actively engaged in fighting one of the worst censorship bills which has ever been submitted for legislative consideration in his home state. Last year, a large number of bills adverse to the industry were defeated in the Massachusetts legislature only through the efforts of Mr. Horstmann and a few of his associates in the league.

It is men of the Horstmann type that are needed to bring about the defeat of the Smith-Hughes bill. To attain this end all exhibitors should work as a unit. Petty business grievances should be laid aside and all the exhibitors in the Bay State should immediately pledge themselves to give their assistance to Ernest H. Horstmann not only in his fight against state censorship in Massachusetts, but in the country-wide fight against the greatest of all dangers, the Smith-Hughes Federal Censorship bill.

Remember, the National House Committee on Education has reported it favorably.

ST. LOUIS EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE GROWING.

The Theater Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, which was formed in St. Louis recently, has added five new members during the past two weeks, bringing the total up to seventy-five, which is almost one hundred per cent. of the managers of the city. John Gentner, president of the Association, says the affairs of the body are in a healthy and vigorous condition, that every member is taking great interest, and already much good has been accomplished, and many things that will tend to elevate the moving picture business in general will be taken up and pushed vigorously in the near future.

SECRETARY CORY RESIGNS.

W. A. Cory, for some time secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of California, has resigned his position owing to the fact that he has disposed of his interests in both houses formerly conducted by Cory Bros. and is now in the employ of a prominent film exchange. Frank R. McCaulay, vice-president of the San Francisco Local, has been appointed to the position and has assumed his duties. Plans are being made for removing the headquarters of the state and local organization from the Phelan Building early in March to quarters to be chosen shortly.

STARTING THINGS IN CLEVELAND.

Local Exhibitors Propose to Fight Over-Legislation.—Officers Elected.

CLEVELAND exhibitors have taken a direct stand in the problem of over-legislation against the moving picture theatre and have concluded to "put the shoe on the other foot." The latest disaffection between the exhibitors of Ohio and state legislators and city lawmakers appears in a recent order for the abolition of motors from projecting machines of theatres built since 1911.

As a means of ascertaining the attitude of Cleveland's councilmen regarding the motion picture theatre and the legislation that is in store, Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, Local No. 1, at the last meeting, passed a resolution calling upon councilmen to attend an open session for the discussion of the various problems. Each member of the league then agreed to write the councilman in his ward, personally calling upon him to be present.

At the recent state convention of the exhibitors in Columbus they were given to understand in a speech by T. P. Kerns, state inspector of theatres, factories and workshops, that motors were safe and permissible. A few days later the state industrial commission ordered the city building departments of all Ohio cities to enforce laws for the removal of motors in theatres built after building code regulations of 1911. A committee of the Cleveland local sought explanation of the situation at the city building department and were told that even though the state legislature passed an amendment to the building code permitting motors, the city still retains the right of home rule on the question and by act of council can exert police power.

By calling the council in on the situation at the outset the exhibitors feel they will have a perfect understanding of future attitude toward so-called regulation. With election date on the immediate horizon they feel the power of the screen will play a considerable part in making up the next body of local lawmakers.

At the meeting all the incumbent officers of the league were re-elected by acclamation, with the exception of S. H. Bullock as vice-president, to succeed Robert Manchester, Elyria, non-resident member. The roster includes: President, S. E. Morris; vice-president, S. H. Bullock; secretary, Walter H. Horsey; treasurer, Frank N. Kinney. A board of five directors also was named.

The league inaugurated its membership campaign, with the view to making the Cleveland local the largest single body of the kind in the country.

NEW YORK UNITED AT LAST.

All Faction Differences Buried Out of Sight—New Officers Elected—Important Programs Are to Be Worked Out Immediately.

AN IMPORTANT meeting of New York exhibitors took place on Thursday, February 25, at the Candler Theater on Forty-second Street. There had been efforts for a long time past to perfect the New York branches into one strong organization and have this organization be part of the National League. These efforts have now at last culminated in an unqualified success. It all came about at the Candler Theater meeting. At this meeting were represented The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of American, Local No. 1, and the Cinema Club of the Bronx. The call for the meeting had been issued by Adolph Weiss, J. J. Wittman and Maurice L. Fleischman, representing the organizations above named.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Wittman, who briefly stated the objects. After some informal talk the following temporary officers were elected by acclamation: Leo E. Ochs, president; M. Oestreicher, vice-president; Adolph Weiss, secretary, and Philip Rosenson, treasurer. Many of the old officers who had been asked to enter the field refused, saying that they wished new blood in the organization, Several of the speakers expressed the gratitude of the exhibitors for the good work done by such men as Samuel Trigger and William Hilkemeier.

National President Pearce, who had come from Baltimore to be a witness to the good work of amalgamation, then made an address to the exhibitors which was full of good wishes for the future and which was very well received. He said it had long been an ardent desire of his heart to see union and co-operation prevail in New York. He complimented the old officers for the faithful work they had done in the past and then congratulated the united organization on their new officers who he said were all energetic men possessed of a sincere desire to be useful and willing to work hard for the common cause.

A finance committee, composed of three members, one from the Bronx, one from Manhattan, and one from Brooklyn, was then chosen. Messrs. Wittman, Hirsh and Hollender being elected to this committee. On a motion proposed by Mr. Wittman and passed by the meeting, Mr. Ochs, acting in his capacity of president, appointed two exhibitors from each of ther three boroughs to meet and confer with the temporary officers. The representatives appointed are: Messrs. Martineau and Hartstall, for Brooklyn; Goldreyer and Samelson, for the Bronx; Needle and Valensi for Manhattan.

The committee which had been appointed to interview the mayor of the city concerning the ordinances dealing with so-called standees and the question of the admission of children reported that it had been unable to see the mayor, but promised to use its best efforts to get the mayor to either veto the ordinances or to work for their substantial modification before affixing his signature to them. It is believed that the mayor is in sympathy with the exhibitors on this subject. An executive session of the newly elected officers and the specially appointed members from the various boroughs was held at headquarters in the World's Tower Building on Tuesday, March 2.

TO ARRANGE FOR KENTUCKY CONVENTION.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Moving Picture Exhibitors League of Kentucky, was scheduled to take place at the Phoenix Hotel, at Lexington, on February 23. The meeting had to be postponed, however, as L. J. Dittmar of Louisville, President of the League, and several other members were unable to attend on the specified date. It has been reported that Lexington is very anxious to secure the convention which is to be held on April 23, or thereabouts. The Lexington men are very anxious to bring up the Lexington Sunday closing proposition which has been giving them a good deal of trouble during the past year. An arrangement will probably be made whereby the league will retain its own counsel in the future to look after such matters. Lexington stands a good chance to get the convention as the city is centrally located and would draw a better crowd of delegates than a number of the other large cities of the state.

PENNSYLVANIA EXHIBITORS IN TOWN.

Fred J. Herrington, the National Vice-President of the Pennsylvania State League, and Vice-President G. W. Sahner arrived in New York from Pittsburgh on Wednesday, March 3, and called at the offices of The Moving Picture World. They said that the fight against censorship was well under way. A formidable delegation of film men will be present at Harrisburg on March 9th, when a hearing on the Repeal Bill is to take place. Ben Zerr, the State President, and Charles Segall of Philadelphia are expected to join Herrington and Sahner, who plan an early conference with the manufacturers to obtain their support in the fight against censorship in Pennsylvania.

INDIANA LEAGUE INCORPORATED.

The Indiana Motion Picture League, which was recently formed at a meeting held by the moving picture show operators of Indiana has been incorporated. The incorporators are: L. H. O'Donnell, president of the league; J. M. Rhodes, who is secretary of the league, and W. E. Keating. A club will be formed for the benefit of the league members. There will be another convention in Indianapolis in June.

KANSAS CONVENTION AT EMPORIA.

Secretary P. J. Concannon of the Kansas Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, announces that the next convention of the Kansas Branch will be held at Emporia on Monday and Tuesday, March 15 and 16. Exhibitors are urged to attend and all will be admitted to the sessions on Monday. Tuesday's sessions will be for members only.

DENVER WANTS THE EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

Harry N. Burhans, secretary of the Denver Convention Association, Denver, Colo., and H. H.. Buckwalter, popular Denver motion picture man, have wired The Moving Picture World extolling the beauties of Denver and urging that the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League be held in that city. The advantages offered are numerous.

"THE JUGGERNAUT" AT VITAGRAPH THEATER.

Up-to-Date Railroad Story in Thrilling Picture Drama Featuring Vitagraph Star Players.

"THE JUGGERNAUT," of which one scene alone cost the Vitagraph Company $25,000, will be the feature of the Vitagraph Theater program for the week commencing Sunday, March 7th. "The Juggernaut" tells a powerful story of modern life and was written by Donald I. Buchanan and Ralph W. Ince and is said to be more potent in the intensity of its dramatic appeal than any picture yet shown at the Vitagraph Theater.

"The Juggernaut," which is in five parts, was produced under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, who selected for its enactment a cast of principals that included Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Julia Swayne Gordon, William Dunn, Eulalie Jensen and Frank Currier. It is conceded to be Mr. Ince's greatest achievement in motion picture productions and his greatest triumph being the staging of the scene, in which an entire train crashes through a trestle, the climax of the picture.

The story of "The Juggernaut" contrasts the life history of a young man born to riches, who becomes a railroad president and that of a poor boy, who, through his own exertions works his way to the office of District Attorney. These two powers clash when the District Attorney makes demand of the financial power for the betterment of a railroad that greed has practically ruined and that through neglect endangers the lives of its patrons. Fate intervenes with a fatal accident which is responsible for the death of the President and his wife, passengers on the ill-fated train.

Preceding the feature picture the Vitagraph Company has selected for presentation four unroariously funny one-part comedies, "Mr. Jarr Brings Home a Turkey," the second in the famous Jarr Family Series by Roy L. McCardell; "Postponed," the story of a race for a wife in which both contestants win; "The Battle of Frenchman's Run," featuring Dorothy Kelly and James Morrison, and "The Capitulation of the Major," a story in which Cupid wars on military rule and wins a decisive victory.

K. & E. TO RESUME.

Big Theater Concern Soon to Re-Enter the Picture Field—P. L. Waters Interested in Plan.

A DIRECT outgrowth of the Biograph—Klaw & Erlanger alliance for the purpose of producing feature pictures will be a new booking company to handle th Klaw & Erlanger films already on the shelves and to market new products, according to Percy L. Waters, general manager of the General Film Company, who is financially interested in the present venture and probably will leave the General Film Company to devote all of his time to its direction.

When seen by a Moving Picture World reporter a few days ago, Mr. Waters said that it was too soon to make any definite announcement, or even forecast the probable policy of the new concern, for its organization is still in the early stages. Even the officers have yet to be selected and it is not known what films will be used to supplement the Klaw & Erlanger releases. It seems likely, however, that arrangements will be made with several producers of elaborate features, whereby their output will be booked in large theaters and handled much after the method used with stage attractions. Mr. Water said that he did not know whether or not exchanges would be opened throughout the country.

Associated with the general manager of the General Film Company is Pat Casey, head of the Pat Casey vaudeville agency, who has been intimately connected with Klaw & Erlanger since they began adapting their plays to pictures. Mr. Waters asserted emphatically that the proposed concern is in no way affiliated with the Equitable Film Corporation, rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

It may be recalled that at the time Klaw & Erlanger entered the film business, the company was incorporated in Albany for $100,000 and that since then only a small part of the pictures made with their co-operation at the Biograph studio have been released. The new organization may be expected to carry through and enlarge upon the work that never was completed by the original promoters.

EDISON PLAYERS AT STRAND ROOF GARDEN.

On Tuesday evening, March 9, a company of Edison players will be the guests of the management of the Strand Roof Garden, atop the Strand theatre, Broadway and 47th Street, New York.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

The Staging of Moving Pictures.

THERE is little use in attempting to treat the making of moving pictures as an art while we have rampant so many glaring cases of butchery in their staging. I do not for a moment believe, however, that the evil is to be attributed to wilful omissions and commissions on the part of the director. Indeed, I am inclined to sympathize with directors in this matter; for the man higher up is more responsible for the tawdry, unfit settings given to many really worthy pictures. And he can partly rid himself of the burden of responsibility by casting it on the shoulders of the exhibitors, who have failed to educate their patrons rightly in the matter of programs.

The truth is we shall have no true art in moving pictures until unwearied, patient and loving attention is paid to their making, throughout every department. The tremendous rush now prevailing in moving picture making is killing the very soul of artistic effort. Often a director is not given the proper time to stage his pictures, as his sense of art dictates, even if he be allowed the necessary expenditure. The output per week must be so many at all hazards—art or no art.

What is the result? Many fine film subjects ruined, when judged from the artistic standpoint.

I have often wondered at the extravagance of exhibitors in the programs they offer, not only so far as the number of reels is concerned but—what is far worse—for the daily change of program. A great subject, that has cost $50,000 or $100,000 or more, is shown for one day only! Be assured a day of reckoning is coming.

I have always held—and I am borne out in my stand by the experience of many intelligent exhibitors—that an exhibitor can mould and educate his patrons along sane lines in the matter of programs. He can make them see as he sees, so long as he is consistent and fair.

Down in Columbus, O., at the late convention, I found that the Majestic theater was giving about two changes of program per week and getting 10 and 20 cents admission. And the house was crowded every night I visited it by the best people in the city. Yet other houses there were charging only five cents and changing daily.

The present tendency of the business, and one that is inevitable, is towards a higher standard of intelligence in the great exhibiting department of the trade. When this daily change of program is done away with and the consequent rush in production is relieved, there will be, and must be, a right revealment of art in moving pictures. There will then be no reason for such malignant flings at the settings of moving pictures as are contained in the following article, which recently appeared in the "House Beautiful":

"It is with considerable surprise that we follow these plays from their outdoor scenes to their interiors, and see hideous rooms crowded with grotesque furniture, with sentimental pictures in gingerbread frames, with tawdry curtains and glaring carpets. The wall paper shrieks aloud; and sometimes the mantelpieces are covered with tasseled plush and surmounted by supercentennial monstrosities of china and bronze.

"One gauges the wealth of a character in the 'movies' by the amount of statuary in his drawing room.

"And in almost every case, whether the house represented be that of a millionaire or of the impoverished hero, bad taste reigns. Few realize the aesthetic influence of the 'movies.' One shudders to think what an obstacle to good taste these object lessons in the rococo must be, and how the nouveau riche of the future, brought up on the movies, will arrange his house.

"One thing is certain: bronze nymphs will parade their nudity from every available vantage point, for has not the decree gone out from the Lubins and Edisons and Kalems that this is art?"

Concerning War Pictures.

The Ontario board of censors, following instructions from the Dominion military department, has notified all film exchanges and manufacturers that all war pictures will be condemned entirely, and that no eliminations will be made.

"The prohibition rests on the assumption that the display of war pictures is likely to have a bad effect on recruiting," says the Chicago Tribune, by way of comment. "War romanticized might be stimulating, but the camera has been getting scenes which are about as little factitious as the cockpit of an old-fashioned frigate in action.

War is one of the many things disagreeable to sight and hearing which have been conventionalized in popular thought. It is an enduring euphemism for folk who do not encounter it and it further is not hideous in the recollections of men who have gone through it. Concepts of horror wear out, as if the mind were protecting itself against accumulating a burden under which it would stagger.

Inasmuch as war has not been avoidable, it probably is a protective device of the mind to conventionalize it, make it factitious, romanticize it, euphemize it.

Endeavors to get it out of the factitious and into the real may fail because of the protective device which prevents the mind from retaining vividly and effectively a concept of horror. If experience will not put a restraint on action it is likely to be beyond the power of any art, however stark, to set up prohibitions.

Nevertheless, the first reaction to the picturing of the realities of war might easily be in the direction of timidity and reluctance. If Andrew Carnegie were able not only to produce in every city and small town of this country daily moving pictures of the work in field and hospitals and of the work and of the results of work in trenches, but also able to compel the attendance of every resident of these cities and towns, he might maintain the force of a revulsion.

There being no force to compel attendance, there will be no spectators at theaters showing such pictures. Across the street a man, knowing how strictly humanity guards its illusions, will display reels showing the pomp and glory of war, marching bodies, the neat and antiseptic bayonet charge, the spick and span shock of cavalry, the noble wounded, none of them intestinally injured, and the folk will pack that theater and they will leave the realistic theater vacant.

It is, we see, a factitious world, and it has to be to sustain its burden, which is life. When a human ceases to live in the factitious world and insists upon living in the real world, the physicians say it is a case of neuroticism and that, unless the patient shakes off his mental burdens, there is no hope. The burdens are the weight of undissolved horror.

The law of life, therefore, seems to be primarily a denial of experience and probability and, if that be the case, what hope may there be placed in the theory that war will teach humanity to avoid war? Human mental processes immediately are started to minimize the effect of experience and observation and to regain an equipoise undisturbed by the horrible event which threatened to overthrow mental and spiritual peace.

When all these considerations are taken into account it may be seen that the order of the Canadian censors was based, as most censorship is based, upon a misunderstanding of human impulses and reactions. The mind is its own censor. It rejects more than censorship could.

Photodrama Club of Chicago.

Clarence A. Frambers, organizer and president of the Photodrama Club of Chicago, has furnished the following interesting items concerning the club:

The Photodrama Club of Chicago is now conducting its meetings on the second and fourth Monday evenings of the month in the John Crerar Library Hall, 110 No. Wabash avenue, under the supervision of the president and of Secretary C. J. Caine.

At the last meeting Mr. Frambers gave an interesting lecture on sub-titles, cut-backs, fades, etc., and several scripts were dissected.

Congratulations were extended to the club's valued member, Mrs. Maud Moore Clement, winner of the first prize in the Swan-Dramatic Mirror contest.

The club was well represented at the recent Reel Fellows' Club Ball at the Hotel Sherman, and several applications for membership were received.

The splendid work of the club so far accomplished is Mr. Van Petten's reason for selling his first script to Vitagraph —a two-reeler, too.

Two more writers with a literary reputation were added to the roll last meeting, and the club has a promise from Maibelle Heikes Justice to be present next meeting, which will be held on Monday evening, March 8, at 7:30 p. m.

Chicago Film Brevities.

A special exhibition of "The Eagle's Nest," a six-part Lubin production, was given at Fulton's projection room, 154 W. Lake street, Wednesday, February 24. Mr. Lubin brought this feature along with him, on his way to the Reel Fellows' Club Ball, and was present at the presentation, so that he might satisfy himself as to how the subject appealed to the exhibitors present. Before the presentation Mr. Lubin gave a brief address, during which he said in part: "I want to get acquainted with exhibitors. I want to know what you think about a picture and I want you to send in your complaints to me. These complaints serve to help a manufacturer to make better pictures, and I want to know what you really think. I want you to have good copies of my pictures, no matter how old they are. It is foolishness for a man to take a worn, scratched film when he might just as well have a good one. I don't want you to run marred copies, for it isn't good for your theaters nor is it good for my reputation. Maybe you won't like this picture, but you can look at it and see what you think. Romaine Fielding, who made it, is supposed to be one of the best boys in the production of western pictures." Mr. Lubin left for Philadelphia the same afternoon, on the 5:30 train.

John Hardin, manager of the Chicago branch of Pathe, Inc., has resigned that position and has been succeeded by

A. W. Goff, formerly manager of the Pittsburgh branch, and recently district manager for the Middle West.

F. G. Honeck, booking manager of the Chicago branch of Pathe, Inc., has also resigned his position. He has purchased one-half of the capital stock of the Treble-Cleff Musical Movie Co., of Illinois, Inc., with headquarters at 32 S. Wabash avenue.

Arthur Lowry, proprietor and manager of Lowry's Theater, 740 Milwaukee avenue, this city, made a call at the World office last week. The Lowry seats 680 people, and 10 cents is charged for programs of six reels of General Film service. Mr. Lowry stated that he ran "The Escape," D. W. Griffith's famous picture subject, on February 10 and 17. The crowds were so large that he had to telephone for three policemen to control the people. Patrons were obliged to make their exits through the rear door, owing to the dense crowds waiting to get in, in front. Mr. Lowry stated that he drew just as large crowds with "Tillie's Punctured Romance," which he ran Monday, February 22. It is his intention to install a large pipe organ in his house, in the near future. Mr. Lowry informed me that he was approached, on or about February 6, by W. A. Deere, whose printed matter showed that he was advertising manager of the Photogram Publishing Co., 610 Fisher Bldg., this city. He stated that Mr. Deere drew up a contract for delivering weekly 8,000 programs, consisting of 28 pages, 6 by 6 inches in size, and promised 16 pages on each of these programs to him every week, the remaining pages to be devoted by Mr. Deere to national advertisers. Mr. Deere asked for $2 in advance from Mr. Lowry, and on Mr. Lowry's refusal he then asked for a check dated ahead. This Mr. Lowry also refused, asking him to bring his programs according to contract, and that he would get his money on delivery. Mr. Lowry having heard no more about the matter called at the address given and found that Room 610 Fisher Bldg. was used as an office by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Co. If any Chicago exhibitors have been losers in like propositions made to them, they are requested to communicate with the Chicago office of the Moving Picture World.

Fred S. Meyer, formerly assistant manager of the Laemmle Film Service, in the Minneapolis branch, arrived in the city Friday, February 26, and called at this office. He was then en route from New York City to Minneapolis, where he will open an office for the Kriterion Company and take charge of its bookings. The Minneapolis office will attend to the bookings in Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, the northwestern part of Iowa and the Peninsula of Michigan. The office will be opened on March 8, Mr. Meyer stated, with 21 releases per week. Mr. Meyer also informed me that he had made arrangements, when in New York, with the Leading Players Film Corporation for the handling of their output in the Minneapolis office of the Kriterion. The first release of this product will be ready about March 15.

Charles Rysdon, son of E. A. Rysdon, owner of the E. A. R. Theater, 6839 Wentworth avenue, and of the Glamour Theater, 63rd street and Wentworth avenue, called last week and renewed his subscription for the Moving Picture World. E. A. Rysdon manages the Glamour, which seats 300, and his son is manager of the E. A. R. Theater, which seats 900 people. The Glamour charges five cents for six reels of General Film and Mutual service. The E. A. R. charges five and ten cents for a program of eight reels of General Film, Mutual and Paramount service. Good business at both houses was reported. The E. A. R., a new house, was built about a year ago and is up to date in every respect, including the latest ventilating and fireproof systems. I cannot forebear to express the opinion that eight reels of General Film, Mutual and Paramount service is outrageously cheap for the admission prices charged.

The Star Film Co., with headquarters in the Schultz Bldg., Columbus, O., has been launched under the ownership and management of M. A. Neff. Among the pictures offered by the company are "The Pilgrim's Progress," in four parts; "The Crusaders," in four parts; "The Paul Rainey Pictures," in six parts; "Traffic in Souls," and about 70 other subjects, some of which are features. "Traffic in Souls" will be shown the first and second of March to the delegates attending the American Civic Reform Union, which will be held at the Auditorium, Columbus. Mr. Neff showed "Traffic in Souls" at the Empress Theater, Columbus, Sunday, February 21, and broke all records with it in that city, although it had been shown for three weeks at the Southern Theater, some time ago. On February 25 an exhibition of "The Pilgrim's Progress' was given at the Hartman Theater, Columbus, the audience being composed of members of the charitable and civic institutions of Columbus, and also of ministers of various denominations. The audience was very enthusiastic. Lee Boda, manager of the Hartman, Columbus; the Victoria, Dayton, and the leading theater in Springfield, after seeing the pictures, gave them a week each in Columbus and Dayton and four days at Springfield, which was all the open time he had for the last town.

The scenario contest conducted by the Chicago Sunday Tribune for some time past was concluded Thursday, February 26, when three, out of the many thousands of manuscripts submitted, were selected as winners by Miss Kitty Kelly, photoplay editor of the Tribune, and Victor Eubank, publicity of Essanay. Even the winning manuscripts were mediocre in merit, which serves to show that photodramatic scenarios have long since passed beyond the power of amateur writers.

Edward A. Salisbury's Wild Life Film, an extended review of which (by W. Stephen Bush) appeared in the issue of March 6, of the World, opened a run at the Studebaker Theater Monday, March 1, under the management of Jones, Linick & Schaefer. What with these remarkable educational pictures at the Studebaker, and that other great multiple-reel educational, "Uncle Sam at Work," at the Auditorium, Chicago, patrons of moving pictures are getting a veritable feast.

Safe blowers entered the Halsted Theater, 320 S. Halsted street, early on Tuesday, February 23, and blew open the safe. They took over $175 and fled. Max Tesselton, owner of the theater, discovered the robbery at noon Tuesday and expressed the belief that the robbers had concealed themselves in the theater after the final exhibition the night before.

Alfred Hamburger announces that the Pine Grove, a new theater in course of erection at 717-19 Sheridan Road, and which will cost about $100,000, will be opened by him on its completion. The programs offered at the Pine Grove will be confined to first-run photoplays, consisting of the best productions among regular releases and multiple-reel features. This house will be the first theater on the North Side controlled by Mr. Hamburger.

Carlyle Blackwell, former star in Kalem photoplays, and at present head of the Favorite Players' Film Co., passed through the city one day last week on his way to New York from the Coast. Mr. Blackwell visited the Celebrated Players' Film Co. (which has contracted for all of his productions) during his short stay here.

A wail of woe is arising at the present time from Hinsdale and Berwyn, two of Chicago's western suburbs. The wail comes from the good housewives of these villages, owing to the fact that servant girls will not stay in either burgh, and that the good ladies are obliged to do the housework themselves. The reason is that there are no moving picture shows in either Hinsdale or Berwyn. Hinsdale residents do not patronize picture shows and the servant girls combined are not able to support one. In Berwyn, the puritanical town board is to blame, as they have put a ban on pictures.

William N. Selig returned from Panama Friday, February 26, at midnight. He was accompanied by Miss Kathlyn Williams and Mr. and Mrs. Colin Campbell. The other twelve members of the "Ne'er Do Well" company proceeded to Los Angeles direct when New Orleans was reached. The voyage from Colon to New Orleans was made by way of Havana, where the party stopped over for a few hours. Mrs. Campbell went on to Toronto, Saturday, to visit relatives. Miss Williams and Director Campbell departed for Los Angeles, by the Santa Fe Limited, Tuesday evening, March 2, after an enjoyable stay in this city.

"Who Will Be Sue " will be answered Sunday, March 7, when the summing up of the votes of the leading contestants will be made public. As it is very probable that the Essanay Film Mfg. Co. will select the first eight girls in the contest to appear in a photoplay, the standing of the eight at the head of the list, on Sunday, February 28, was as follows: Dorothy Warshauer, 1,119,695; Florence Tighe, 692,250; Gladys Swain 458,190; Myrtle Johnson, 408,505; Beatrice Brown, 311,550; Elizabeth Garry, 263,180; Marguerite Foster, 240,345, and Alice McChesney, 226,310.

Doings at Los Angeles

AFTER nearly a full week of rain and heavy fogs, the directors here are again working, and every bright hour is utilized by most every company. The past ten days have definitely shown the value of glass studios, and as a result of this, together with the inconvenience in transportation and the distance from the city, Inceville will lose a part of its little city in the mountains. The move is now only tentative, but will probably be put through in a short time. Mr. Ince will establish a working hearquarters nearer or in Los Angeles, retaining the ranch for outside work—but this is not definite.

Huge boulders, real ones, weighing from fifty to four hundred pounds, were used in a Features Ideal picture this week in the story from "The Long Shift," a well known dramatic piece. Webster Cullison directed the play, and in the mining scenes where the shaft is wrecked by a cave-in the big rocks fly and smash everything. It was dangerous work, but the effect was there and no prop boulders rolled down the earth.

Four months to the feature is the time Thomas H. Ince will use on his new line of big pictures from well known novels. The departure from a chance release was made after Messrs. Kessel and Baumann had gone over the matter with the producer. This means that each picture will have sufficient time spent on it so as to make it a genuine feature, and with one of the greatest producers spending his time on but three pictures a year, something good ought to result.

"The Dream Baby" is the title of a picture, the sequel to "Motherhood," which is being produced at the American with a cast of star actors. The story is by Olga Printzlau Clark, and is told in verse. It will be in four reels and is said to be a coming release which will be greatly appreciated for its story.

Hoot Mon! With a faint and distant fragrance of the Scotch heather in the air, bagpipers dancing and droning, and a wealth of good fellowship spirit pervading the atmosphere, Robert Ross presided at the dinner this week as toast master. Though it poured outside, the interior of the club was crowded with sunshine and jollity.

Hunting locations near the Rancho del Lasky, Jeanne MacPherson, actress and author, stumbled on the trail and rolled down an embankment in a small canyon. For two hours she lay unconscious and was found by Blanche Sweet and a searching party which went out to hunt for her. But for a bad bump on her head and several cuts and bruises, Miss MacPherson is now all right.

The White Silence, skudded snow, five feet deep, was used in the last few scenes of "The Sign of the Rose," an Ince feature, and the whole company appearing in this film went up to the wastes of Mount Baldy, where few travelers go at this time of the year. The scenes were taken amid great snow drifts, showing the reindeer and Santy on his way to the city.

Members of the club chipped in and bought some kind of a sciatica Persian rug to go on the floor near the head of the stairs. There is a story connected with the rug, and it is highly prized by the members. It is a remembrance of an action made by those present at the dinner this week.

The California Moving Picture Manufacturers' candidate for Queen of the 1915 Fiesta to be held here during the year, is certainly being boosted by the film makers, from owner of studio to extra employees. Benefits and all kinds of stunts to raise money with which to buy votes for her have been given of late, and the first week of the contest she was leading. The men who make the pictures elected a candidate who is not in pictures because of the hot rivalry between companies and players. The Firemen have a queen and so have the police and other organizations, and they all have outside candidates. Miss Gladys Nicholson, the moving picture candidate, is a society woman, and her winning chances are quite favorable. A benefit ball was given at the Ocean Park dancing pavilion this week and a neat sum was cleaned up to buy votes with.

Mack Sennett is going back into pictures. He will act in one feature which he is producing with Mabel Normand. It is a "ye olden" time story and is a high class comedy of a selected variety. Building continues at this busy place.

CLARKE IRVINE.

MISS DAMON GETS THANHOUSER PRIZE.

Miss Ida Damon, winner of the $10,000 prize solution of "The Million Dollar Mystery," Thanhouser's great photoplay, has received the money from the hands of his honor, the Mayor of St. Louis, Monday, February 22. The unexpected fortune which has thus come to Miss Damon was celebrated out of a spirit of civic pride by half the population of the "show me" metropolis. The theater in which Miss Damon was awarded the capital prize by St. Louis's chief executive, was thronged hours before the appearance of the lucky girl.

The 23d episode, Miss Damon's solution, was thrown upon the screen, and the crowd cheered itself hoarse. Then a commotion at the rear of the theater bespoke the arrival of the winner. Leaning on the arm of her aged father, and surrounded by a cordon of police, fighting a passage through the crowd, Miss Damon finally reached the stage.

The Mayor of St. Louis and other city officials awaited her coming. Then the entire party appeared before the audience, the Mayor paying a graceful tribute to the girlhood of St. Louis, then handed over the check, making a nice nest egg for Miss Damon.

PITTSBURGH EXCHANGEMAN IN TOWN.

Motion Pictures at the Exposition

Nations, States, Railway and Manufacturing Companies Will Give Motion Picture Exhibits.

By W. L. Stern, Sales Manager for G. A. Metcalfe.

IN THE motion pictures at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, we have a new world factor. There will be in the neighborhood of seventy-five projection machines used at the exposition at San Francisco, and this augurs well for the future of the picture as an educator and an advertiser. Practically every machine will display pictures for which no charge will be made, and this conclusively shows the trend of motion pictures away from commercialism into the realms of public welfare work. The problem confronted hundreds of exhibitors as to the best method of placing their story before the public, and that the unanimous choice was moving pictures is attested to by the great number of exhibits using this means of exploiting their proposition.

The writer has personally visited every building within the exposition grounds and has spent a considerable part of his time in conference with the heads of most of the State and National Commissions, to say nothing of large industrial corporations, and they are enthusiastic in their verdict that they will be better able to demonstrate in a brief interval of time the advantages of their propositions through the medium of the screen, than they could otherwise do through volumes of literature or an army of salesmen. The film contains the crux—the heart—the very meat of what they desire to convey—of the theme they are exploiting—clothed in an acceptable manner in order to "put over" and thus will the thousands who visit the wonderful garden of palaces at San Francisco not only be entertained while they rest from wearying walks through the thousands of exhibits, but they will be educated as well, and it would be unnatural for them to fail to absorb the tale that is being unfolded to them before their eyes on the screen.

As an indication of the use of pictures at the fair the writer mentions a list of exhibitors that comes to mind offhand.

Such nations will use motion pictures as their chief educational adjunct of their exploitation bureaus as Argentine Republic, Norway, Netherlands, Sweden, Bolivia, Canada, Cuba, France, and our own Government of the United States, which has secured six high-grade projectors to be placed in theaters built in three of the large palaces, namely, Liberal Arts, Manufactures and Mining.

Many of the individual states are also seeking aid of the film to demonstrate the advantages and resources of their individual localities. Among these are Georgia, Iowa, Idaho, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, Oregon, Washington, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and California. The individual county groups of California have also combined for the purpose of using pictures and screen demonstrations and projectors are installed in Sacramento Valley Counties' Exhibit, San Joaquin Valley County Exhibit, Southern California Counties Exhibit, Redwood Counties Exhibit, Alameda Counties Exhibit and others.

Large corporations whose advertising departments carefully analyze the psychology of advertising and the best way to present their proposition according to the particular circumstances, have come to the shrewd conclusion—no doubt, based on experience at other expositions—that the ideal manner in which to exploit their product is when their audience is at rest, with an open mind ready to absorb all that is placed before them. Expositions are usually very fatiguing, and with this thought before them, such advertising experts have hit upon the motion picture as the ideal solution of the advertising problem at an exposition. Wandering through the countless beautiful byways of such an elaborate setting as the Panama-Pacific Exposition, while never wearying to the brain, causes bodily discomfort that makes a seat in a well-ventilated, comfortable auditorium a pleasant relief and that very time is the psychological moment to display to the public such educational features as the manufacture of steel and steel products, for instance, by the United States Steel Products Company in their very elaborate theater in which nothing but steel is used throughout, including walls, chairs, operating room, and complete equipment. Other industrial firms to use motion pictures will be Wells-Fargo Express Company, which will follow the handling of an express parcel through its tangled route by means of the detecting eye of the motion picture camera. John Rapp and Son, local brewers; Sperry Flour Mills, Corticelli Silk Company, Good Roads Association, National Cash Register Company, Shredded Wheat Company, and the United Shoe Machinery Co., as well as Hunt Brothers, canners of California fruit, are some of the well-known mercantile companies which have sought the screen to tell their tale.

The railroads have been advocates of projection of their scenic wonders for some time past, and a person visiting transportation hall can travel all over the United States on the Film Railroad, unlimited. The Pennsylvania Railway is equipping two special cars as an auditorium to display its views in addition to a very handsome exhibit. The Grand Trunk Railway, in a booth of its own, will show Canadian views and the Canadian Pacific Railway, as well as Great Northern of Canada also contemplate installation of projectors for this work. The Union Pacific Railway and Santa Fe Railways each have huge amusement concessions on the "Zone"—the avenue which coincides with the Pike, the Midway, and other pleasure streets of bye-gone fairs, and both of these railroads have many feet of film to reel off to the public, depicting the scenic wonders of their highways. The Southern Pacific Railway has a permanent motion picture department which will spend 1915 in San Francisco, instead of throughout the country, as San Francisco expects the entire World to appear there; present indications seem to point to even an excess of realization over anticipation.

Among other institutions that will use moving pictures might be mentioned the Young Women's Christian Association, which will call pictures in to aid it in welfare work as well as amusement and educational subjects.

The cinematograph concession at the fair has been sold to local capitalists, and they contemplate an exhibit which will amply satisfy the abnormal appetite of the public in general to learn all of the ins and outs and byways of the motion picture business. This concession, however, will charge admission. It will consist of a motion picture theater in which films will be projected and a studio in which films will be manufactured; also a display room exhibiting all of the appliances and machines used in connection with the manufacture and projection of films. This exhibit will assuredly meet with a cordial reception.

In reviewing motion pictures and the Exposition at San Francisco we must not forget the work that the film has already done for the Panama-Pacific Exposition—something never before equaled in the history of the world—and that is the exploitation and advertisement of the Fair itself on the screen of every picture theater of the wide, wide world. The natives of all lands—civilized, savage and warring—and it is difficult to classify the battling nations into civilized or savage; all these varicolored, cosmopolitan people know that San Francisco is going to stage the grandest, most wonderful exposition of the works of man ever conceived or placed before the world; old and young alike, from China to England, from Iceland to Argentina have gazed on the progress of a Fairy City in the building; the Tower of Jewels, the Court of the Four Seasons, the Avenue of Palms have been seen from snowland to sunland. No advertising through press, no publicity through print, can equal the wonderful task that has been accomplished through the medium of the picture, the fluttering film, in the accomplishment of the huge task of heralding an exposition. It stands today pre-eminent as the greatest advertising factor in all of the wide world.

You, who read this article, have doubtless viewed in Pathe's weekly or the Hearst-Selig Periodical, or any one of the many film papers, some view of the Exposition, but the only drawback that the writer can see in such publicity is the failure of the film to register color. For you who come to San Francisco to see for yourself what an exposition of genius really is, a dream awaits you. The surprise comes in the color scheme; it is a riot of loveliness, of harmony and of beauty unsurpassed.

LA BADIE HEADS CAST IN "FINAL RECKONING."

Florence La Badie is at the head of a well-balanced cast impersonating the characters in a new two-reeler released in the Mutual program by Thanhouser and called "The Final Reckoning." The story is an exciting one. It is concerned chiefly with the activities of a band of Italian blackmailers. Supporting Miss La Badie are Morris Foster, Justus D. Barnes and Ernest C. Warde.

RUTH STONEHOUSE DANCES FOR CHARITY.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse, the pretty Essanay actress, was given an ovation at the Bryn Mawr Theater, when she danced "The Passing of Salome" at the charity show given by the Edgewater Catholic Woman's Club for the benefit of the Home of the Friendless and other charities. Harry Dunkinson and Royal Douglas presented "The Battle of Too Soon."

Motion Picture Laws*

Maine.

THE State of Maine levies no licenses on motion picture exhibitions. Licenses must be obtained from the municipal officers of the city or town where the exhibitions are given. The amounts of the licenses vary, according to the size of the city. There are no laws on the statute books of Maine dealing specifically with motion pictures.

Massachusetts.

Great changes were made in the motion picture laws by the last legislature of Massachusetts. We are enabled to publish all the latest amendments of the law, including every provision now on the statute book applicable to motion pictures in the State of Massachusetts:

LAWS
EXHIBITION OF MOVING PICTURES.

Acts of 1914, Chapter 791.

An Act relative to the Operation of the Cinematograph and to the Exhibition of Motion Pictures.

Section 1. No cinematograph, or similar apparatus, involving the use of a combustible film more than ten inches in length, shall be kept or used for the purpose of exhibiting such films in or upon the premises of a public building, public or private institution, schoolhouse, church theater, special hall, public hall, miscellaneous hall, place of assembage, or place of public resort, until such cinematograph or similar apparatus has been inspected and approved by an inspector of the building inspection department of the district police, who shall have placed thereon a numbered metal tag; nor until a booth, or enclosure, which has been inspected and approved by such an inspector and his certificate issued therefor, has been provided for said apparatus; nor until such precautions against fire as the chief of the district police may specify have been taken by the owner, user or exhibitor therefor, provided, however, that no such cinematograph or similar apparatus shall be operated with oxyhydrogen gas, so-called, or with limelight. In addition, in the city of Boston, the location of any booth or enclosure surrounding said apparatus, shall be approved by the building commissioner, who may order such additional precautions against fire as he may deem necessary.

Section 2. The inspectors of the building inspection department of the district police are hereby empowered and directed to inspect any cinematograph or similar apparatus involving the use of a combustible film more than ten inches in length, which is to be kept or used in or upon any of the premises defined in section one of this act; and also to inspect any booth or enclosure provided for the same; and the chief of the district police shall make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the safe use thereof.

Section 3. For the inspection of a cinematograph or similar apparatus, or for the inspection of a booth or enclosure, as provided by section one of this act, a fee of two dollars shall be paid by the owner or user thereof.

Section 4. Except as provided for in section six of this act, no person shall exhibit or operate any cinematograph or similar apparatus involving the use of a combustible film more than ten inches in length, in or upon any of the premises defined in section one of this act, until he has received a special or first-class license so to do from an inspector of the building inspection department of the district police. No such license shall be granted until the applicant has passed an examination proving him to be thoroughly skilled in the working of the mechanical and electrical apparatus or devices used in, or connected with, the operation of a cinematograph or similar apparatus, as hereinbefore defined, and no person under twenty-one years of age shall be eligible for such examination. The fee for the examination shall be three dollars and shall accompany the application for license. The first-class license shall be for the term of one year from the date thereof, but may be renewed yearly without examination, by an inspector of the building inspection department of the district police, upon the payment of a fee of one dollar.

Secion 5. Any person eighteen years of age or over, desiring to act as an assistant to a holder of a special or first-class license, shall register his name, age and address on a form furnished for the purpose by the chief of the district police; and, upon the payment of a fee of one dollar, the said chief may issue a permit allowing such person to assist such a licensed operator in a booth or enclosure; but such person shall not himself operate the cinematograph or similar apparatus. The permit shall be for the term of one year from the date thereof, but may be renewed yearly by the chief of the district police upon the payment of a fee of fifty cents.

Section 6. A second-class license giving the right to operate a hand-driven cinematograph or similar apparatus, but only in the presence of a holder of a special or first-class license, may be granted to any person who is not less than twenty years of age and who has been employed for three months as an assistant under the supervision of a licensee or licenses in or upon any of the premises defined in section one of this act. The applicant, as a condition of receiving the said second-class license, shall pass an examination satisfactory to an inspector of the building inspection department of the district police and shall present to the chief of the district police an affidavit signed and sworn to by him, stating that he has so worked for said period. The chief of the district police may require that the affidavit be corroborated. The fee for the examination shall be two dollars and shall accompany the application for license. The license shall be for the term of one year from the date thereof, but may be renewed yearly by an inspector of the building inspection department of the district police upon the payment of a fee of fifty cents.

Section 7. Any person over twenty-one years of age who has held a second-class license for three months or more and has worked regularly during that period in a booth or enclosure in or upon any of the premises defined in section one of this act, may receive a license of the first class upon presenting to the chief of the district police an affidavit signed and sworn to by him stating that he has so worked for the said period and upon passing the examination and payment of the fee as provided for in section four of this act.

Section 8. Any person who has operated a cinematograph or similar apparatus under a license issued by the district police under any preceding act and any person over twenty-one years of age who presents to the chief of the district police an affidavit signed and sworn to by him stating that he has operated a cinematograph or similar apparatus in a booth or enclosure, in a theater or hall devoted to public exhibitions of moving pictures outside the commonwealth for a period of three months or more shall be eligible for the examination for a special or a first-class license as provided in sections four and ten of this act.

Section 9. A first-class license shall apply only to the operation of a hand-driven cinematograph or similar apparatus.

Section 10. The holder of a first-class license as defined in this act, or any person designated in section eight of this act who passes an examination satisfactory to the district police, may be granted a special license to operate by hand or by motor any cinematograph or similar apparatus which has been inspected and tagged by the district police. The fee for the examination shall be three dollars and shall accompany the application for a license. The license shall be for the term of one year from the date thereof, but may be renewed yearly by an inspector of the building inspection department of the district police upon the payment of a fee of one dollar.

Section 11. An operator's license or an assistant's permit issued under this act may be suspended or revoked for cause at any time by an inspector of the building inspection department of the district police, but the person whose license or permit is so suspended or revoked may appeal to the chief of the district police, whose decision in the matter shall be final.

Section 12. Except in the city of Boston, the chief of the district police may grant permits for the special exhibition of pictures by the use of a cinematograph or similar apparatus in or upon any of the premises defined in section one of this act, which, in his opinion, are in safe condition for such exhibitions, and he may prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary for the presentation of the same. A fee of two dollars shall accompany the application for each permit.

Section 13. The provisons of sections one to five, inclusive, of this act shall not apply to any cinematograph or similar apparatus operated with only cellulose acetate films not more than one inch and one-fourth in width and requiring not more than five hundred watts of electric current to operate the arc; PROVIDED, HOWEVER, that such machines shall not be kept or used in or upon any of the premises defined in section one of this act except under such regulations as the chief of the district police shall prescribe.

Section 14. This act shall not apply to licenses or special licenses to operate cinematographs or similar apparatus issued by the district police and now in force, but upon the expiration of any such licenses the holder of a special license shall be entitled to a special license under this act upon the payment of the renewal fee as provided for in section ten, and the holder of a license shall be entitled to a first-class license under this act upon the payment of the renewal fee as provided in section four of this act.

Section 15. Any person, firm, corporation or association of persons, keeping or using a cinematograph or similar apparatus contrary to the provisions hereof, or in violation of any rule or regulation made by the chief of the district police, or, in the city of Boston, in violation of any regulation or requirement made by the building commissioner in accordance with the provisions hereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars.

Section 16. Chapters five hundred and sixty-five and five hundred and sixty-six of the acts of the year nineteen hundred and eight; chapter two hundred and eighty-one of the acts of the year nineteen hundred and nine; chapters forty-eight and four hundred and forty of the acts of the year nineteen hundred and eleven; chapter one hundred and eighty-two of the acts of the year nineteen hundred and twelve and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Section 17. Notwithstanding any of the provisions of this act, the chief of the district police may grant special licenses for operators of moving pictures in churches, schoolhouses, or public institutions in the cities and towns of the commonwealth, except Boston, which in his opinion are in safe condition for said exhibitions, and he may prescribe regulations for the proper conduct of the same. A fee of two dollars shall accompany each application for such special license. (Approved July 7, 1914.)

ACTS OF 1913, CHAPTER 280.

AN ACT TO AUTHORIZE THE MAYOR OF THE CITY OF BOSTON TO GRANT PERMITS FOR SPECIAL MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITIONS IN CHURCHES, HALLS OR OTHER BUILDINGS.

Section 1. The mayor of the city of Boston may grant permits in writing for special exhibitions of moving pictures in churches, halls or other buildings in that city which, in his opinion, are in safe condition for such exhibitions, and he may prescribe regulations for the proper conduct of the same: Provided, however, that such special exhibitions shall be subject to the laws of the commonwealth and the regulation of the district police relating to the use of the cinematograph or similar apparatus.

Section 2. A fee of two dollars shall accompany each application for a permit hereunder.

Section 3. This act shall take effect upon its passage. (Approved March 12, 1913.)

REGULATIONS RELATING TO THE EXHIBITION OF MOVING PICTURES—ACT WENT INTO EFFECT AUGUST 7, 1914.

Booths or Enclosures.

Section 1. A booth or enclosure, as required by chapter 791, Acts of 1914, and as specified in these regulations, shall be provided and shall be so located as not to obstruct or render dangerous any aisle, passageway or egress. Proper access to the booth or enclosure shall be provided.

Section 2. The Standard Booth shall be at least 7′ 0″ in height, the size to vary according to the number of machines, as follows: No. 1 booth, for one picture machine, not less than 6′ 0″ in width x 8′ 0″ in depth; No. 2 booth, for two picture machines, or one picture machine and one stereopticon, not less than 9′ 0″ in width x 8′ 0″ in depth; No. 3 booth, for two picture machines and one stereopticon, not less than 12′ 0″ in width x 8′ 0″ in depth.

Section 3. The frame shall be made of iron or steel, as follows:

(A) Angles forming the framework of the panels shall be 1¼″x1¼″x 3/16″.

(B) Tees may be substituted for angles, provided the tees are equal to the combined size of two angles.

(C) Angles for door frame shall be 1″x1″x3/16″.

(D) Gusset plates at joints shall be 3/16″ thick, and shall be riveted or bolted to each angle or tee by at least two ¼″ rivets or bolts at each end.

*The first article of this series appeared in issue of Nov. 21.

(E) Strap iron pieces for covering horizontal joints shall be 2"x⅛" (offset the thickness of the angles or tees so as to give a full bearing across the asbestos sheets), and shall be riveted to the angles or tees by at least two ¼" rivets, at each end, and bolted to each asbestos sheet approximately every 6".

(F) Angles for rewind bench brackets shall be not less than 1"x1"x 3/16".

Section 4. The sides and top of booth and door shall be covered with asbestos wood or asbestos building lumber of at least ¼" in thickness, the sheets to be so cut and arranged that there will be no vertical joints in the panels, and that the horizontal joints shall come over the strap iron, as hereinfore provided. The asbestos sheets shall be secured to the angle or tee framework and to the strap iron strips by 3/16" bolts, nuts and washers, spaced approximately 6" on centers. The exposed joints between the asbestos sheets in the ceiling of the booth shall be covered on the under side, as well as on the upper side, by strap irons, 2" x ⅛", bolted through.

Section 5. The floor of the booth shall consist of sheets of asbestos wood or asbestos building lumber of at least ⅜" in thickness, cut in between the walls of the booth, placed upon tight ⅞" underflooring or platform, and securely screwed in place. Joints in flooring sheets must be filled with asbestos plastic cement.

Section 6. There shall be two apertures for each moving-picture machine in the booth or enclosure, one for projection not more than 6" in height x 12" in width, and one for the operator not more than 12" in height x 6" in width. When a double lamp stereopticon or dissolver is used, the aperture for projection may be 5" square or 5" in diameter, and the aperture for the operator of the same dimension as for the moving-picture machine.

Section 7. All the apertures shall have gravity slides set in metal runs of No. 28 B. & S. gauge galvanized iron, the runs to be placed flush with the sides and bottoms of openings and so formed that they will lap over the slides 1" on back and front. The slides shall be bound with the same material so that metal will run freely within metal in all cases; and there shall also be a special approved releasing device, with fusible link inserted, within easy reach of the operator, by which the combustible cord holding the slides may be quickly released by hand.

Section 8. The door shall be 2' 0" in width x 6' 0" in height; shall have a substantial spring or gravity weight sufficient to keep it closed; shall be hinged to the frame or construction, so that it will swing freely; shall have strap iron 2" x ⅛" extending the entire height and across the top for a stop, and shall be provided with a lock.

Section 9. The rewind bench shall have two shelves made of slate or of ⅞" boards painted with at least three coats of asbestos paint and have a covering on top of asbestos wood or asbestos building lumber ¼" in thickness. The bench shall be not more than 4' 0" in length x 1' 0" in width, the upper shelf to be used for rewinding and repairing films and the lower shelf for the storage of films.

Section 10. The portable feature of the booth, with frame made of angles, is secured by making the sides and top in panel form. The panels are fastened together with ¼" bolts spaced not more than 2' 0" on centers. After bolting the panels together, the joints shall be filled with asbestos plastic cement. The panels forming the sides of the booth are interchangeable, and thus the panel containing the door may be placed on either the right or the left side of the booth, but shall not be placed in front of the center of the booth, except by written permission of the inspector. On premises where it is undesirable to keep the booth permanently erected, the joints where the wall panels come together shall be covered on the inside with 2" x ⅛" strap iron pieces securely bolted, as provided in (e) of section 3, and the joints at the junction of the walls and ceiling shall be covered by 1¼"x1¼"x3/16" angles, permanently secured to the roof panels, and bolted through the wall panels when booth is erected. The certificate of approval of a booth used as herein described shall be void, unless the owner or user thereof notifies the inspector having jurisdiction, at least three days in advance, of his intention to re-erect the same.

Section 11. Nothing in the foregoing shall be construed as prohibiting the erection of an enclosure of strictly fireproof material: provided, however, that no such enclosure shall be erected until plans and specifications of the same have been filed with and approved by the inspector of the district in which it is to be erected.

Section 12. For ventilation, a booth or enclosure shall be provided with an inlet in each of the four sides, 1' 3" in width x 3" in height; such inlet shall be covered on the inside by wire netting of not more than ¼" mesh, and the lower side shall be not more than 2½" above the floor. The netting shall be firmly secured to the asbestos board by means of iron strips and bolts. If the inspector so directs, there shall be an inlet in the floor, or in the side or rear near the floor line. Said inlet shall be not less than 100 square inches in area for a No. 1, 200 square inches for a No. 2, and 280 square inches for a No. 3 booth or enclosure, shall be connected with the outside air by a galvanized-iron pipe having a pitch downward if possible to the outside of the building, and shall be provided with a regulating hood, or its equivalent, so arranged as to keep out the storm, and the inside shall be provided with a register face over ½" wire mesh if in the floor, or with a ½" wire mesh if in the side or rear. The mesh and grating shall be securely fastened in place, those in the walls to be bolted on as specified for the smaller inlets. In case this provision is required, all apertures in the booth or enclosure shall be provided with plate glass attached in such manner as not to interfere with the gravity slides, and the small inlets at bottom of booth or enclosure may be omitted, or supplied with sliding covers of ¼" asbestos board.

Section 13. Near the center of the top of the booth or enclosure there shall be a circular opening of sufficient diameter, the upper side of which shall be provided with an iron flange securely fastened to the tees supporting the roof or ceiling construction. Securely fastened to this flange shall be a vent pipe of No. 26 B. & S. gauge galvanized iron, or other noncombustible material, not less than 12" in diameter for a No. 1, 16" for a No. 2, and 18" for a No. 3 booth or enclosure, said pipe leading to the outside of the building or to a special incombustible vent flue. In this vent pipe shall be placed an electric exhaust fan of approved size, so fitted as to permit of its examination or removal, and so connected that it can be controlled from within the booth or enclosure. The location of the fan, in all cases, shall be as the inspector may direct.

Section 14. For the exhibition of moving pictures in the open air, other than in a summer theater, the following specified Special Booth may be installed in place of the Standard Booth. The inside dimensions shall be not less than those of a No. 1 Standard Booth. The walls, ceiling and roof may be constructed of wood studding, ceiling joists and rafters, not less than 2"x4" and spaced not more than 2' 0" on centers; the walls and roof to be covered on the outside so as to be weatherproof. The interior shall be covered with sheets of asbestos wood or asbestos building lumber not less than ¼" in thickness, secured to the wall studding, ceiling joists and headers with 1" No. 10 round head screws with washers, spaced approximately 6" on centers, and all joints in the asbestos shall be filled with asbestos plastic cement. The floor, apertures and ventilation of booth shall be as specified for the Standard Booth. The booth shall be elevated at least 3' 6" above the ground and securely braced.

Section 15. The Portable Asbestos Booth shall be at least 6' 6" in height by 5' 0" square, and is designed for temporary use for one picture machine only. The frame shall be of standard pipe, angle ventilator trap and fittings, shall conform to the specifications herein set forth, and in each case shall be approved by the inspector. The four corner posts shall be of ¾" standard pipe, the eight horizontal members of ½" standard pipe, and the eight corner fittings of malleable iron or bronze casting, with braced corners. The ventilator trap shall be made of 1"x1"x⅛" angles on all sides, shall extend the full width of the top and 2" beyond the front of the top pipe, shall be securely hinged 1' 10" from the front, and the corners shall be braced with ⅛" gusset plate bolted to each angle with 3/16" bolts.

Section 16. The sides shall be of plain commercially pure asbestos cloth weighing not less than two pounds to the square yard, which shall be in one piece, long enough to lap over not less than 2' 0" where it comes together around the booth, and shall be not less than 7' 6" in width so as to lap on the floor; it shall be held in place by substantial metal hooks over the top pipe and with snap catches or asbestos cord on the bottom pipe, such hooks, bottom catches or cord to be not more than 8" on centers. The top shall be covered with asbestos cloth of the same quality as the sides, which shall be of sufficient size to hang down on all sides at least 8"; it shall be provided with metal hooks or asbestos cord which shall hook or lace onto the pipe, to hold it in place. The floor shall be covered with an asbestos mat of the same material not less than 1' 0" larger than the booth on all sides, and held in place when in use with heavy thumb tacks.

Section 17. The overlapping sides shall form the entrance and exit of the booth. All raw edges of asbestos cloth shall be bound or hemmed at least 1" deep.

Section 18. The angle ventilator described in section 15 shall be so arranged that it may be raised at least 1' 0" above the top pipe of the booth, and held by a toggle joint, or other approved device whereby, in case of accident, it can be instantly dropped.

Section 19. The apertures, two in number, one for the machine not more than 6" in height x 12" in width, and one for the operator not more than 12" in height x 6" in width, shall be provided with shutters sewed to curtain at the top of opening, and the lower edges of the same shall be weighted with 3/8" gas pipe, which shall be long enough to go the whole horizontal length of the shutter, and provided with cord and fusible link, as specified for the standard booth, running through a screw eye, or a ring attached to the pipe frame over the openings. All shutters shall be of size to lap over curtain at least 1½" on all sides.

Section 20. The inspector's certificate of approval of a standard booth or enclosure, together with a copy of the regulations, shall be conspicuously posted therein at all times, and no changes shall be made in the booth or enclosure, or in the apparatus without the approval of the inspector.

Section 21. Each portable booth shall be distinctly marked with the maker's name and the serial number in 2" block letters and figures, and the certificate of approval, together with a copy of the regulations, shall be in the care of the operator whenever the booth is being installed or used.

MACHINES AND WIRING.

Section 22. Where more than one machine is used they shall be placed as near as practicable to 3' 6" on centers, but the center of a machine shall be not less than 2' 0" from the wall of the booth. All machines shall be securely fastened to the floor, and no part shall come in contact with any inflammable or combustible material.

Section 23. The upper and lower magazines of a machine shall be constructed of sheet metal, shall be made tight without the use of solder, and shall each have two sets of metal rollers which shall fit as tightly as practicable to the film, as it passes out or in. The door to each shall be hinged and provided with a catch to hold it tightly closed.

Section 24. The arc lamp shall be covered with an iron box, so arranged as to catch all sparks and hot pieces of carbon, and all other lights in the booth or enclosure shall be covered by wire guards.

Section 25. The film reels shall be operated by a crank firmly secured to the spindle or shaft on head of the machine except on motor-driven machines.

Section 26. A shutter shall be placed in front of the arc, so as to be instantly closed when necessary.

Section 27. Electric motors may be used for operating only on such machines as are especially fitted and approved for such use, in accordance with the following requirements:

(A) The motor shall be securely attached to machine support, be satisfactorily enclosed, and separately fused and placed below the bottom line of lamp house.

(B) Electric current to operate both arc light and motor shall be controlled by one switch; an additional switch to control current to motor shall be installed, and so constructed as to spring open when not held closed by the operator.

(C) Both switches and the starting box shall be securely mounted on incombustible supports attached to the machine on the operating side, enclosed satisfactorily to the inspector and placed at least 1' 0" back from a perpendicular line of film exposure.

(D) The machine shall be so constructed or protected that while in operation, displaying a picture, the film cannot escape from the head enclosure or elsewhere except as the same is taken up by the lower magazine, and the crank shall be removed when motor-driven.

Section 28. Any change in the mechanism, or the alteration of any moving-picture machine, after it has been approved, tagged and sealed by an inspector, shall be cause for removal of the inspector's tag; and the removal of the inspector's tag shall prohibit the use of the machine in the Commonwealth.

Section 29. If auditorium lights are controlled from within the booth or enclosure, an additional emergency control shall be provided near the main exit of the auditorium, and kept at all times in good condition. All wires in booth or enclosure, except jumpers from the switch to rheostat, rheostat to lamp, and switch to lamp, shall be run in conduit with terminal bushings, junction boxes, outlet boxes and fuse boxes, with covers; all wire for machine lights to be not smaller than No. 6 for each arc, and, if more than one arc, are to be rated for 40 amperes per arc, and size figured by the latest underwriter's code. All jumpers above mentioned shall be asbestos-covered, stranded wire of size above mentioned, and fitted with terminals. One incandescent light will be allowed for each machine and one for the rewinding bench. All wire conduits in the booth or enclosure shall have porclain outlets and junction boxes, with covers screwed on. All angles, and where the conduit enters the junction box, shall be fitted with bushings. None but cartridge type of fuse shall be used inside the booth or enclosure, and of not over 45 amperes, unless by special permission of the inspector.

Section 30. Where wires for conveying electricity pass into, through, or rest upon any structure around the machine, ample insulation must be provided by the use of conduits, porcelain tubes or other insulating substance.

Section 31. All rheostats, resistance coils or other devices substituted for that purpose shall be properly insulated and secured in place, so that there will be no danger by overturning or short-circuiting the same. Such devices may be located in an accessible place outside the booth or enclosure, provided they are protected from all combustible material for a distance of 2' 0" on all sides by ¼" asbestos board, or that they are in a ¼" asbestos board box.

Section 32. No rotary converter, motor generator, or mercury arc rectifier will be allowed in any booth or enclosure, and no water rheostat shall be placed in any part of the building in which the machine is located.

OPERATOR.

Section 33. The wire attachments shall be inspected by the operator before every exhibition, and 125 volts shall be the maximum permitted for use in operating the machine.

Section 34. A switch for shutting off or controlling the electric current shall be provided, and so placed as to be ready for instant use by the operator.

Section 35. No pieces of films or loose combustible material shall be allowed to remain in the booth or enclosure, unless kept in a metal box made without solder; the booth or enclosure must be kept in a clean condition at all times.

Section 36. No smoking shall be permitted in the booth or enclosure, and no matches shall be allowed therein.

Section 37. No person shall be allowed within the booth or enclosure, except the owner, manager, operators or assistants employed therein, and the door of the booth or enclosure shall be kept closed during the time the public are admitted to the auditorium.

Section 38. Moving picture operators and assistants shall have their licenses or permits with them when employed in the booth or enclosure.

Section 39. Within twenty-four hours after the occurrence of any fire or accident within a booth or enclosure, the operator and manager of the exhibition shall send a written notice of said fire or accident to the chief of the district police, State House, Boston; and also to the inspector of the district in which the fire or accident occurred.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Section 40. No moving-picture exhibition shall be allowed in or upon any of the premises defined in section 1, chapter 791, Acts of 1914, until a license from the chief of the district police, or a certificate from an inspector, has been obtained for such premises; except, in the city of Boston, the license, certificate or permit is issued by the city authorities.

Section 41. A separate metal case, made without solder, and with tightly fitting cover, shall be provided for each reel of film when the same is not in the magazine or in the process of rewinding; or a combination box approved by the chief of the district police shall be provided for this purpose. All films must be repaired and rewound within the booth or enclosure.

Section 42. A fire extinguisher of the carbonic acid pattern shall be provided and located inside the booth or enclosure, ready for instant use.

Section 43. Carbon receptacles made of metal shall be used in the booth or enclosure, under such conditions and in such a way as the inspector shall direct.

Section 44. A spot-light may be allowed in the booth or enclosure upon special permission of the inspector, but the aperture for the same shall be not more than 12" square, and shall be supplied with a shutter, the same as the other apertures, hung with a separate cord and fusible link, and so arranged as to shut separately. This shutter shall be kept closed except when in actual use. No film shall be exposed in the booth during the time the spot-light is in operation.

Section 45. All members of the building inspection department of the district police are directed to enforce these regulations, and any violation of the laws of this Commonwealth relating to the exhibition of moving pictures, or of these regulations, shall be sufficient cause for prosecution, or for the immediate suspension or revocation of the license of the operator in charge of the second-class operator, or of the permit of the assistant.

Section 46. Permits in accordance with the provisions of section 12, chapter 791, Acts of 1914, may be granted by the chief of the district police for the special exhibition of moving pictures where the portable booth hereinbefore described is to be used: Provided, however, that only two such exhibitions may be given on any one date, one in the afternoon and one in the evening; that no one such exhibition shall exceed two and one-half hours in duration; and that no permit will be granted for any such building oftener than onee in any seven days. The application for a permit shall be made to the chief of the district police upon blanks to be furnished by him, and should be in his office at least one week before the date on which the exhibition is to be given. In the city of Boston, application should be made to the mayor, who may grant such permits in accordance with the provisions of chapter 280, Acts of the year 1913.

Section 47. When a cinematograph or similar apparatus, operated with only cellulose acetate films not more than 1¼" in width and requiring not more than 500 watts of electric current for the arc, is exhibited in or upon any of the premises defined in section 1, chapter 791, Acts of 1914, a mat made of plain commercially pure asbestos cloth, weighing not less than two pounds to the square yard, or its approved equivalent, shall be provided and placed under the machine; the mat to be of sufficient size to completely envelop the machine in case of accident.

Section 48. These regulations supersede all regulations heretofore promulgated relating to the exhibition of moving pictures.

The law specifically describes plans for "Standard and Portable Booths" cuts of which are subjoined.

101 BISON TO PRODUCE "OTHELLO."

William Clifford, leading man with the 101 Bison Company, and Sherman Bainbridge, heavy character with the same company, are busy rehearsing for an open-air production of "Othello," which is soon to be given at a garden fete on the lawn before the Hollywood mansions. In addition to overseeing the work of preparation and the rehearsing of the other members of the cast, Mr. Clifford is to appear in the part of Othello and Mr. Bainbridge in that of Iago, parts in which both players formerly worked before deserting the speaking stage.

KEANOGRAPH DINES SELZNICK.

During the recent Western trip of Louis J. Selznick a dinner was given in his honor by the officers and stockholders of the United Keanograph Film Manufacturing Company in San Francisco, Cal. C. R. Seeley, chief of the World Film sales department, was also present. Mr. Selznick talked of business conditions and the information he imparted was greatly appreciated.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

One Reason Why.

SEVERAL times we have had someone express wonder that the feature companies should have gotten so much business from the old line exchanges, even where the latter offer multiples. This extract from Real Reels answers:

> In the interests of your success we have a publicity man who will sit down with you in our office for an hour, if you need him, and thrash out with you your advertising problems.

Advertising is a special gift that not many exhibitors possess. The feature exchanges give advertising as well as film service. They help the exhibitor to make money with the stuff they rent him, in order that he may pay the larger rentals that features require. Of course that is not the only reason. Greater care in production is another and there are more, but being only human, the exhibitor appreciates the interest taken in his business.

The paragraph quoted, by the way, is taken from an "Extra" announcing the addition of a second string company, the Mountain States Features, to handle the Life Photo productions without confusing them with the Paramount and Notable handled by the Notable Feature Film Co. George Carpenter is the press agent meant, and he certainly makes good on his job, as most readers of this department already know.

Changed.

John R. Oldfield, who runs the Spotlight, the organ of the four Toomey and Demara enterprises in Lawrence, Mass., writes that he is changing from the page-to-a-theater make up, though the advertisers, who support the publication, like it better with all the house stuff on one page. We do not see what interest the advertisers have, unless it is that there are some who prefer the page given the dramatic house to that allotted one of the picture theaters or the vaudeville. At that each house has a headed page with the underline announcements, and that is all they need for a preferred position, while the use of one or more paragraphs for each house on every page gives all the theaters more of a chance. Mr. Oldfield sends in some of the more recent issues to show the improvement—and proves our point. He writes that he will be glad to exchange with other house organs. Steve Farrar, Colonial theater, Eldorado, Ill., recently asked exchanges so there is one to start with. Steve can get some good ideas from Mr. Oldfield's better make up and each will enjoy reading the other's personal shots.

One thing we like about Mr. Oldfield's house paragraphs is that they are not cut and dried. They do not start out: "Shot in the Spine, which is the feature at the Broadway next Tuesday," as too many do, but such a paragraph might begin: "There are said to be fifty men living in New York whose necks have been broken, although this injury is generally immediately fatal, but to live with a bullet imbedded in the spinal column is a more unusual medical phenomenon." These are mixed with local items and are read to the point of interest before the advertising becomes apparent. With a paper of such generous size it is possible to use many items that have no bearing on the house.

Overdone.

Perhaps an old circus man is doing the advertisement for the Apollo theater, Dayton, Ohio. Whoever is doing it overshoots the mark and gets so strong that he will not make appeal. Announcing the transfer to his house of the Universal service he styles them "The most live and paramount." Now Paramount is a perfectly good and non-copyrightable word and, we believe that it was not used to suggest the use of the Paramount Program as well, but perhaps some of the readers will be drawn by the Paramount announcement and, not finding them, will question all the statements made, just as others will not be impressed by the announcement that "The king dramatist, King Baggot, the romance absolute monarch, J. W. Kerrigan, the lovely Witch Girl, Mary Fuller," and other similarly adjectived stars "decide to play first at this beautiful theater."

That is too much straining for effect. Most persons will realize that the players have nothing whatever to do with the booking of the films, and instead of being impressive, the announcement of their "decision" will be a boomerang.

The greatest asset an advertisement writer can have is sincerity. It is all right to play up strongly proffered attractions but not to the point where the truthfulness of the writer will be questioned.

Been Cruising with Cabiria.

Now and then Frank Montgomery gets away from Jacksonville. He has been back in his old home town of Memphis with Cabiria, which was made the opening bill at Bridges & Tarleton's New Majestic. And he gleefully sends in a clipping from the Appeal-Avalanche, in which the film is played up above Nat Goodwin in person at a dramatic house. The Appeal-Avalanche is one of the conservatives and this relative placement is something of an achievement. Mr. Montgomery has reason for being proud. He adds:

> The New Majestic is the prettiest house I have ever seen, seating one thousand. The same owners have four houses here, all doing well under the proper sort of management. I had arranged for Memphis for Cabiria which accounts for my being here. Harry Raver treated me very nicely by sending on a new print. He certainly has adroitly handled this feature in America. Our new 1,500 seat house in Jax will open about March 15. Drop down and look it over.

We wish we could, but are afraid we shall have to send a telegram. Mr. Montgomery does not need even that to know we wish him all the luck possible, which is no more than he deserves.

He has done splendid work in putting pictures on their proper plane in the South Atlantic states.

Mystery Stuff.

Andrew M. Welliver, of the Grand theater, Williamsport, Pa., who has contributed several excellent ideas, sends in a layout for a recent "mystery" advertisement. The first, on Saturday, was the name of the house, the date for the following Thursday, a "?" and "Watch the daily papers next week." Monday the two column advertisement started off with title and Tuesday date and then: "On this day the management is spending a considerable sum of money to give the people of this city the biggest treat ever offered in Williamsport." This was three lines in six point and below the left hand side read in display, "We are going to give you," while on the right were sixteen items, one to a line, preceded by a "no," making each line read: "We are going to give you no cash prizes," or free tickets or automobile, or similar "business getter." The following day the "We are going to give you" was retained, but this time it was "something" and nine promises that piqued interest without explaining. The next day it was explained that the mysterious offering was a bill of two Broadway Star Features (five reels in all) and a Tom Mix Selig. The "today" advertisement was so set that "413," the title of one of the releases, and a large 3 and 2 indicating the number of reels, were the prominent feature, the effect of the numbers standing out from the mostly six and eight point stuff, being unusual and eye compelling. The second title was also shown in 24 point, but a condensed letter that showed but did not obtrude. This, of course, calls for a number instead of a word title, but it can be adapted to other uses where the number of reels can be played up. The one thing we do not like is that they only ask five cents for the quarter show. It would be all right to start the specials at five cents with the understanding that the next would be ten or twenty-five cents; indeed, in most instances it would work better this way than the free showing that many employ, but this stamps the Broadway features as of the five-cent grade in Williamsport.

The main point is that they did a capacity business.

Should Add Two.

Harry H. Rush sends in some of the programs he is getting out for the Broadway theater, Philadelphia, and asks for comment. He says he knows that a cream tint paper printed in brown would be better but that the house will not stand for the small advance in price.

We do not hold for any particular tint of paper and ink, though the combination mentioned is excellent, but we note that the advertisers have only lately been invited in and would suggest that the better the appearance of the program, the easier it is to procure advertising support. At that good advertising can be had for a black and white issue, if the medium is there.

Before the foreign advertising was run the issue was four pages. Now it is a six-page railroad. It would be better to make it an eight, even if it has to be pasted and stitched at an extra expense. The railroad folder is good form for a card not too large, but the Broadway has a paper program with pages six by nine inches. This is too large for the railroad style.

The titles are well displayed, standing well out from the page, but too much type is used and it is too badly crowded into the space. Only a pronounced fan will read all of the lines, and these do not matter as much as the occasional patron who is to be tempted. One reason for the forbidding look of the page is that it is all display instead of reading. One face and possibly two heights for titles and straight reading looks better on a full page program than a jumble of several faces and heights. If Mr. Rush will take the program for the week of February 15th for example and compare the section for the 18th with that for the 19th or 20th he will get an idea of what we mean, not that the former is good, but is better than the latter. Fewer styles of type, fewer breaks and more straight matter will help more than a change of stock and ink. The advantage of straight matter is that while it might contain a greater number of words, the uniformity makes it easier to read and the mind does not instinctively recoil from what seems to be a task.

Another "Outsider."

Another outside program is to be added to the growing list. Miss Reda S. Rauch, of Des Moines, gets out an eight page program for the Garden theater, calling it Garden Chat. The weekly issue is 3,000 distributed in the house on Saturday and Sunday. Her profit comes from the advertising and she writes that so large a percentage of the issue is taken home that it is not difficult to obtain the outside advertisements. The house gets the text on the two middle pages under the general head of "What's Comin' to You," and mention in the notes. Each title is uniformly set and boxed in with one point rule, the letter press being ten point roman. Department store initials are used to start each story. On pages six and seven are a few notes, local or general, as circumstances seem to require, and on the second and third pages she runs a "colyum" of personal chat. The text is well written and here the only suggestion to be offered is that it be set in eight point to let more in on the personal chat and notes, leaving the theater notes as they stand. Of course this means more money for the printer, but in the long run it should mean more money for advertising space, for the matter is brightly written and, given more of it, the public will like it even better. Now it is too short. The writer (and reader, too) comes to the end before the interest can be fully developed. Miss Rauch writes briskly, and there is no reason why presently she should not have a larger issue covering more of the theaters. As it stands she could save a little money on her paper stock. It is better than is necessary either for effect or endurance. It is a nice, clean looking issue, without an excess of black type in the advertisements and yet with excellent display. The only thing we really do not like about it is the piano insert. Inserts are messy. This insert splits the house stuff, which is always bad. But at that, it is not as bad as the beer label insert that programs in several towns employ. This clip will give an idea of the style of the announcements. It is different from lifting the manufacturers' announcements and then leaving half out because there is not room for all of it:

> If George Randolph Chester had consulted me when he wrote "Runaway June," he would have named it "Disappearing June," or "The Thirty-first of June." You think it is the last of June when the curtain drops on each episode. At the end of Episode Three, which will be reeled off at the Garden this Thursday, June has made another escape from a cheap boarding house, the man with the Van Dyke (whose taxi bill must be enormous unless he is where they have those new jitney busses) is still following faint clues and June's husband is also on the trail. This installment of "Runaway June" marks a period in the story where any uncertainty as to the permanent interest of the serial vanishes. Be prepared for a breathless run.

Better, Yes?

Don't you think that this, from the Haynic D. K., is better than the time-honored "perfect projection?" It drives it home. Use it, then make good for it:

> He stood in the lobby watching the picture one evening last week and then he said, "Why is it that in some theaters I have to move around until I find the right spot where my eyes focus with the picture, while in the Haynic I can sit in any part of the house and get a beautifully clear picture without a trace of flicker or eye strain? Do you get that? Focusing his eyes with the picture! Ouch! We felt like calling for help to try to recapture our goat. When we recovered our breath we explained to him that in the Haynic, we focus the picture; that for his fifteen cents we furnish him something in addition to a well balanced program of excellent pictures—pictures in good condition—good stories eloquently told in wordless langauge by the world's greatest delineators of character—and that something is projection. That means that we use intelligent effort to make our pictures clear, distinct, steady and flickerless. That our efforts are crowned with success is amply proven when you compare Haynic pictures with those shown anywhere else on earth.

Scrapping with Kell.

John William Kellette takes issue with us on the comment that he was not playing the Thanhouser players up strong enough in his billing. He says:

> Taking issue with you on the 60 point stuff. To New Rochelleans Thanhouserites are not the drawing power that any one of them would be in a place where they have been seen but not heard. And this is the reason:
> Take Harry Benham, for instanceee. Every kid, even, in the city knows Harry. Their daddies know him. Harry is an Elk and a Mason. Every night that he can get away he is at one place or another. At their functions he sings. His singing is not a drawing power to those who know him, yet he has a wonderful baritone voice—so good that he was lead in Madame Sherry and other productions of like character. I play faces up bigger than names. Sixty point screams. It looks like an advertisement for a blacksmith shop.
> Now. Give me Mary Pickford, Clara Kimball Young, or any other player WHO DOES NOT LIVE IN, EAT IN, MINGLE, PLAY and FRATERNIZE in NEW ROCHELLE life, and I'll give them a ten-line spread.
> I won't use a billboard in the residential section near the theater. The inhabitants therein would resent it. I may be wrong, but the crowds coming show that I am right. I have, for steady patrons, Dr. Read and his family. He never attended a picture show regularly before. He takes his tickets and simply says: "I expect to be called." An usher takes him to his seat. If it is an urgent call, we break the picture and flash a slide—"Dr. Read is wanted." The picture is resumed. Dr. Read comes back again because he knows that he'll be called to the phone if he's wanted. If the call is not urgent, an usher goes to him and whispers. It's up to the doctor to do as he thinks best in that case. Get me?
> On the outside, at the window, I have a sheet hung up—"Time Table":
> 7:30—The Double Deception—Majestic.
> 7:50—Sammy's Moving Day—Gaumont.
> 8:00—Mr. Week's Nightmare— Gaumont.
> 8:10—Hogan, the Porter—Keystone.
> 8:30—Through the Murk, 2 reels—Domino.
> 9:06—The Double Deception.
> 9:24—Sammy's Moving Day.
> 9:31—Mr. Week's Nightmare.
> 9:40—Through the Murk.
> This tip came from you and it's a good one. The difference in time comes from running slides on the house and changing pictures.
> I have a union pianist, and she's a good one. I have taught her to add to the pictures, rather than to detract from. Her music is simply a suggestion, and is never loud. She plays in the dark, except when she plays overtures, which come previous to all performances, and lasts about five minutes. Her overtures range from Wieniawski's "Valse de Concert," "Valse Brilliante," Chopin, Moszkowski's "Orchestra de Suite," "Valse, op. 34, No. 1," to Medley of ballads.
> It's "highbrow" stuff, but the audience likes it, if applause means anything.
> Go to me hard. I want it. I like it. If we can agree, I'll adopt the suggestion. If I cannot, I'll sit down and tell you why not. Isn't that fair enough? Yours attentively, "Kell."

Why?

Taking up that suppositious Dr. Read, first of all, we don't like the idea. We don't see why Dr. Read should be permitted to stop the show and advertise his business. If he wants to be called, let him register at the box office. Let the usher note where he sits on a card. If a call comes, tell him. Not meaning to throw rocks at the medical profession, calls are not so apt to come in if they are not advertised on the screen. If Dr. Read is a new patron and comes in without letting the manager know, then, perhaps, it is well enough to flash the slide, but a sign on the box office window to the effect that physicians are requested to register would do the trick. Since seats are not reserved, perhaps it would be well to give the physician a card which he hands to the usher, after filling in his name. The usher seats him, notes on the card that he is sitting in the tenth row, right hand side of the center aisle and returns the card to the person at the phone. The rest is easy.

As to the popular players, the argument Mr. Kellette makes is well taken, but we think that he knows the players so intimately that he does not realize that even in a small town like New Rochelle there are many who might want to see the players and who do not know them. Kell knows them, but he doesn't pay to get in.

The stand on bill boards is well taken, but surely there are some locations where they could be used. The best point is that the pianist does not play obtrusively. Even now we recall with a shudder about five years ago when we had to visit one of the Keith houses daily and listen to the pianist and drummer racing each other on "Turkey in the Straw" or something like that, no matter what was on the screen. The idea seemed to be that whoever got sixteen bars ahead of the other first won that heat. It was torture.

Realism.

S. C. Saffiell, of the Talbot theater, Indianapolis, worked in a bit of realism when he started the Runaway June Series. It will be remembered that the story starts with a wedding, and so he found a couple who were willing to be married on the stage to get the audience in the proper frame of mind. Of course the marriage on the stage idea is old, but it gets a new punch when handled in this fashion. We hope the idea is held to weddings and not run over to funerals and things.

Follows Copy.

T. C. Breene, of the Gamble theater, Huntingdon, W. Va., sends in the first issue of the program he is getting out for the house, which is under the management of T. A. Westbrooke. He asks for comment, but, as it is a Hennegan cover with a close following of the Hennegan model layout inside, there seems to be no need for comment. About all that can be said is that they have closely followed an excellent model, which is more than some have done with Hennegan covers.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

At the Inquest.

FOR the last three meetings the weather has been against the Inquest Club, but a fairly decent panel of jurymen showed up for the inquiry the other night and were rewarded with a couple of dramas that were comedies, and a comedy that was anything but funny. Marc Edmund Jones was in Bermuda, but his latest "light" story was properly pulled to pieces and he was also indirectly responsible for one of the amusing dramas, because he had his back turned while it was being made and didn't kill the director when he saw the mess. Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice made her adieux to the club, as she is leaving for the west and was given the best wishes of the members. An interesting but not notable discussion was had and the club adjourned to meet at the Savoy theater Monday, March 1.

More Selig Hints.

Here are more suggestions from the Selig Company that apply to more than this company. They should be read with interest. Too many, far too many, persons write stories rather than photoplays.

There seems to be a hit-or-miss policy in vogue with many authors of motion picture comedies and dramas. Not enough study is given the requirements of the screen. For example, the requirements of the Board of Censors of Motion Pictures are very important and hundreds of otherwise excellent stories are rejected because the demands of the censors have not been realized by the authors. The sooner the writers realize that writing for motion pictures is not a lottery but a profession, the better it will be for many ambitious to succeed along this line.

Physicians, lawyers, chemists and other professionals keep up-to-date in the details of their vocations. The writer of the motion picture story must do likewise if he wishes to achieve unusual success.

The policies of the manufacturers are constantly changing. The type of story in demand today may be rejected tomorrow. Many conditions go to cause this fact, but public inclination seems to be the prime factor.

"We cannot urge too strongly upon the writers to make a careful study of the requirements of the various Boards of Motion Picture Censors," said the head of the Selig Polyscope Company editorial department recently. There is the National Board of Censors and also the State Boards in Pennsylvania, Ohio and elsewhere. Exaggerated scenes of the underworld, murders, stabbings, shootings and other violent action must be handled most carefully to be at all available. In fact, it is preferred that such action be eliminated absolutely. There are enough appealing and forceful plots to be found in other walks of life without descending to the depths in the fond but mistaken belief that such atmosphere lends force to a story. Cruelty to animals is another subject that should be watched with care. Scenes in which it is believed animals of any kind are harshly treated are not counterbalanced by the Ohio censors, and others. Although the Selig Company releases many animal stories, action in which animals are abused and otherwise mistreated is not desirable.

The Selig Company is in the market for unusual dramas and comedies of all kinds. So-called slap-stick comedy, carrying a series of supposedly funny incidents and no plot, are not wanted. First readings are required by this company, which pays highest market prices and gives screen credit to the deserving.

He's Wrong.

Now and then William Lord Wright will step on a banana peel and slip up. He says the question most frequently asked is how to write scripts. This is not so. That is question number two. The most frequent one—and we think he will agree with us—is "I have just written a photoplay. Where can I sell it?" This is before they even begin to dream that what they have done is not a photoplay.

It Is Confusing.

Lately a chap wrote that he was going to study the pictures on the screen. He did. This is the result, suppressing names, since these are no worse than the others, and therefore not deserving of being singled out:

Speaking of photoplay writing, did you ever go through the starvation period when your best ones are prisoners and your worst ones are tourists? I'm hitting it strong right now—just after a period of sales, last summer. Just the same, I've got some mighty nice letters of honest criticism from the editors, and expect I shall turn it to good account later on.

Summarizing the criticism, however, I find I have been guilty of "Improbable Plot," Insufficient Action, Slapstick Comedy (no more wanted), "Has been done before," "Too many reels."

Happy thought. I will go to a picture show and analyze the pictures carefully and find just how to correct these defects. Analysis of the show:

Rivals for girl. Play cards for her—one cheats—the other catches him—later. The wronged one is caught in a burning yacht—wireless for aid caught but ignored by No. 1. No. 1 gets girl. Drowned man operates wireless and promises presence on wedding day. Makes good, forces No. 1 to shoot the deck again for the girl. No. 2 wins. Girl drowned in accident. Last scene—2 drowned ones go back arm in arm into the ocean.

Comment—I shall hereafter confine myself to probable plots like the above.

An old maid in an attic ruminates over her past, which consists of her lover abandoning her and marrying the city girl. Reverie too much for the old maid, who perishes.

Comment—My scripts shall hereafter be an allegro type like this. No more "Insufficient action."

Leak in the bathroom. Plumber calls, steals all the liquor available, when tanked he manages to melt more pipes, floods the cellar, and attempts to drown all who object to his mild co(a)rse of action.

Comment—I shall produce comedy scripts which combine laughable situations with dignity of action—like the above.

Farmer discovers he's an orator and gets elected to Congress. His wife doesn't keep pace with him socially until a modish dressmaker gets hold of her, and makes a bird out of her.

Comment—I really must cultivate the expansive quality of mind that can make four reels out of this very original idea.

The writer does not explain that there may have been a reason for the trouble, but it is confusing to be told not to do a thing and then see that self-same editor doing it. Sometimes it is because the boss wants it, sometimes because the producer puts one over. Lately we saw an excessively poor story, and the excuse was that the editor was busy with other stuff and the producer and his assistant wrote and produced the story. If we had that company there would be two complete vacancies, but nothing was done.

When you see the junk remember that there must be the stated number of releases a week and that manufacturers have the foolish idea that everything that gets to the negative stage must be released, to save money. Sometimes more would be saved were a release passed.

Just Imagine.

Here is part of the opening of a late Elbert Moore letter, which follows his "positively last" chance to become a millionaire:

Let me warn you!

Of course you are the best judge of what is best for you, but REMEMBER THIS . . .

If you postpone answering this letter you will be giving up forever all chance of entering the most interesting and profitable profession in the world—writing photoplays.

The idea of being that if you do not send your money right away he'll get mad at you and refuse you as a pupil and you'll never learn how to write. Surely not even the boobs will be impressed by this supreme example of egotism.

Fatal.

We know a man who used to write excellent comedies, but he fell in love and since then his comedies have been passed up, but his dramas are more in demand. There must be a moral in here somewhere, but we leave it to the reader to decide whether it is stay single and write comedy or fall in love and do dramas.

That Essanay Contest.

Several writers have made inquiry about the delayed decision in the Essanay-Tribune prize contest. Mrs. Parsons, of the Essanay staff, writes, in reply to an inquiry:

We have had so many manuscripts come in for the Tribune-Essanay Contest, that it has been impossible to give a decision on the prize winning scenario by February 1st. We feel in fairness to the contributors, that we must read carefuly all of the scenario submitted, and we expect to announce the winner just as soon as the judges decide which is the best scenario. The contest will undoubtedly be settled within a few weeks. I believe the Tribune intends to run an article in next Sunday's paper explaining this.

Stung Again.

Replying to an advertisement in the Motion Picture Story Magazine, we had a friend send forty-five cents to R. J. Hyde, Morton Building, Chicago, for a book purchased by him "at an absurd price." What came back was an eight page pamphlet of which one page and three lines were devoted to advice and the rest to the reproduction of a sample script, with this fine climax:

39—Gate or pretty exterior. Hugh enters—disconsolate—Alicia enters—reconciliation.

It is the number two book of the Enterprise company, and is about as helpful as an old-fashioned high wheel bicycle to an armless and legless wonder. They have a second book, "How to Write Photoplays that Sell," instead of the plain "How to Write Photoplays." We wonder what the difference is—outside of 65 cents.

Universal Stuff.

No, this does not refer to the wants of the Universal company, but to the idea so many have that a good story is equally good anywhere. They are not. Most writers, practically all, have a style or type of story they prefer to write, just as most companies, in spite of their efforts to get out a general program, prefer certain lines. If the authors match their style with the company they find a good market, but too many try to sell on the hit and miss plan of sending everywhere in the hope of selling somewhere. A traveling salesman for a shoe manufacturer does not visit all of the groceries in the towns he "makes." He prefers to show his line to those dealing in shoes, but an author will send the same story to Biograph that he does to Keystone, not realizing that a Biograph drama and a Keystone comedy are two different things. For that matter, Biograph and Keystone comedies are not on the same structural lines, and the same story seldom appeals to both. Study the production, see if you cannot sense the underlying thought and you may save a lot of postage stamps. There is no such thing as a story that will appeal to all companies.

Direct Action.

Be direct in your action. Keep along. Don't take three scenes where one will do. One recent release showed the homecoming of a prodigal brother. There was the girl he loved before he went to the city and married the right woman. There were also the girl's sister, his brother (married to the sister), their child and the wanderer's child. The wanderer comes up to the window and listens to a song that brings back old memories. The scenes look something like this:

A—Window—Wanderer enters. Listens.
B—Living room—Brother, wife, sister and children listening to phonograph.
C Window as in A—Wanderer listening—moved to tears—about to move away.
D—Living room—Brother hears noise—goes to window. Looks out.
E Window—Wanderer turning away—Brother appears in window—recognition—Brother tells wanderer to wait.
F—Living room—Brother turns from window—speaks to others—leaves room.
G—Window—Brother comes up—greets Wanderer—leads him out.
H—Living room—Brother leads Wanderer in—&c.

This makes eight scenes required to get the man into the house. It is too long. Better would have been this:

A—Window—Wanderer enters—listens at window—
B—Living room—Family on listening to phonograph—
C—Window—Wanderer moved to tears—about to move away—Brother appears at window—recognition—Brother shouts—others to window—all call him to enter—Brother helps wanderer in.
D—Living room—the action is played to its conclusion.

This cuts the number of scenes in half and cuts down some, but not all, of the surplus footage. But the closing scene is the reunion of the Wanderer with the girl he has earlier spurned, while the other family occupy the other half of the stage. It might have been better yet to have worked the action more like this:

A—Front of house—Mother enters with phonograph—sister follows with children—the mother starts the machine.
Leader—"Love's Old, Sweet Song."
B—Gateway—Wanderer comes in—stands at gate—moved by sounds.
C—Front of house—Flash of scene as above.
D—Back to B—Wanderer weeps—Brother enters, coming to house—surprised to see supposed tramp—Wanderer rouses—turns—they confront each other—recognition—Brother throws arm about other's shoulders—starts to lead him to house—Wanderer unwilling, but still wants to go. They exit to house.
E—Front of house—all rise and look curiously as Brother and Wanderer enter—Sister retreats behind vines on porch—Wanderer greets Mother—and his little niece—looks at other—half guesses—"Yes, it is your little daughter"—Wanderer kneels and embraces child—Brother looks about—sees sister—goes and gets her—brings her down—Wanderer sees—hardly dare hope for forgiveness—stands—Brother takes child and wife—into house—slowly Sister relaxes—takes outstretched hands of Wanderer—they sink to their knees with the child between them—fade out.

Here the suggestion of eavesdropping and the awkward situation of the entrance are replaced by more proper and more natural action, and a better climax is worked up, too, better because it is more direct. See if you cannot change some of your plays.

Acquitted.

Replying to a late comment regarding a political story in which an author supposedly had his Mayor-elect hero appoint a secretary after his induction into office, the writer of the story submits a carbon of his script where it is shown that the appointment immediately follows the election. It is evident that the error crept in when these scenes were out to get inside the footage and were not replaced by any other explanatory matter.

This is one explanation of the lapses that so frequently occur. The author may have his facts properly lined up, but some cutting man drops a scene without realizing its importance, and the story is killed. The cutting should be a work performed with the most extreme care. Too often it is done by some minor employee with no sense of literary or dramatic values.

And then some manufacturers wonder why their stuff is not as popular as they think it should be.

Several Ways.

No writer who cannot think of more than one way to swing a story will ever become a good writer. We've been wrestling with a chap who thought that by showing a party he would avoid time leaders and breaks in action. Because he started out thinking so, we are still arguing with him. To him this is the one and only way. He'll never be a writer until he can forget his party and see that the girl's sweetheart coming to visit her will be just as good, for all practical purposes, as a lot of extra people at three dollars each.

Your story is never finished until it is sold and produced, and in that period there is no time when it cannot be changed, and most always to advantage, but if you have a narrow gauge, one-track brain you'll not be able to see more than one idea at a time, and so you'll not do really good work. The most valuable asset an author can have, next to imagination, is an adaptable mind. If you start to write a cowboy story that really should be a society play, be able to change it. Don't be capable of but a single thought.

If you were in a room in a burning house with windows on three sides and the window you always told yourself you would escape by in case of fire was stuck, would you burn up or try one of the other windows? It is the same way with ideas. Have more than one way out.

Just a Dream.

Sometimes we wish we could judge of the Photoplay Circuit Court. We would enjoy sitting on the bench in a black silk gown and saying:

"Author at the bar, you are charged with using a 'terrible" snow storm as a reason for your heroine getting lost. Your sole plea is that it looked picturesque. You are hereby sentenced to put on your own picture and make a retake if there is static in your camera."

After a few shrieking wretches were dragged out of court we imagine that the rest of the authors would rush home and do a lot of changing on their scripts.

And by that token we saw that "terrible snow storm" in a script not an hour ago and the only real excuse for it was laziness—if laziness of imagination can be called an excuse. Snow storms are easy to write, but if you had to produce them, too, it would be another matter.

Just the Reason.

"Because the theme is so improbable, I did not suppose that I needed to bother about the action," is the excuse an author makes for not giving probability to the action of a story.

He is wrong. Precisely because he does offer a wildly improbable theme, which we are asked to accept seriously is just the reason why. The more highly improbable a story is, the more reasonable should it be made to SOUND.

The story that offers true-to-life suggestions in every factor of itself carries conviction, but where an extravagant idea is to be made as convincing as possible, it is necessary to get convincingness through the seriousness of its treatment. Of course a frankly extravagant theme should be treated as a fantasy. Such stories as the Oz series gain in effect through the absolute unreality of the atmosphere, but an idea wildly improbable that can be funny only if accepted as the most serious fact must be given the most careful treatment in order that the local color shall supply as far as possible the lack inherent in the idea.

Fact stories almost automatically supply their own convincingness, but if you write a story of a man who makes a fortune selling a patent filling for charlotte russe out of the second hand soap bubbles that he buys cheap at barber shops and laundries, you must treat the action with the utmost gravity, making the story all the funnier through the semblance of probability.

Studying.

Perhaps he does not mean it just that way, but a correspondent writes that he has read our "Technique of the Photoplay" twice and can we recommend to him some good book on photoplay writing. In view of the fact that he also says he has found Technique an excellent book, we gather that he wants to do more reading, so we suggested that he read Technique through several times. It is not reading but study that counts. Often a reader will not assimilate a book under a dozen readings. Some never get the real message. They read the words but do not get the sense. It is not so much the number of books you read but the thoroughness with which you study any good book that really counts. One book mastered is better than a whole shelf full of books read through, but hardly understood.

Those Clipped Scripts.

Only four readers have responded to the request for examples of clipped stories, and of the four but one exhibit really qualifies. The offer is withdrawn.

At the same time we are glad to be able to announce that it is likely that the chief offender in this respect will presently show a change.

Please do not send in clipped scripts.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form. The second half of the questions, seventy-six in number, will be ready for distribution within a few days. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without study.

Question No. 75.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is meant by a temperature co-efficient, and how would you apply it? For instance: If your rheostat at 76 degrees F., offers 2 ohms resistance, what will its resistance be when its temperature is 500, the wire being "climax," having a resistance fifty times that of copper, with a temperature co-efficient of .0004? What would be the working limit of temperature in a rheostat. At what temperature will resistance begin to show red in a dark room?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 69.

The Roll of Honor on Question 69 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; J. I. Roberts, Nashville, Tennessee; Harry W. Seward, Reading, Pennsylvania; J. J. Kam, Lancaster, Pennsylvania; George Rowley, Austin, Texas; F. W. Carter, Nashville, Tennessee; Homer Ducharme, Springfield, Massachusetts; W. H. Brooks, Canton, Pennsylvania; J. D. Maddux, Spokane, Washington; C. W. Brown, East Dedham, Massachusetts, and P. S. Sanford, Sacramento, California.

I have selected the reply of Brother Larmour, supplemented by Friend Crawford's reply because he differentiates between the necessary and unnecessary loss in rheostatic resistance.

Reply to Question No. 69.

By M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

The Question:

Speaking of a projection circuit, what is meant by the "loss in the resistance"? Explain in detail. Can this loss be entirely avoided? Is resistance always necessary? Explain in detail.

The Answer:

The pressure lost or dissipated in delivering the required amperage to the arc at arc voltage constitutes the "loss in resistance" within the meaning of the question. For example: Let us assume a line voltage of 110, and that 45 amperes D. C. is required at the arc. Taking 48 as the arc voltage we have a loss in resistance equal to 110 — 48 = 62 volts, which represents the voltage broken down by or dissipated in the resistance. If we multiply this voltage loss by the amperage we will have the loss expressed in watts, or multiplying 110 × 45 we have a total wattage consumption of 4950, of which we only get the benefit in light of 48 (arc voltage) × 45 = 2160 watts, the difference, 2790, being consumed or dissipated in the resistance. This loss cannot be entirely avoided, though it is possible to materially reduce it in several ways. When using A. C. it may be very nearly eliminated by the use of a transformer, known as a compensarc, inductor, or economizer, or other apparatus of similar nature which steps the line voltage down to the arc voltage with but very slight loss. It is also possible to accomplish the same end by means of a choke coil, although the choke coil is not quite as economical as the transformer, nor are the general results from it as desirable as from the transformer. It is also possible when using A. C. to employ a mercury arc rectifier or motor generator set, which, by different methods, reduce the line to the arc voltage. But, in these machines, while there is no direct loss in resistance, there is still considerable loss nevertheless, averaging from 25 to 35 per cent. With D. C. the only practical method, aside from rheostatic resistance, is to install a D. C. to D. C. "economizer," or "compensarc," a device which reduces line voltage to arc voltage without any resistance in series with the arc. The loss in these machines is 25 to 45 per cent., caused by mechanical and electrical friction in the machine itself. It is also possible to use an ordinary generator of 60 volt pressure and thus very largely reduce the loss as against higher line voltage, but not less than 60 volts is necessary because of the fact that with the ordinary generator it is necessary to have some resistance in series with the arc in order to form a "cushion" therefore, otherwise, when the carbons were brought together when striking the arc a dead short circuit would be established, which would create trouble, and, moreover, it would be impossible to handle the arc in a way to produce good, steady projection light, and this necessary resistance together with the internal loss within the machine itself would amount to almost, if not quite, as much as loss in a rheostat taking current from a 110 volt line, provided the generator is being driven by power from service lines.

Recapitulation: "Loss in resistance," within the meaning of the question, means the energy dissipated in the rheostat. This loss cannot be entirely avoided, particularly with direct current. Resistance, as such, within the meaning of the question, is not necessary (use transformer instead) with alternating current, but is always necessary with direct current, except where a generator of special design is employed. The loss with A. C. may be reduced to about 3 per cent. but with D. C. it will of necessity be much greater.

Reply to Question No. 69.

By W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Answer:

My reply is confined to D. C., since the use of rheostatic resistance on A. C. is altogether too wasteful to even be considered. Accepting 48 as the average D. C. arc voltage, it is necessary to furnish a cushioning, or steadying resistance for the arc, and this cannot be accomplished except the pressure of the supply be not less than 60 to 70 volts, but all pressure above 60 to 70 volts is unnecessary in a projection circuit, and must be reduced in a rheostat. This unnecessary energy dissipates itself in the form of heat. It is registered on the meter and must be paid for by the consumer, therefore it represents loss. I call the energy above 60 to 70 volts real loss, but the dissipation of energy below 60 to 70 volts is necessary to the proper handling of the projection arc, therefore, since it serves an excellent purpose, and is, in fact, imperative, this dissipation of voltage does not constitute real loss. The real loss can be entirely avoided by the use of a motor generator set which will furnish pressure at the 60 to 70 volts needed. But resistance is not always necessary, since there is one type of generator which furnishes current at arc voltage and automatically controls the arc without the aid of resistance.

I have quoted Brother Crawford's reply by reason of the fact that he differentiates between "real loss" and "necessary loss," which is a very good point, but he is, nevertheless, in error if he means that the real loss can be entirely avoided by the use of a motor generator set. That is not true, by reason of the fact that there is internal loss in such sets amounting to from 25 to 45 per cent., as set forth by Friend Larmour. No motor generator set is made which will show an efficiency greater than 75 per cent., I believe, and very few, if any of them, will reach that high standard.

Topeka, Kansas, has the following to say:

Have just read your article, January 16th issue, entitled "Twelve Reels for a Nickel," and note your comment. I am only a picture fan, but I read the World every week, and must say here in Topeka things are very nearly as bad as they are in Syracuse. There is only one real photoplay house in the city, viz.: the "Iris." I have yet to see a poor picture in that particular theater. They are always bright and clear, and the management never rushes them, although I have several times had to wait outside for half an hour or longer. Enclosed find page of daily paper showing moving picture theaters' advertisements. We have a twelve-reel show at one of our theaters, scheduled to run two hours. You can imagine the kind of shoot-em-through proposition it is. (I should say so. Twelve reels in 120 minutes—10 minutes to the reel. Good morning, Carrie! Some show—I don't think.—Ed.) In your comment on Syracuse you refer to a two ring circus. Well in one of the advertisements you will note we have that identical animal in this city. Another theater runs five reels and two vaudeville acts for a nickel. Were it not for the Iris I don't know what we picture fans would do for a first class show. I don't know anything about projection, but I will say that the Iris should compliment itself on the excellence of their operator. He runs his pictures so that they are produced more nearly true to life than any I have yet seen; also they run straight through without a break, as if they were all in one roll. I don't know how this is done, but the pictures are certainly put on in good shape. I apologize for taking your time, but I am a lover of first class pictures and believe these things should be taken care of. The motion picture industry seems to be in need of a Pure Food Law. The idea of taking a man's money and then grinding the film through in a manner which turns the whole thing into a farce is outrageous, and ought to be against the law. I hope your good work will eventually better these conditions.

"The Best Theater" advertises: "Only Two Ring Picture Circus in America. Continuous 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. Nine big silent acts. Five cents." I do not wish to comment on this matter at this time, more than to say that while the writer wishes his name withheld for business reasons, still it is appended to the letter, which bears every evidence of being written in good faith. Moreover, I have had criticisms of Topeka before. I compliment the Iris and its operator. That is the kind of a report that makes me feel good. I bet dollars to doughnuts the Iris does not have to put on twelve reels for a nickel to get business. The continuous performance is made possible by using two projectors, very carefully framing the picture when threading the idle machine and starting one machine as the other is projecting the last few feet of its film.

Heat Waves Again.

S. E. Shaw, Ithaca, New York, writes:

Friend Daly, issue January 16th, is correct as to the disturbance on the screen caused by heat waves. I believe the following is the explanation. Heated air from the radiator rises because its density is less than that of the surrounding colder air. The hot air rises in more or less irregular masses and, as every operator who has followed the department must by this time know, when a ray of light passes from a medium of one density to a medium of different density, it is refracted, or, in other words, its direction is changed. But for this fact there could not be any such thing as a lens. In this case the rays of light coming from the projector must pass through hot air of different density than the medium in which it has been traveling, with resultant deflection, the effect of which is shown on the screen. Since the heated air is traveling upward, and constantly changing its path, the effect on the screen is peculiar. It is more noticeable in light subjects than in dark ones, this by reason that the contrast of the dark lines and screen intensity is greater. With a dense film its motion blends into the motion of the subject on the screen, and thus reduces its conspicuousness. One possible remedy would be to place a fan near the radiator in such a way that the hot air would be forced one side, and thus rise out of the field of the projector. In closing let me wish to you and your department every possible success.

The fan scheme would work, of course, but it is hardly practicable in the theater, because the air would be of necessity driven to one side against a portion of the audience, which would be very disagreeable. Brother Shaw's explanation is very complete, and, although we have something like a dozen others, we will, I think, call the subject closed.

Architect Complains.

L. B. Weinman, architect, Fort Worth, Texas, complains that he was not treated justly in the article headed "Another High Class Operating Room," page 218, January 9th issue. Mr. Weinman says, regarding the theater in question:

The plans were made for a 50-foot throw and a 14.4-foot picture, lens 3⅜ inches; operating room is on the roof, facing entrance; main screen over entrance; house is two stories, and very similar to Philips' Theater No. 1, on which the State Code of Texas of moving pictures was modeled. On this house I was the architect, without interference from others, and the throw is practically the same as that originally laid out for the house criticised, and in this house the picture is perfect, and the critic, on the face of his knowledge of Philips' No. 1, is ready to "knock" the architect. In his article he is lavish in his praise of the house and the operating room particularly, which contradicts his statement that architects should not be consulted in the erection of a moving picture house, but the planning should be left to the judgment of a cub operator and manager. I would be pleased if this intelligent soul would pick out the faults and accompany it with a more thorough explanation of how he would have remedied them. The writer says that various parts of the house construction should be left to the manager, a policy which I have followed in the past, where the manager's ideas were within reason, but in this instance the manager has caused changes to be made against the wishes of the architect, and these changes have always been detrimental to the building in general; also to the discredit of the architect. For instance, the manager caused the floor to be raised towards the rear 8 inches, thereby changing the sight lines so as to cut the view of the screen from the rear of the house 18 inches. after he had done this he caused the screen to be lowered and brought forward 5 feet 6 inches, and this is the cause of the 4½ inch to the foot drop. Also the lens of the machines were made for a 50-foot throw, so that the rays are out of focus 5 feet 6 inches.

I do not think that Friend Weinman states things correctly when he says that the writer of the letter in question intimated that architects should not be consulted in the erection of moving picture theaters, but that the erection should be left to "cub operators and the manager." For Mr. Weinman's benefit, let me say that all operators and managers are not cubs—far from it. I venture the assertion that we have both operators and managers who can tell Mr. Weinman a great many things concerning correct operating room planning and locating that he has never even thought of. I would like to not only question, but dispute, Mr. Weinman's statement that the effect in Philips' Theater is "perfect." That is an optical and physical impossibility, since projection can only be perfect when the lens is exactly central with the screen, up and down and sideways, and when the audience views the picture as nearly as possible from the plane of projection. Mr. Weinman also displays a weakness in optical knowledge when he says "the lens was made for a 50-foot throw; therefore, the rays are out of focus 5 feet 6 inches." It is hardly worth while explaining in detail to Mr. Weinman the reason why his statement on this point is not only incorrect, but absolutely wrong. However, I am not out for Brother Weinman's scalp at all. Here is the proposition as viewed by the editor of this department.

Nobody wants the architect ignored in the planning of moving picture theaters. In the large houses, at least, the architect is a very necessary part of the proceedings, but we do want the architect to, instead of assuming a lot of things he don't know, consult those who do know, and thus avoid making the absolutely idiotic mistakes which have been made by architects in literally thousands of instances.

Another thing: All too many architects have failed in recognition of the fact that the operating room is, after all, the one most important feature of the whole theater. I can show you instances right here in New York City where a cub architect (pardon the expression, Friend Weinman, but I cannot resist the temptation to "get back") has planned theaters costing many thousands of dollars; in fact, in many instances, many tens of thousands of dollars, and have placed in those theaters little, narrow, contracted, poorly located "coops," and in one instance at least this miscalled operating room was made so ridiculously small they had to raise the ceiling before they could get the machine in, although this "architect" had plenty of space to make an operating room ten feet high by almost any dimensions he desired.

No, Neighbor Weinman, you will find that, as a general proposition the architect will be treated even more than fairly, but that he sadly needs to come to a realization of the fact that in order to plan an operating room intelligently he must have a good knowledge of applied geometrical optics, of the optical system of the projector, and of several other highly important things to do with projection, whereas in all too many instances architects are engaged to draw plans for a moving picture theater, and, although absolutely ignorant of practical, or even theoretical projection instead of asking advice from those who do know butt ahead and build an operating room which will forever handicap the operator in his work, if not absolutely prevent him from securing high class results. There is one man here in New York City whom I can recommend as having a good knowledge of all these things, and that is Mr. Simon Arkin, a corréspondent of this department, whose professional card appears elsewhere. Mr. Arkin will not plan any operating room monstrosities; of that I am sure. Also this department will be willing to criticise the plans of architects and, for a very reasonable fee, suggest such changes as may be necessary. If no changes be necessary, then only the usual $1 fee need be sent to cover expense of repacking, remailing, etc.

Question of Resistance.

C. V. Caver, Stephenville, Texas, writes:

Am using d. c. from a 6 k. w. generator pulled by a 12 h. p. gasoline engine. Arc and lights will not total over 6 h. p., and the engine pulls almost to capacity. The wiring is the only thing I suspect. Am using No. 8. Will you kindly advise me if this is large enough? If not what size should be used? Arcs are about 100 feet from the generator.

Six h. p. would mean 4,476 watts, but, inasmuch as wire capacity depends on amperage, and the amperes would be the watts divided by the volts, how can I answer as to necessary wire size without knowing the generator voltage? I would suggest, however, that you first see whether that engine is or is not delivering its 12 horse power. Quite possibly you will find it is a long ways from doing that. In fact I am inclined to think your trouble lies there, at least in part. To test the brake horse power of the engine (actual horse power delivered to the dynamo), see page 1536, June 13, 1914, issue, which you presumably have; if not, send ten cents to the Moving Picture World and get it. Meanwhile, however, if your generator is a 60 volt machine, then 6 h. p. consumed would mean almost 75 amperes, for which you ought to have No. 5 weatherproof, or No. 3 rubber covered wire, No. 8 R. C. only having a capacity of 35 and weatherproof 50 amperes. If your generator is a 110 volt machine, then No. 6 wire would be large enough. It is also quite possible that you have a heavy ground. You can test this matter by attaching wires to an incandescent lamp socket, containing a lamp of the voltage of your system, fastening one end of the wire to some known ground, such as a water pipe, and touching the other to first one and then the other of the wires. If there is a spark at the end of the wire, when contact is made or broken, or if the lamp lights, there is a ground, which should be immediately located and eliminated.

Gives Them a Chance.

Arthur W. Turner, East Templeton, Massachusetts, after making several remarks about the refraction-kinks-the-light-rays business, says:

Your department gives we smaller fellows a chance to see what a real operator ought to be. It also tends to raise the ideas and requirements of managers, which naturally will help very largely in placing operating on a higher basis. I enclose four cents in stamps for carbon reply of the light ray matter, if there is any, if not apply it to your one thousand dollar fund, which will leave you a balance of nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars and ninety-six cents to raise. No, I am not poking fun, because I do not see how you can accomplish that amount of work for that sum of money.

With regard to the one thousand dollars, why I have cut that down very largely. The Moving Picture World is going to stand the electrical expense, I will stand the photographic end of it, which will not be any small item let me tell you, the General Electric Company has loaned a new 50 ampere rectifier, the Powers Co. has made me a very fine optical bench, the Simplex has supplied lamp, lamp house, etc., and the American Standard Machine has given $25 cash, so that I think all I will now need will be three or four hundred dollars to pay the salary of one or two men I have in mind, whom I desire to employ to assist me in making the tests, but this amount I will first endeavor to secure from film producers and manufacturers. If they don't loosen up it will be up to three or four hundred of you fellows to come across with one perfectly good dollar each.

Fuse Testing.

J. F. Heise, Fort Totten, New York, says:

> Brother Bullock's way of testing fuses, page 363, January 23d issue, is correct in one sense of the word, but in another sense he is wrong, because, as you say, if he was testing a three wire system and either outside wire on the neutral was grounded the lamp would light, regardless of whether the fuse was blown or not. If he would test his fuses by placing the test lamp in series with the line, instead of in parallel, he could instantly tell which fuse was blown. Place test lamp leads on either side of the fuse being tested and if the fuse is O. K. the test lamp will not burn if the other fuse is blown, but if it is on the fuse that is blown the lamp will light.

Correct you are, Brother Heise, but when testing projection circuit these carbons of arc lamp must be frozen. Take down your cap from the peg, arrange your books nicely under your arm, and pass up to the head of the class.

From Saginaw.

B. C. Evans, Saginaw, Michigan, says:

> Will removing the cone from a Powers SixA lamphouse decrease the light on the screen? A certain manager claims it will, whereas I claim it would make no difference at all, except that if you remove the cone and slide carrier there would be an increase in illumination, though in my opinion the rays added would be of little use, due to the heavy spherical aberration they carry. Projection in this city compares favorably with the best. We have d. c. and up-to-date equipment. I will soon order another Handbook, as I have loaned mine to others and the leaves are coming out, and I certainly need that book in my business.

Your understanding of the light matter is correct all the way through, and the manager in question is in error. It is a pleasure to know that projection in your city is high class. Keep it that way.

A Knock and a Boost.

H. J. Wilitz, Kewanee, Illinois, writes:

> Just returned from a trip through the South. While there applied at a number of theaters for position as operator, but nothing doing. A great many of the boys are lined up in the union, and some are getting fair salaries, though many are far from making what they should. For this, however, I sometimes think they are themselves to blame, because in most of the places I visited projection was punk, and I found but few who had any interest whatever in anything except to "get more money." In some of the houses the flicker was awful. I advised every operator I met to invest in a Handbook, subscribe to the World and put the pictures on the screen as they should be put on, and then see if the manager would not be inclined to loosen up. There are some fine theaters in San Antonio, but their managers seem to have entirely overlooked the fact that good projection is essential to success. Fort Worth has some excellent projection, as has Dallas, in some of its houses. In Sherman I found a card man who put the pictures on very good, though his work could be improved. There are six shows in that town, and I think he was the only card man there. In Denison they all have cards, but (Fireworks from Denison.—Ed.) if they cannot put up better projection than that I saw they could not get a job as rewind boy in Chicago. (That's a fearful knock for Denison, or a big boost for Chicago—maybe both.—Ed.) One theater in Denison, however, the Mirror, is there with the goods. I asked the young lady at the ticket window if I could see the operator, but she said I could not until he came out to supper. I went back at 8 and met the manager, who invited me in, and I sure did see some high class work. They gave three reels for five cents. The projection was beyond criticism. I asked the manager if I could go back and see the equipment and operator. He refused and said he did not allow any visitors in the operating room, but that he would come and take me back after the show was over. It was Saturday night, however, and he certainly was one busy man, for they came in droves. I remained for two shows and the projection was as nearly perfect as any one could wish to see. I think I am something of an operator myself, but I wish I could put them on the way that chap did. In the end I did not get to see him, because the manager was so busy he forgot me, and when the show was over I had to run for a train. He told me that the operator's name was O. P. Sammons, and I noticed the manager's eye was on the screen pretty regularly, also that the operator had no light in the operating room, except when threading up. I would have liked to have seen the equipment.

I have written to the manager of the Mirror, asking him or his operator to contribute an article to the department. Those are the kind of men I like to hear from; men who are delivering the goods on the screen. Now don't jump to the conclusion that I don't want to hear from the fellow who is not able to put up high class work. I'm glad to hear from that lad, too, and to help him too if I can, but the operator who can and who has a manager who allows him to put on projection beyond criticism is up-to-date, almost in a class to himself. You will note the manager of the Mirror would not even allow an operator to go into the operating room, in which he is absolutely correct. You will also note that the operator had no light in the operating room, except when threading, and that is also absolutely correct, and absolutely necessary, too, to high class projection. As to San Antonio, when I was a manager of a film exchange in Memphis, I had some customers in San Antonio for a short time, but they wanted fourteen reels, changed every day, so I kissed them a sad good-bye. I was in hopes matters there had improved by now.

A Relic.

Recently I paid a visit to Mr. Thomas A. Edison and in conversation, asked for a sample of the old wide film that was used by him for a short time in the beginning. Mr. Edison complied by mailing me a sample which is reproduced herewith full size.

Upon receiving this I wrote Mr. Edison requesting him to write a short statement of why this particular size of film was adopted, and why its use was discontinued, in fact, a short resume of the history of the film. Mr. Edison replied that his every energy was just now concentrated on the rehabilitation of his plant, and that it would not be right to allow his mind to be distracted by anything until that was completed, but intimated that when this was done he would favor us.

I think this relic will be of great interest to many thousands of operators and managers. In looking at it, remember it is two pictures from the film produced exactly full size, in other words, it is just as the film was.

Whee! We're All Wrong.

George Van Deurs, Brooklyn, New York, says:

> Under heading "Lenses," January 16th issue, you advise J. A. Mitchell to use two 7¼ condensers, placed 13¾ inches from film center of condenser combination. I do not agree with you, and believe Brother Griffiths is way off too. I have nearly the same conditions, viz.: 88 foot throw, 15 foot picture, 5½ e. f. lenses, 30 amperes d. c. Tried out Friend Griffiths' combination, but could not get good results. Found I would have to carry too small a spot, say 1¼ inches in diameter, to keep the ghost out. Don't see how he can use that combination and carry the 2 inch spot he claims. I am now using two 6½ condensers, ⅛ inch space between them, 15½ inches from the center of the combination to the film, and can make a spot 3 inches in diameter without a ghost. I would suggest that Brother Mitchell try out the above and let us hear the result. In my opinion it is better to have the e. f. of the combination of the condensers shorter than that of the objective, as I find the e. f. of two 6½ condensers to be 3.72 inches, which gives a fine illumination when working with a 5½ e. f. objective. What about the second list of questions?

The second list of questions is coming. I will get them to you just as quickly as I can. I referred the first part of the brother's letter to Mr. Arkin, who says:

"I think he (Van Deurs) has taken a theoretical case, instead of actual measurements of his place. He says his e. f. objective is 5.5 inches, throw 88 feet, and he gets a 11 x 15 picture. Assuming his aperture is $^{11}/_{16}$ x $^{15}/_{16}$, we have 5.5 : $^{15}/_{16}$: : 88 : 15 and 5.5 : $^{11}/_{16}$: : 88 : 11, a case which rarely happens in actual practice. The e. f. of the condenser combination is always shorter than the e. f. of the objective, except on very short throws—where an objective of less than 3 inches is used. The distance 13.75, as you advised Mr. Mitchell, is correct. It should be in any case 2.5 times the focal length of the objective. In this case it is $2.5 \times 5.5 = 13.75$. The only thing I differ from you in is this: I make it 13.75 inches from the center of the front condenser, or about 13.25 from the face of the condenser to the film. Mr. Van Deurs says he uses two 6.5 condensers and their e. f. is equal to 3.72. This is not so. $(6.5 \times 6.5) \div 13 = 3.25$, which is the true e. f. of his combination. In any case, when you take two lenses of the same focal length, the e. f. of the combination is equal to half the focal length of either of them. The condenser I would advise in this case would be, and is, figured as follows: Let the distance from the arc to the center of the back condenser be 4 inches, the light cone be equal to three and a half times the focal length of the objective, or $5.5 \times 3.5 = 19.25$ (Three and a half times the focal length of the objective.—Ed.). Then $1 \div 19.25 = .0520$ which is the reciprocal of 19.25, or, to go back to other articles, the equal of F. Next divide 1 by 4 (4 being the distance from center of back lens to arc.—Ed.) which gives us .2500. Then add .0520 and .2500, which gives .3020. Now, if we use a 6½ lens for the back condenser we will have as its reciprocal $1 \div 6.5 = .1538$, which, subtracted from .3020, leaves .1482, the reciprocal of the front condenser, and dividing 1 by .1482 we get 6.75 as the focal length of the front condenser. In practice a 7-inch condenser could be used."

Well, there you are. I am giving a lot of this stuff just now in order to get operators accustomed to figuring the focal length of condensing lenses by reciprocals, as it seems that is the right way to do it. I have told you how and explained it to you as clearly as I can. I do not even pretend to know why all this is so, but, anyway, it seems to work out, and I am glad to know even that much about it at this stage of the game. I, personally think that friend Van Deurs has not actually and accurately measured his condenser lenses, but has accepted the lens he bought at its face value, which is more often than not, far from being correct.

Various Things.

Washington sends in the following:

> As regards the identations between the sprocket holes of film, I have been watching pretty closely lately, and find that on my Powers machines a poorly made splice has a tendency to cause the film to jump, and invariably it is the teeth on the right end of the lower sprocket (crank side of the machine) which do not engage properly. It will sometimes, if I let it, run for twenty inches before engaging, or running off altogether. I am not using loop setter. This trouble is almost always caused by a long, lapped patch. With regard to the Film Waxer, page 364, January 16th issue. I find that wax is almost as necessary on the celluloid side as on the other. Recently I ran "Samson," one of the Fox Box Office films, and the deposit on the track of the aperture plate was fully as great as it was on the tension springs, therefore I was compelled to wax it on both sides. It seems to me the inception of this trouble is quite recent—that is in such quantities. Questioning the correctness of Brother Bullock's reply to Question 61: Floor receptacles should be fused two or three and a half times as high as he suggests; not less than 50 and possibly 60 is better, for the reason that, especially in vaudeville, some acts have twin spots and floods, possibly suspended, for fire dances, etc., and each lamp will draw 14 to 20 amperes, also bank bunches and strips have no business being plugged directly into floor pockets, as the cable feeding them is seldom of one-half capacity of the fuses of the pocket. The better practice, and the kind demanded in your city are plugging boxes which have No. 4 stage cable leading from the floor receptacle, then each hole of the plugging box is fused for the load it must carry. Some time ago some nut called on my manager and handled him a bundle, against my protest, in the form of a second-hand rewound generator. Well, the manager would not take my advice and is the loser, so there you are.

As to buying second-hand machinery, usually, it is a pretty poor proposition, unless one is thoroughly posted as to exactly what one wants, and capable of judging whether or not the device offered is in good order and will fill the bill. As to the stage matter, why, frankly, I am not in position to speak with authority. Roughly speaking, I am well acquainted with stage practice, but not in the details of wiring a large stage. As to the film matter, it seems to be pretty thoroughly settled that the lower sprocket is doing the damage, and I, personally, am inclined to think that it is largely due to the lack of rigidity of the idler, meaning by this, that most idlers are held, or supported, at one side only and this support is not sufficiently rigid to prevent the idler roller from springing out of line with this sprocket. This is not necessarily the seat of the whole difficulty, but I think, nevertheless, it is very largely responsible, and that the form of the lower idler bracket on the majority of projectors should be changed.

Film Damage.

Chicago, Illinois, says:

> Many letters have appeared in our department concerning damage done by sprocket teeth indenting the spaces between perforations, but none has as yet offered any real explanation as to the cause. I have watched that very thing happen on a Simplex. A bad splice was, of course, the source of the trouble, but the machine itself was also at fault. The lower sprocket idler proved, on examination, not to be exactly parallel to the sprocket; the end away from the bracket being much farther from the face of the sprocket than the other, thus permitting the edge of the film to ride upon the points of the teeth. As you are aware the spindle of the idler on the Simplex forms a handle for the bracket, and it is very likely to get sprung by rough or careless usage, thus throwing the idler out of adjustment on one side. Moreover, the spring holding the bracket, roll arm (the manufacturers call it), exerts too much pressure, and tends to pull the idler away from the sprocket if the bearing on the roll arm is not quite tight, besides making damage to the film more certain if it should get off the teeth. The Simplex, however, is not the only machine that can do the damage if the idlers are out of adjustment, but if the Simplex is guilty, that fact is readily proven by the fact that the identatations are on the emulsion side of the film.

The brother then goes on and speaks at considerable length on another matter which, however, he says is "for your eye only." As I said in commenting on one other similar letter, I think we have finally reached the real basis of this trouble, which is the weakness of the lower sprocket idler bracket. I have called certain manufacturers attention to the need of strengthening this particular feature of their projector, and have no doubt but that in due course it will be done.

Film Fault.

Russell Griffin, Rochester, New York, writes:

> Sample of film I enclose is from Essanay two reel special "Dear Old Girl," released January 15. The faults contained therein make it appear as if the projection machine had slid over a trifle. We get this in Kalem films too. Notice on sample the scene following is all right; this was the case throughout the entire two reels, in almost every scene where Francis Bushman appears. In several of these we got the bell for bad light, but, as you know, the matter was beyond our control. The very best work in the operating room cannot compensate for bulls in the photography. Will you kindly explain through the department the reason for this.

As nearly as I can make it out the camera operator has put a cone in his lens to shield it from light rays, and the cone was too narrow. I am not positive that this is the explanation, but that is what it looks like. Any way, I am sending the sample to the Essanay Company with the suggestion that they give their inspection department a jacking up. It sometimes is not an easy thing to explain the whys and wherefores of faults. It might be due to so many different things. In this case, I think it is in the photography, rather than the printing, and it cannot be in development.

Look Out for It.

F. R. Culbert, Athol, Massachusetts, writes a lengthy letter complaining of patches made by exchanges. He sends in the wrong and right kind of patch, with the request that I illustrate the same in the department, but for his benefit, let me say that a film patch cannot very will be photographed; that is to say you can photograph it, but it would not show much of anything, particularly if it was made right. Brother Culbert then gives a tip to operators who are going to run the series "Exploits of Elaine." This subject is printed on non-inflammable film and they will have to have Pathe cement to make patches stick.

I do not know where Friend Culbert got this tip from, but if it is true the "Exploits of Elaine" is to be printed on non-inflammable stock, then is a mighty good one, for if you get caught with non-inflammable film and ordinary cement you will be in a very bad fix.

Edison Machine.

F. J. Becker, Weston, New Jersey, orders a Handbook and asks:

> (a) Do you know when the new Edison projector will be on the market and what its price will be? (b) Is the American Projectograph, manufactured by Charles Dressler still being made? In closing, I would wish the Moving Picture World, and particularly the projection department and its editor, good luck. May the good work go on. There is not a particle of doubt but that the projection department has done more to benefit projection than anything else.

(a) The Edison plant was practically entirely destroyed by fire about a month ago. The new machine will not be on the market for several months yet. (b) As to the Dressler machine, it has not been built since 1909. Many thanks for your kind words. The constant aim of the Moving Picture World is to serve the industry, as a whole, to the very best of its ability, and it is always a pleasure to know that others besides ourselves think we are succeeding in our aim.

Comments on the Films

FROM A LIFE OF CRIME (Edison), Feb. 23.—An underworld melodrama, written by Lee Arthur and acted by Nellie Grant, Jean Dumar, Frank McGlynn, Augustus Phillips and Marjorie Ellison. One or two incidents in the life of the orphan girl, who is obliged to become a thief, lack a plausible introduction, otherwise it is a generally satisfactory offering likely to touch the sympathies.

THE SURPRISE OF MY LIFE (Essanay), Feb. 23.—It might have been wise to keep the audience more in suspense about the identity of the thief at the house party figuring in this picture. The spectator guesses almost from the start which one of the guests walks in his sleep and unconsciously appropriates the valuables of his friends. The plot is taken from a Munsey Magazine story and presented on the screen by Bryant Washburn, Thomas Commerford, Frank Dayton, Lester Cuneo and Ruth Stonehouse.

SHE WOULD BE A COWBOY (Kalem), Feb. 23.—A very slight farce in which a woman dressed as a cowboy finds the excitement she craves. There is no plot to speak of and the action is not particularly funny in itself. Opening a reel with "Tomboys."

TOMBOYS (Kalem), Feb. 23.—The tomboys in question are a number of women who go camping with their husbands and are nearly drowned while in bathing. Scenes on the rock-bound shore may be attractive, but cloudy photography does not do them justice. A disappointing subject on a reel with "She Would Be a Cowboy."

POET AND PEASANT (Lubin), Feb. 23.—As a household drudge, shabbily clothed and with her hair drawn back in unbecoming fashion, Lottie Briscoe may not be recognized during the first few moments of this comedy. She plays the part in the proper spirit, however, as does Arthur V. Johnson the character of the poor poet. The picture is reasonably entertaining without being exactly humorous. Howard Mitchell and Eleanor Blanchard are in the cast.

SLIM HIGGINS (Selig), Feb. 23.—The story of a western bandit reformed by a pretty girl is made exciting during the earlier scenes by reasons of the dare-devil stunts of Slim Higgins. He rides into a saloon on horseback, frightens the cowboys and shoots the bottles off the bar. Later happenings are less stirring, but the film at all times profits by beautiful mountain scenery well photographed.

THE MANUFACTURING OF BIG GUNS (Edison), Feb. 24.—This presents an interesting illustration of how the big guns for the nation's defense are manufactured at the U. S. Arsenal, Watervliet, N. Y. It is a splendidly photographed series of views—some 28 or 30—of the interior of the manufactory and its powerful machinery.

THE PEST OF THE NEIGHBORHOOD (Edison), Feb. 24.—A comedy that seemed to please the audience. William Fables impersonates a goat in quite a clever manner. Of course he is the pest of the neighborhood and cuts up all sorts of pranks which set the populace mad. On the same reel with the foregoing.

THE FABLE OF "THE BACHELOR AND THE BACK PEDAL" (Essanay), Feb. 24.—The point of this George Ade fable is contained in one sub-title, "He realized that he would never have money enough to keep her in Talcum powder." There is not much action, but Sidney Ainsworth and Lillian Drew, with the help of Ade sub-titles, make the film entertaining.

SCARS (Selig), Feb. 24.—As a matter of entertainment this film cannot be commended very highly. The situations and the incidents are in a large measure ridiculous, and scars predominate good sense. The story is of the visit of two young women to their father in the west. One of them falls in love with a young man who is addicted to liquor, takes a fall from a cliff in some unexplainable manner, and carries a ridiculous scar about on her face for life. She also later marries the man, parts from him, and does considerable shooting, before the final reconciliation.

THE YOUNG MAN WHO "FIGGERED" (Vitagraph), Feb. 24.—Billy Quirk is the young man who "figgered," and Constance Talmadge, William Shea, and Florence Natol are the people who benefited by Billy's apparently useless figuring on the receipts of the lottery prize that he hoped for so much that it came. There is some very good comedy in this offering, which will be found acceptable to most audiences.

HARE SHOOTING ON THE BALTIC ARCHIPELAGO (Vitagraph), Feb. 24.—On the same reel with "The Young Man Who Figgered," this is, for those who love sports, an intensely interesting film subject.

THE CALL OF HER CHILD (Biograph), Feb. 25.—A woman, enamored by a fashionable artist, is recalled to a sense of duty by a portrait of her child. Obviously, there is nothing startlingly fresh about such a story, yet it may be placed above the average one-reel drama. A tasteful production and the intelligent acting of Robert Nolan and Augusta Anderson may be thanked for this.

SOPHIE CHANGES HER MIND (Essanay), Feb. 25.—First rate farce, especially toward the close, when Mustang Pete impersonates Sophie and becomes the bride at a hastily arranged wedding with Slippery Slim as the groom. Victor Potel, Harry Todd, Margaret Joslin and Ernest Van Pelt make the best of incidents in a plot that answers requirements.

THE WORTHIER MAN (Vitagraph), Feb. 25.—Western melodrama presenting the usual expense of wild country and the accustomed number of hard-riding cowboys. The poorest scene in the story comes with the suicide of the jilted Indian maiden. It is too obvious that she did not jump into the shallow water supposed to cover her. Jack Mower, George Stanley and Jane Novak are in the cast.

HAM AND THE JITNEY BUS (Kalem), Feb. 26.—Lloyd Hamilton and Bud Duncan, Kalem's slapstick comedians, find their best opportunity toward the close of this subject. After much trouble, passengers are secured for their jitney bus, which cuts up mad capers and then explodes. Most of the laughs are in the last 300 feet of the film.

THE HUMAN INVESTMENT (Lubin), Feb. 26.—Having induced her father to invest his money in the finery needed to make her feel at home among fashionable people, a girl proceeds to fulfill her end of the bargain by becoming the wife of a wealthy man. She ends by marrying her country sweetheart, who, fortunately, has struck oil. The most entertaining scenes show the rehearsal of a musical comedy chorus. Ormi Hawley and Earl Metcalfe are in the cast of this passable picture, the scenario for which was written by George W. Terwilliger.

THE MILLIONAIRE CABBY (Selig), Feb. 26.—A rich man impersonates a cabby and a cabby is passed off as an English lord, just for one eventful night. Extravagant farce in idea and development is made quite amusing, for there is plenty of brisk action and the plot reveals some originality, no mean virtue in itself.

A MAN OF PARTS (Vitagraph), Feb. 26.—Amateur theatricals in a small town are the subject of this burlesque, brightly acted by Wally Van, Hughie Mack and others. When the cast refuses to appear for the performance, Wally Van undertakes to act most of the characters himself. An acceptable release for the comedy end of a program.

Licensed Specials.

HIS ROMANY WIFE (Biograph), Feb. 23.—This two-part drama was reviewed by George Blaisdell in the Moving Picture World of February 27th, page 1267.

THE STILL, SMALL VOICE (Vitagraph), Feb. 23.—Helen Gardner puts considerable emotional force into her playing of the dumb, half-witted heroine in this two-part drama produced by Charles L. Gaskill. The total impression created is that of a morbid, rather spooky picture. In a western village two men are rivals for the hand of the dumb girl when they learn that she has inherited a fortune. Most of the last reels shows the girl's struggle with a conscience that prompts her to confess the murder of one of the suitors, for which the other man is to be hung. There is a laudable attempt to express feeling and character.

OLD ISAACSON'S DIAMONDS (Kalem), Feb. 24.—A two-reel production that is a good one, forming an episode of The Girl Detective series. It is a melodrama, well produced. Ruth Roland plays the feminine lead as the young woman whose love for detective work leads her into hard and fast places. The theft of the old diamond broker's diamonds makes an excellent opportunity to get in some good sensational action. The scenes in the saloon where Ruth foils the crook, gets him arrested and secures the diamonds, are exceptionally interesting.

BENEATH THE SEA (Lubin), Feb. 25.—It takes a long while to lead up to the situation that gives this two-reel drama its name, and when the situation does arrive, it is not particularly exciting. A torpedo boat is sunk and the designer of the craft has himself shot through the torpedo tube that he may swim to a near-by yacht for assistance. The same idea was developed with greater detail in a melodrama of some months ago. Of the story there is little to be said, save that it is conventional and well enough acted by Charles Fowler, Melvin Mayo, Velma Whitman, W. E. Parsons and George Routh.

THE LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN (Edison), Feb. 26.—Under the direction of Langdon West, who used a scenario by James Oppenheim, a conscientious effort has been made to depict the principal happenings in the life of Lincoln, played by Frank McGlynn. Grant, Lee, Stanton, Judge Davis and other important figures of the time are presented by actors for the most part successfully in suggesting historical personages in appearance and manner. Naturally, the picture is episodic in construction and interesting chiefly as a visualization of events about which every schoolboy has read. Those two reels will be of particular value to young people.

STARS AND THEIR COURSES CHANGE (Essanay), Feb. 26.—Edward T. Lowe, Jr., is credited with the scenario for this three-part drama featuring Francis X. Bushman. Admirers of Mr. Bushman will find it a highly satisfactory picture presenting their hero in a favorable light. As a photoplay, apart from the personality of the leading player, the chief defect is a shortage of genuinely dramatic incidents with which to fill three reels. In regard to settings and details of production the film is excellent and the cast is competent, with Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn in conspicuous roles.

Independent

PATHE'S DAILY NEWS, NO. 15, 1915 (Pathe Exc.), Feb. 20.—An animated cartoon by J. M. Bray, illustrating what might happen in the arena of battle should the U. S. find it necessary to take a hand is decidedly interesting and apropos at the present moment. An enthusiastic demonstration at the passage of the Suffrage bill by the Legislature in Massachusetts is another interesting item of this issue.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 155 (Universal), Feb. 24.—Governor Whitman dedicating a hospital in New York State, boy scouts wearing medals presented by President Wilson, winter sports in Canada, the Crown Prince leading a charge of the Death's Head Hussars, and other interesting features appear in this number.

THE CHAMELEON (Pathe), Feb. 24.—An intensely interesting study at close range of this peculiar little animal, showing the manner in which it gathers food with its abnormally long tongue, its adaptability to domestic life, etc.

A COSTLY EXCHANGE (Komic), February 28.—The story of two newlyweds and two soon-to-be-weds. The young men get their overcoats mixed up. A correspondence school detective unravels the difficulties. This is old in plot but the action is good and the situations are quite amusing.

THE LAWBREAKER (Reliance), March 1.—The daughter of the candidate for mayor meets the sister of Jerry, a young crook. Later Jerry enters her house to steal some papers incriminating her father as a bribe taker. Jerry keeps the facts from her, but the father confesses that he is the real lawbreaker and refuses to run for office. This makes quite a dramatic little story and is handled with a fair degree of strength.

THE HAUNTING MEMORY (Beauty), March 2.—A good number with Joseph Harris, Irving Cummings and Virginia Kirtley in the cast. It is the story of a young celloist who takes a neat revenge upon his father, who had abandoned his mother years before. The social atmosphere of the piece is unusually good and the photography excellent.

AND HE NEVER KNEW (Princess), March 5.—The girl's father insists on her marrying a title, but she does not like the count. Later she sees to it that her poor lover inherits a fortune and marries him. A bright little comedy number, the plot of which is not intended to be taken at all seriously.

MISHAPS OF MARCELINE (Thanhouser), March 7.—This features the famous Hippodrome clown in some amusing knockabout work. He starts out with a ladder and bucket and stumbles into a great deal of trouble en route. The antics and chase are funny.

HIS LAST SERENADE (Laemmle), March 7.—A pretty story of the friendship between an invalid girl and an aged violinist, with Helen Leslie and Frank Lloyd in the leading parts. The girl's father drives the old musician away, but when the girl is lying at death's door he returns and, by his playing, brings back her interest in life. This has a touch of good sentiment in it.

IN AND OUT OF SOCIETY (L-KO), March 7.—An eccentric number featuring a rube character who rips his pants at a dance and runs about in his B. V. D.'s while they are being mended. Some of the situations are quite funny but it is a rather coarse type of humor.

BACK TO SCHOOL DAYS (Joker), March 8.—This burlesque of a country school is not the most elevating type of humor, but it brings a good many laughs. Max Asher is school master. The widow dresses her grown daughter as a little girl, being jealous of her. But the lover puts on knee pants and goes to school also. The photography is good and the action funny.

A COAT'S A COAT (Nestor), March 9.—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear as an engaged man and a married man respectively. They get their overcoats mixed up and the sweetheart and wife become greatly agitated over the error. The action is good and the cast pleasing, but the plot has not much novelty, as the overcoat exchange has been used frequently.

SIX OR NINE (Rex), March 11.—A clever mystery picture, with Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and Reggie Morris in the leading roles. The hero is accused of shooting the girl's father, but the police commissioner proves that a mouse had gnawed an electric wire so that it discharged the weapon. This is handled in such a way as to make an improbable circumstances seem plausible and makes an entertaining offering.

THE KNOCKOUT WALLOP (Sterling), March 11.—The general uncleanliness of the settings interfere with the humor of the first part of this eccentric comedy. The fighting scenes are better, but as a whole it is not very successful.

HIS WIFE'S HUSBAND (Nestor), March 12.—A comedy number in which the young married man pretends his wife is married to his best friend in order to fool father. Another girl arrives, whom the father has selected for him to wed. The complications prove fairly amusing, though they follow familiar lines.

ROMANCE OF THE BACKWOODS (Victor), March 12.—Rosemary Theby appears as an engaged girl on a trip to the woods with her lover. She meets a backwoodsman, portrayed by Henry C. Myers. She calls him a "Hick," but he turns out to be a rich young man on a vacation. This is only fairly convincing in places, but has some touches of interest.

SHULTZ'S LADY FRIEND (Joker), March 13.—An eccentric comedy number, with Max Asher, Gale Henry and Wm. Franey in the cast. The action centers about the visit of a show troupe to a mountain town. The situations contain some rough humor, but proves quite entertaining as a whole.

IN WRONG (Royal), March 13.—The juggling butler gets a laugh at the beginning of this reel and more was expected from him. The story, however, drifts off into a conventional burglary and does not hold up in interest very strongly.

THE TROUBLES OF RUFUS (Pathe Exc.), March.—This is a comedy in which the principal characters are supposedly colored folks. Rufus is one of those people with whom most things go wrong. His principles are not proof against the temptations of a chicken yard; neither does true love run smooth. A very acceptable comedy for most audiences.

SOME JAPANESE WORKMEN (Pathe), March.—On the same reel with "The Troubles of Rufus" will be found this most interesting industrial subject which shows the deftness and enthusiasm with which the Japanese ply their varied trades. The carpenter, the tub maker and the baker are the chief entertainers of the film.

WILD WALES (Pathe Exc.), March.—An especially beautiful colored scenic, in which is shown also a specimen of ancient and well-preserved architecture, namely, Conway Castle, built by Edward I of England in the year 1284.

A BUDDHIST TEMPLE (Pathe), March.—This subject on the same reel with the foregoing is also of extraordinary interest, showing abandoned palaces of the worshippers of Buddha, at Pekin, China. About these beautiful edifices the gardens, once cultivated with the greatest care, are now confused masses of wild vegetation.

Independent Specials.

THE MAN WITH A RECORD (Reliance), Feb. 27.—The story of a young convict whose footsteps are dogged by a detective. The latter succeeds in having him railroaded back to the penitentiary, but the governor's daughter aids in bringing about proof of his innocence. Wm. Henneberry, Billie West and Walter Long are in the cast. The story has a conventional opening, but becomes very interesting. The escape was a good feature and the later plot complications are worked out skilfully. The construction is good throughout.

THE MASTER KEY (Universal Special), Episode No. 15, Feb. 28.—This final episode brings to a satisfactory close this successful serial by John Fleming Wilson, Robert Leonard and Ella Hall, as hero and heroine, emerge happily from their long series of adventures and are married. Harry Carter, as the villainous Wilkerson, dies by his own hand, imagining he is being pursued by the Hindu. Mrs. Darnell, the sole survivor of the conspirators, repents of her sins. The closing scenes are very effective.

HEART OF FLAME (American), March 1.—A two-reel subject with David Lythgoe and Vivian Rich in the leading parts. He is a young violinist and falls in love with a mountain girl, whom he calls the "Heart of Flame." He leaves her to go to the city; she follows and likewise her mountain lover, portrayed by Jack Richardson. It is the familiar story of love versus art. The mountain lover stabs the girl just outside the theater and the violinist plays to the audience while she is dying. The scenic effects in the first reel are particularly good and the photography pleasing. The story follows familiar lines but the actors have put considerable feeling into their work. This is quite strong.

THE ROBBERY OF THE RUBY CORONET (Thanhouser), March 1.—Episode No. 15 of The $20,000,000 Mystery. In this two-reel instalment Zudora and the conspirators are invited to a ball given by the Copelands. The conspirators plan to get the valuable coronet. The butler also has a similar intention. He steals the coronet, but Bruce gets it and hides it in a house. Zudora and Storm are lured there and made captives, but later released and the coronet recovered. This is an entertaining yarn, though none too convincing in places. The action is good, though the plot is of course not very new.

ON THE BRINK OF THE ABYSS (Thanhouser), March 2.—A two-reel number with Sydney Bracey, Frank Farrington and Minnie Berlin in the cast. Sid is fond of drink and cares for nothing but his sister. She marries an inventor and Sid goes to the city, where he becomes leader of a band of crooks. In later years the sister and her husband move to the city. She is neglected by her husband and permits one of his friends to call upon her. The husband returns unexpectedly. His friend beats a retreat and the erring brother, who has entered the house as a burglar, is discovered. This works up to a strongly dramatic situation and on the whole proves quite absorbing.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Reliance), March 3.—Instalment Eight, with the special title "Her Husband's Enemies." This opens with the scene of the automobile accident. Blye rescues June and the others, having them all sent to a sanitarium. June speedily recovers and later becomes a nurse in the institution. Here she learns the financial details of the chauffeur's family. Ned finally gets a line on June's whereabouts and takes the trail just as they are all preparing to leave Bermuda. He is grabbed by a mysterious hand at the close of the reel. This number does not advance the plot greatly, but followers of the story have great hopes that the Bermuda experiences will bring interesting developments.

WHERE THE FOREST ENDS (Rex), March 7.—A two-reel number produced by Jos. Degrasse, who plays a leading part. Pauline Bush appears as a waif of the hills and Wm. Dowlin and Lon Chaney are hero and villain respectively. The girl dresses in wild grapevines and dances over the hills. The artist lures her to the city, but when her moral awakening comes she flees back to the mountains. He pursues her and some dramatic scenes occur toward the close. This is a crude production in some respects and quite artistic in others. The plucking of the rose ws an excellent symbolic touch. This has more than average strength.

UNHIDDEN TREASURES (Victor), March 8.—A pleasing comedy number in two reels, with Mary Fuller and Matt Moore in the leads. If the girl's guardian and young man's father had found some other means for disappearing than the false announcement of their deaths, it would have been more convincing and answered the purpose. The search of the lovers for the alleged treasure on the Bacon Gables estate contains quite a number of amusing situations. Also the ghostly visits of the missing guardian and father. They at last find that the treasure referred to is love. This makes a good light number and holds the interest well.

THE FINAL RECKONING (Thanhouser), March 9.—Another two-reel number in which Florence LaBadie does some detective work. She aids an Italian woman in the recovery of her child. Later her own father is stabbed by Pietro, for revenge. The girl then undertakes to discover the murderer and succeeds in rounding him up. Morris Foster plays the part of the young captain of mounted police. The scenic features in the second reel, presumably taken along the construction work of the Croton acqueduct, are very fine. The fire scene is also unusually good and some genuine thrills are achieved toward the close.

THE PHANTOM OF THE VIOLIN (Gold Seal), March 9.—This production staged by Francis Ford will be presented to the public in three or four parts, and is in some respects unusual. The story of the picture has been written by Grace Cunard, who has evidently aimed at the unusual, and who has also played the feminine lead. The subject is not exactly original, having as its centerpiece a woman of the vampire type, but its final development, it must be confessed, is somewhat out of the ordinary. When at last the woman has tired of the man, he goes insane, makes his way by a secret passage to the sub-cellar of an old mission which is being used as a cabaret, and where he has learned of the perfidy of his lady love. In this sub-cellar are skeletons and skulls galore. Here he continues to play weird strains on his violin, and later goes above and captures the woman, and a couple of her admirers, all of whom are either killed in the descent to the cellar, or go mad from the surroundings and the music after being taken thither. The scene of the story is laid in Paris, and it is not certain that the exteriors taken in lower California are always authentic. However, the picture will doubtless please from the very fact of its unusual development. Francis Ford appears in the masculine lead.

THE WELLS OF PARADISE (Broncho), March 10.—A two-reel western story, in which a widow and her son trade their home for some land near the town of Paradise. This turns out to be a rich oil field. The son falls in love with the daughter of the agent who tried to swindle them. The scenic effects are attractive and the fight at the dam was well put on. In bringing the story to its close, years later, the treatment was rather conventional and lacked the suspense it might have had. The story is an entertaining one, though not as strong as it might have been in places.

VALOR'S REWARD (Eclair), March 10.—A two-reel number, featuring George and Dolly Larkin. She is a wealthy girl with a scheming guardian who plots with an adventuress to get the girl's fortune. The opening scenes are of a society type and contain numerous pleasing features. Later the story drifts off into melodrama and sensationalism and loses its convincing quality. Some of the sensational features were interesting, but the story as a whole is not very strong.

THE TRUTH ABOUT DAN DEERING (Big U), March 11. A two-reel western number featuring Murdock MacQuarrie as a gentleman gambler of the old type. He cheats the girl's brother at cards and later repents of the action. He defends her from robbery and later sacrifices himself as a card cheat for her sake. This theme has been worked over many times in about this same way. Mr. MacQuarrie's work is the most distinguishing feature of the number, which on the whole is one of about average interest.

SATAN McALLISTER'S HEIR (Domino), March 11.—A strong two-reel production, featuring Walter Edwards as "the richest, meanest and most despised ranchman in Wyoming Valley." The story of how his heart is touched by the rebellious little daughter of the nesters, and his subsequent saving of her life at the cost of his own is full of human sympathy. This has a rare touch of pathos in several places and gets a strong hold upon the observer. The scenes are pleasing, action good and the production as a whole unusually strong.

THE GIRL WHO MIGHT HAVE BEEN (Kaybee), March 12.—Another two-reel western subject dealing very frankly with the conditions existing in border settlements where civilization had not yet penetrated. Leona Hutton gives a strong presentation of a girl cast out of a dance hall because she was tired and had lost her beauty. A young ranchman takes her to his cabin, where her health is restored. He "treats her like a lady" and she learns to love him. Her sacrifice comes when she goes back to the dance hall to earn money to bring his wife west, after bandits had stolen his savings. Taken as a picture of rough conditions this is very well done and handles the various situations acceptably. A strong offering of its type.

THE FIVE POUND NOTE (Imp), March 12.—A two-reel number with some interesting character work in it. King Baggot plays the part of a dissolute young English clubman who makes a bet that he can earn five pounds by real work. He dresses as a costermonegr and starts out as a peddler with a burro and cart. He meets the coster girl and her father, portrayed by Arline Pretty and Frank Smith. He defends the girl from a drunken sea captain and falls in love with her. Later he loses the five pound note he has earned, but still considers himself winner as he has the girl's love. This has a romantic flavor and possesses numerous entertaining features.

DIANA OF EAGLE MOUNTAIN (Bison), March 13.—This offering is based on familiar lines but is handled in a pleasing manner. The young doctor meets the mountain girl, whose male relatives operate an illicit still. He is mistaken for a revenue man, but she saves him from death. The big tree and other scenic touches add greatly to the interest. The transition to city life, after their marriage, was rather hurried and made something of a break in the story. Later the interest becomes stronger again and the manner in which the girl goes back to be with her dying father makes a good situation. This is an entertaining number.

Gertrude McCoy

GERTRUDE McCOY, a native of the Sunny South, entered upon her vocation in life at a very early age. While a theatrical troupe was passing through her home town, Oxford, Tenn., the little miss—only eight years old—wandered along and was given a part suited to her years for the matinee performance. Upon her return home, in time for the evening meal, she related her experience to the amazement of all the members of the family. The theatrical seed had been planted and a few years later Miss McCoy joined the Lulu Glaser company, with which she remained for two seasons. The next engagement was with Eddie Foy in "The Hammers of Broadway," and later we see her as Hazel, the motherless little girl, in "The Fair Co-ed."

Gertrude McCoy.

Miss McCoy's entire motion picture experience has been with the Edison Company, which she joined about four years ago.

She makes instantaneous appeal through her personal beauty, but her final charm lies in the deep sincerity with which she plays every part. Miss McCoy has taken prominent parts in many multiple reel features, as in the "Witness to the Will" and "Peg of the Movies," but is at her best in such powerful dramas as "The Impersonator" and "The Man in the Street," adaptations from the novels by Mary Imlay Taylor. Miss McCoy is a conscientious worker, striving always for the best in everything she attempts, and her ability has put her in the rank of active film players.

Aside from the keen interest she takes in her work before the camera, she is a scenario writer, having written such Edison dramas as "United in Danger" and "Kitty's Hold-up," in both of which she played the leading role.

The pleasing personality, youth and beauty she possesses, combined with sincerity of action, have contributed to her present enviable position among the leading actresses of the photoplay world.

HUDSON COUNTY OPERATORS DANCE.

The first annual ball and entertainment of the Motion Picture Operators' Association of Hudson Co., N. J., took place at Scheutzen Park, Union Hill, N. J., on Saturday night, February 13. The members of the above association are recruited from the prominent picture houses of Hudson County, and though only a comparatively young organization, it has proven its popularity by the splendid showing on the night of their first venture before the limelight of the public. Invitations had been issued to prominent photoplayers, who, with but few exceptions, accepted. Those who did not appear were King Baggot and Miss Mary Fuller, who, however, sent their regrets in writing.

Everything favored this event, and the crowds began to fill the immense ballroom as early as 8 p. m. The guests, visitors and friends were entertained with special photoplays, special singing and dancing of prominent cabaret performers from New York, and when the first strains of Firenzi's double band were heard the ballroom floor had a congestion of dancers seldom equalled at other social events. Shadow and calcium dancing varied the order of dancing, and in between dances the crowds were regaled with an exhibition of modern society dances by Doliy Hayes and Edward Clifford, direct from the Grand Central Palace, in New York City.

The grand march was the feature upon which all eyes were focussed, as that was the opportunity to view in person many of the screen favorites with whom no doubt every one present had in one way or another familiarized themselves. The addition of the guests was centered on the leaders of the march, who represented prominent figures of the screen, and the crowds showed their appreciation of being permitted to view their favorites at close quarters by continued applause and cheering.

British Notes

THE RECENT dispute between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, although fundamentally a technical one involving only points of maritime import, has led one scribe to exercise his imagination somewhat freely on the question. The vast and complicated relationship between the two countries in this one industry is well nigh impregnable, for each is to a considerable extent dependent upon the other, whether it be on the side of supply or demand. While the daily press has conjectured fearful possibilities those Americans connected with the moving picture industry I have seen during the last few days manifested an optimistic indifference as to the outcome. But someone with a burning thirst for blood (or possibly something milder) discovered the trade in a state of hypothetical tension the other day and did not hesitate to make the discovery public property. If there are any further communications even though declared upon both sides to be an amicable character, we may perhaps expect to see announced through the same source a formal declaration of war.

The Samuelson Film Company, of Isleworth, near London, has developed a new conception of film drama. For the story a serial entitled "A Cinema Girl's Romance," which recently ran its course in a daily paper has been taken, but the notable feature is that the production was acted mainly by members of the British moving picture trade. Many familiar faces from Gerrard street and vicinity figure in the scenes. most of whom are said to be renters. T. H. Davison, who has only been back from New York a couple of weeks, has secured world's rights.

The London County Council licensing committee has just terminated another solemn conclave for the purpose of enacting revised regulations for moving picture halls in the metropolitan area. In future windows must be provided in all new buildings for kinematographic purposes. New licenses have been issued to eight applicants and eleven exisiting ones cancelled. Two of the latter, the West End Cinema, near Leicester Square, and the Palaise de Luxe, off Piccadilly Circus, are well known to American visitors on account of their elaborated style of decoration.

Not very long ago the fashionable hotels and theaters of London were afflicted with a craze known as "Tango Teas." As New York was blamed for their existence I do not think I should be justified in describing them in detail; furthermore, it always was controversial whether they were created as a new excuse to eat or to kill time. Someone is now trying to set a fashion, presumably in anticipation of it spreading, of "Kinema Teas" where the patron can spend his afternoon in cushioned luxury, either to see the pictures or without so much as changing his seat indulge in mixed refections. So far it has not invaded the moving picture theater and, fortunately, is not likely to.

Apparently the question of the advisability of issuing house organs is demanding much attention from different people in the trade. Since the outbreak of war, this form of advertising the different wares of manufacturer and renter has been very much curtailed, but the number of these miniature journals previously in existence was truly phenomenal and must have exceeded fifty or more. The weekly "house organ" has even accommodated itself in the moving picture theater, a Manchester exhibitor being the first to take the venture. There are many men in the trade who regard house organs as unnecessary, and it certainly is a debatable point whether one-half of them are ever taken out of their wrappers. Perhaps a word or two can be recorded in favor of the idea for the exhibitor. The Manchester theater in question is situated off the main road and its immediate surroundings do not lend themselves to billposting. In short, there was no medium of intercourse between exhibitor and patron and so the house organ suggested itself. It is distributed each week free and its proprietor assures me each number is awaited with eager anticipation by his patrons.

To Liverpool belongs the unenviable distinction of being the motion picture exhibitor's cold douche. It would be a hard American city that exacted from its moving picture shows the impositions Liverpool demands from the exhibitor within its gates. Scarcely a month passes but some new regulation is drafted into existence by the licensing authorities and never is a new regulation enacted but what its instigators make use of the occasion to censure some imaginary defect of the screened play. Films as pure in motive as any ever produced, that have won the approval of ecclesiastical centers like Bath, Winchester and Edinburgh, have been banned at Liverpool, while the list of things its exhibitors "may not do" is longer and more terrifying than the Apocrypha. Liverpool's latest move appears to be to induce Manchester, its neighbor, into a similar attitude. Between the two cities overtures are in progress, not only to exercise what powers they already possess over moving picture theaters, but to seek fresh parliamentary authority to become the absolute dictators to license-holders under their rule. A formidable resistance to these drastic and obnoxious proposals is at the moment in process of augmentation with Manchester exhibitors.

For the entertainment of the British forces in Belgium a moving picture show has been opened practically within the firing line. The Hepworth Company is supplying films free of charge for the exhibition. The lieutenant promoting the venture says that the Kinema has a most soothing and beneficial effect upon the men after their hard work in the trenches.

Any American producers contemplating liberating their energies upon war dramas with an eye to catering for the British consumer would do well to think twice before commencing. We have already had about sufficient war dramas and as an exhibitor in the "Daily Citizen" expresses himself: "I am not uninterested in the war, but I do not want it thrust upon me wherever I go. I see war dramas only because I am paid to do so; for pleasure I go to the theater that will take me away from the war." Many regular patrons of the pictures here are regarding the military motion picture anything but favorably.

Henry Tress, the leading spirit of the Tress Company, of London, moving picture mechanics, is shortly to market an invention to abolish handle-turning for cameramen. His idea is a camera fitted in the customary fashion, but propelled by a clock work motor which must be wound up previous to the taking of the picture. The film is automatically unspooled and taken up in the empty box below by a chain from the clock-work motion, which is carefully enclosed separately in the interior of the camera. A lever for regulating the speed of the motor is fixed outside the camera along with the usual accessories such as an indicator showing how much negative has been made, etc. By another supplementary device an incandescent electric globe can be interposed behind the gate so that the camera can be readily converted into a projector.

Mr. Buttles.

A Three-Reel Comedy, Brimful of Laughter, by Essanay, With Richard C. Travers, Edna Mayo and Harry Dunkinson in the Leading Roles.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

CAST.

Mr. Buttles	Harry Dunkinson
The Earl of Everdun	Richard C. Travers
Huggins, the Earl's chauffeur	Richard C. Travers
Sallie Flighter	Edna Mayo
Her mother	Helen Dunbar
Mr. Flighter	Thos. Commerford
Gwendolyn	Dorothy Granville
Capt. Billy Flatsaddle	Ernest Maupain
Mrs. Flatsaddle	Lillian Drew
Sir Percy Palmerston	Sydney Ainsworth
Dottie Dorrington	Betty Brown
Mrs. Tipton	Betty Scott
James Bagshot, M.P	John Archer Curtis
Mrs. Wiggles, housekeeper	Mae Edwards

A CLEVER adaptation of Frederick Arnold Kummer's novelette, "Mr. Buttles," which appeared in the Smart Set magazine, some time ago, has been successfully done in moving pictures by one of Essanay's crack companies under the able direction of Joseph Byron Totten.

The action is swift and complicated at times, and it required exceptional care and foresight to escape gaps, or disconnections, in the visualized version. Besides, as will be seen from the cast given, double exposure was frequently resorted to, seeing that Richard C. Travers takes the characters of the Earl of Everdeen and his chauffeur, Huggins, compelling extreme nicety in the timing of certain incidents in the filming. The settings, both interior and exterior, of Everdeen Towers, a stately old residence of an English nobleman, are not just fitting in my opinion. These defects, however, will be overlooked because of the excellent acting of everyone in the entire cast and by reason of the many sprightly comedy incidents.

Mr. Buttles, one of the many generations of that name which had furnished butlers to the Everdeen family, is the center from which most of the mirth radiates. In a conversation with Mrs. Wiggles, the housekeeper, he reveals a most laughable condition of affairs in Everdeen Towers. "I pays his lordship two pounds a week to serve as butler, 'ere. With the Towers full of guests, my tips are 'andsome. With the Towers closed, I'm ruined, madam, ruined!"

To prevent the closing of the Towers, he forms a stock company, composed of the servants, under the name of Buttles, Limited. "Let me run the Towers, me Lord," he says to the impecunious Earl of Everdun. "Your Lordship furnishes the guests, and for the use of the premises and your Lordship's services, we agree to pay five hundred pounds for the season." The nerve of Buttles fairly sweeps the earl off his feet and he replies: "I'm going to accept your offer, Buttles, at least by proxy. Huggins, my chauffeur, shall take my place."

Huggins, by the way, resembles the Earl in appearance and features very closely; and it turns out that he has only assumed the name of Huggins, his real name being Hemingway, and his chosen profession that of novelist and newspaper correspondent. His Lordship leaves for Paris, after duly installing Huggins as master of the Towers.

The fun is fast and furious after the Earl disappears. Among the guests are pretty Sallie Flighter, and her mother, rich Americans, thanks to the popularity of a certain brand of canned goods manufactured by the head of the Flighter family. The real Earl, before his departure for Paris, had already selected Sallie in his mind's eye for mistress of the Towers; but Huggins falls in love with her at first sight and so does Sallie with him, thinking, of course, that he is the master of Everdun. Mrs. Wiggles, the anxious housekeeper, sends a warning message to the Earl in Paris and he arrives to prevent the marriage—just in time, however, to meet the irate Mr. Flighter, who holds in special abomination a titled son-in-law and who berates him roundly.

In the meantime Huggins reveals his identity to Sallie, and although that young lady is at first shocked to learn that she must forego a title, she finally grows proud of her love and her choice, more especially when a favorite of the real Earl, by the name of Gwendolyn, arrives at the Towers and proclaims her relationship to his Lordship.

Space forbids dwelling on the numerous side issues to the main story, which reveal Buttles as a veritable Machiavelli and an astounding plotter, by means of which he fleeces his guests in a most mirthful manner for the benefit of the Buttles, Limited. His handling of the affairs of the eloping parties, guests of the Towers, will furnish laughter of the most catching kind.

Mr. Travers has long since proved his versatility in photodramatic parts. In this instance he is at one and the same time, at least to the spectator, the Earl of Everdun and Huggins, his chauffeur. The keen observer will see at once the wide divergence between the two characters, as impersonated by Mr. Travers. The Earl has all the well-bred superiority of his social standing when conversing with his servant, the chauffeur, and the chauffeur has the respectful manner and deference due to his superior.

One of the best comedy situations in the photoplay, and one that Mr. Travers sustains with fine comedy intuition, is that in which he is about to reveal his identity to Sallie Fletcher, when Buttles approaches with the telegram from Gwendolyn, the real Earl's mistress, who demands monetary assistance for herself and child. Mr. Dunkinson is also a perfect opposite in this scene, as Mr. Buttles. His acting in the various scenes, where Buttles is waxing fat from the forced contributions from the guests, will stir the risibilities of everyone who views these pictures.

Miss Mayo presents Sallie Flighter with fine spirit. She is duly vivacious, sentimental and stern as the occasion demands. The peculiar style of coiffure adopted by Miss Mayo in this character mars the natural beauty of her face in the pictures. The forehead is almost completely hidden.

Miss Helen Dunbar and Thomas Commerford give finished characterizations of Mr. and Mrs. Flighter. Mr. Commerford does not overdo the true American snap of a self-made millionaire under the Stars and Stripes. Ernest Maupain and Sydney Ainsworth contribute largely to the mirth furnished, by their impersonations of Captain Billy Flatsaddle and Sir Percy Palmerston. The scene in a sequestered room in the Towers, where both men indulge copiously in beverages that inebriate, after the acknowledgement by Sir Percy that he was about to elope with the wife of the Captain, and by the Captain that he was about to elope with Dottie Dorrington, on the same night and on the same train, is a big laugh-making hit. It turns out right after all, for the Captain elopes with his own wife and Sir Percy with Dottie.

"The Pardon"

Pathe Three-Reel Release Which May Serve Directly and Indirectly As Propaganda for Widowed Mothers' Pension Bill.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN MAKING a production such as the one in question it is exceedingly difficult to fit every circumstance. Nevertheless, the one vital point must be ever the same, and the question asked "Is it better to pay a mother the necessary amount to care for her child, or to pay an institution to care for it for her?" must, except in a few minor cases, merit the answer which this film practically gives.

The story upon which the production is based is not a strong story; nor is it adequate to every instance. It does, however, show one side of the question, and the one big, human reason why the human mother differs from the other mothers of creation, which difference entitles her to the consideration that would leave in her care the offspring which she loves with more than a mere animal love.

Scene from "The Pardon" (Pathe).

Thais Lawton makes her bow to the film public for the first time in this production; and playing opposite her is Percy Standing, whose face is now pleasantly reminiscent on the screen. As the mother and widow who has refused all kinds of evil proposals for earning the money necessary to the maintenance of her baby girl, and later, after her release from the institution which did its best to fill a mother's place with the child, shoots and kills the man, who, having previously hounded the mother seeks to morally ruin the child now grown to be a woman. Thais Lawton is most convincing, and does not at any time protrude her own personality past the point where it fits the individual character of the mother.

The pardon for the woman who is in prison waiting to pay the penalty for self-confessed murder, is obtained by laying before the Governor the true facts of the case.

The big point evidently intended to be made in the picture is the necessity of a mother's love and care in order to properly nourish moral principles and a regard for home ties, the strength of which may aid in deterring the young from yielding to temptation.

The production was made at the Pathe Studios, and will no doubt strike a vibrant chord in the public heart. Others who have figured in the making of the picture are Mabel Trencer, W. T. Carlton, Howard Hall, and its director Donald MacKenzie.

SELIG'S "NE'ER-DO-WELL" COMPANY RETURNS.

The special company of Selig Polyscope players who have been in the Panama Canal Zone filming scenes called for in Rex Beach's novel "The Ne'er-Do-Well," are en route home. They were accompanied by William N. Selig. The company was afforded every convenience and courtesy while on the Isthmus, and Government officials afforded the players every opportunity to obtain interesting scenes along Uncle Sam's great waterway. Strange nooks and corners in Colon, Panama City and elsewhere were filmed and several interiors of the homes of Spanish aristocracy were also secured. The company of players which include Kathlyn Williams and others, are expected to arrive at Los Angeles, Cal., in the near future. "The Ne'er-Do-Well" will be released in the future as a Spectacular Special.

Marc McDermott

IN THE dual role of twins, one a disreputable epileptic and the other brother an honorable man, Marc McDermott, in the forthcoming Edison three-reeler, "The Deadly Hate," is afforded a splendid chance for characterization and an opportunity to give a sort of a Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde to the screen. Because of the physical requirements, the role of the epileptic is an especially trying one. When to this is added the fact that some of the strongest scenes are played with himself—in the picture—but acted alone without the spontaneous support of a fellow player, the artistic difficulties of the part are realized.

Marc McDermott.

But that Mr. McDermott will meet those widely-differing characterizations is to be expected of a player whose stage career has extended over three continents with some of the most distinguished stars, ranging from Shakespearian tragedies to the lightest comedy. Mr. McDermott is a fine type of the actor that the film has attracted and held with credit to both. So long has he been with Edison and has appeared in so many Edison plays that one name almost suggests the other.

With a face, striking even when in repose, Mr. MacDermott's finished art enables him to express the subtlest character shadings to the deepest and strongest emotion with unerring skill. While he is especially partial to parts that are quietly tense with emotional power, he is as well known for his parts in dramas of melodramatic force and action and for his delightful comedy characterizations.

Just before the Edison pictures called, Mr. McDermott had toured the United States, the British Isles and Australia with well known stars. He came to this country with Mrs. Patrick Campbell from England, his native country, then touring this country with her as Doctor Von Keller in "Magda." Later, in Sudermann's "Joy of Living," "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," and the original of Kuhleborn in Courtney's "Undine." He has appeared under Charles Frohman's management, playing "Sherlock Holmes" here and abroad, then in London with Marie Dainton and Dennis O'Sullivan after which came a year with Richard Mansfield and another with Joseph Brooks.

ADA KESSLER IN PARAGON PICTURES.

Miss Ada Kessler, daughter of Jacob Kessler, the well known Hebrew actor who recently appeared in New York City and who is well known all over the United States as one of the greatest Hebrew actors of this continent, made her debut in Kriterion photoplays in a comedy which will soon be released under the Paragon brand. Miss Kessler demonstrates some of her histronic talent and shows traits which are evident in her father's acting. She has a splendid personality which makes her work stand out as something strong and gives it an individuality. It is expected that considerable will be seen of Miss Kessler in the future on the screen.

JEFFERSON DE ANGELIS IN "THE FUNNY SIDE OF JEALOUSY."

Jefferson De Angelis, the highest salaried musical comedy star who ever has entered the motion picture field, appears in the leading role of the two-reel Big U comedy, "The Funny Side of Jealousy," to be released by the Universal on March 18.

Patrons of the "legitimate" have paid $2.00 a seat to see Mr. De Angelis in the flesh, but hereafter moving picture patrons will be given the opportunity to view this famous comedian on the screen for a ten-cent admission price on week days and from fifteen to twenty-five cents on Saturdays and Sundays.

THROUGH a delightful reality of environment and of character we are drawn right into the heart of this comedy instead of being compelled to stand aloof by theatrical settings and conventional interpretation. Instead of being compelled to suspend belief and accord dramatic license, we are permitted to view life in its true physiognomy. Less witty than another comedy in the same program, "The Jarr Family Discovers Harlem" is more humorous. Audiences will laugh at both, but Mr. McCardell's story will catch more sympathetic attention. The amusing incidents and situations are easily within the recognition of people who live in this neighborhood, and they will furnish a sort of self-congratulatory delight to those who do not—all America chuckles when there is a joke on New York.

Scene from "The Jarr Family Discovers Harlem": (Vitagraph).

Sharper delineation of character will be needed to strongly enforce the Jarr Family comedies upon public attention. Charles Eldredge carries off the honors, and both Mr. Davenport and Miss Tapley perform in creditable fashion, but we are not given a close enough view of what is passing in their minds. The whole drift of story visualization is towards psychology—it is even delightful in farce. It is plain to be seen that Mr. McCardle has furnished abundant material in this first number of the Jarr series, but he has also put something over that will help to improve moving pictures in general. His clear view of what is passing before our very eyes, his kindly sense of humor, and his distinctive ability to utilize what he observes promise to give us some delightful examples of sensible realism.

Nothing that is really human is alien from human sympathy. The appeal of realism which is not used as a cover to probe low moral depths is very strong because we are all deeply interested in ourselves and ever ready to laugh at our own vanity. Truth that is drawn from the ordinary experiences of life will come as a refreshing relief from theatrical artificiality.

HALL WROTE LUBIN'S NEW SERIAL.

The announcement recently made by the Lubin Company of a new fifteen-reel serial to be called "Road o' Strife" has created much interest in the moving picture world. The author of this new serial is Emmett Campbell Hall. To everyone familiar with the photoplay, this statement of authorship is an assurance not only that the story will be of dramatic merit, but that it will embody some new and striking characteristics, and, most important from the standpoint of manufacturer and exhibitor, exactly meet the popular taste of the moment. The ability of this author to keep his fingers upon the public pulse and anticipate and comply with the rapidly shifting preferences of the picture fans has been a very large factor in his success.

Rosemary Theby

ROSEMARY THEBY, who plays leads with Harry Myers in the Victor (Universal) Company is a St. Louis girl. Five years ago she left St. Louis and came to New York, as many other western girls have done and are doing, to see fame and—mayhap—fortune.

For a time she studied at the Sargent School of Acting and then completed a course of individual instruction in pantomime with Mme. Alberti. For about a year she worked very hard, intent upon securing an engagement on the legitimate stage.

Rosemary Theby.

Then began the weary round of the agencies seeking the engagement that never was secured. Everywhere she went Miss Theby met with the same question:

"What experience have you had?"

"Not having had any, Miss Theby found herself up again a stone wall. Finally, however, a friend suggested that she apply at the Vitagraph studios. At first she demurred, thinking that moving picture work would require much greater training than she possessed. Miss Theby believed that the standard of acting required to make a debut in legitimate work was far below that of motion pictures and trembled lest the moving picture directors would laugh at her preparations for work on the speaking stage.

Her training with Mme. Alberti in pantomime stood Miss Theby in good stead, however, and the Vitagraph company soon realized that it had developed a star of the first magnitude. After serving a year's apprenticeship with the Vitagraph Company Miss Theby went to the Reliance Company and then over to the Lubin works in Philadelphia. When her artistic powers were fully developed the Universal, always in the market for the stars of the industry, bid for her services. The salary offered Miss Theby made other companies who were after her think twice before bidding against the Big U and the result was that Miss Theby came over to New York where she has been appearing in the Victor photoplays ever since.

CATHERINE HENRY AND RALPH LEWIS IN "EX-CONVICT 4287."

In the Reliance release, "Ex-Convict 4287," Catherine Henry and Ralph Lewis display their ability as artists. The story, which deals with an ex-convict, is one that contains a number of tense dramatic situations. The true love of a wife and her husband's fear of his wife's discovery of his past, forms the basis of "Ex-Convict 4287."

"Mary's Duke."

Three Reel Victor Presented With a Strong Cast Scores Heavily as a Comedy Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THESE days when motion picture production is at its most prolific stage, the author who is able to turn out a scenario with all its parts normal, and which can appeal successfully to the intelligent mind, is a most useful and welcome member of the profession. Welcome most of all no doubt to the over-wrought director who frequently has to do his best with a story too insipid for public print. Therefore those who have the good fortune to view "The Duke and the Dinner" must surely feel that they owe a debt of gratitude to Miss Elaine Stern, the talented young writer from whose pen the scenario for this and many other notable productions has evolved.

Scene from "Mary's Duke" (Victor).

Neither must the producer, Lucius Henderson, and his efficient cast of players be forgotten in the passing about of honors. Mary Fuller is the featured star of the production, and her work is quite up to the usual mark. It must be acceded, however, that so well do the other members of the cast acquit themselves, that the impression received is that the picture rather than being merely a one star production, has been played with an all-star cast. Among those whose work stands out in this commendable manner, are Mrs. Charles G. Craig, who as the rich soap manufacturer's widow is a delight; Matt Moore, as Teddy Van Duysen, the son of an aristocratic family, and Etienne Girardot, whose impersonation of Duke Alphonso D'Enfetti, negotiating through a marriage bureau for the hand of the soap manufacturer's daughter (Mary Fuller) is a masterly piece of work.

Reverting again to the story, its form tends toward legitimate comedy, but at the same time it is a delicious sort of a burlesque on the type of European aristocracy that barters his title for wealth, and that other equally undesirable individual who falls an easy prey to such a bargain, implicating at the same time the flower of her offspring.

The production as presented is a rare comedy with not a trace of vulgarity of any sort to mar its entertaining qualities and it is greatly to be desired that a more frequent occurrence of comedies of this calibre may be met with.

"A Modern Magdalen."

Life Photo Five-Reel Melodrama Based Upon C. Hadden Chamber's Play.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE eternal contrast between povery and riches is the foundation of the human appeal in "The Modern Magdalen," the five-reel picture based upon the play of that name, by C. Hadden Chambers, the English dramatist. The story is one that is familiar to the patrons of the photoplay—the young girl who is forced by the grind of poverty and the greed of an unnatural father to leave home and who drifts into a life of shame. It is in the working out of this familiar theme that the author demonstrates his ability to give a new interest to well-tried situations. Katinka Jenkins, the heroine of "The Modern Magdalen," becomes the mistress of a wealthy mill owner in order that she may send home money to help support her father and invalid sister. She goes through the usual experience of a woman in such a case, and pays for her life of luxury with bitter tears. The manner of her reformation is novel. She does not at once marry the sturdy young workman who helps her to regain her womanhood, but enlists as an army nurse and serves bravely during an outbreak of yellow fever, the hero being one of the victims.

Chief among the merits of the picture is the steady interest of the story and the skilful weaving of the main threads into a closely knit and fairly consistent drama of modern life. The heroine's fall from virtue and the scenes devoted to that portion of her career are handled with excellent judgment, all unpleasant detail having been avoided. Treating of life in a factory town among both the rich and the poor, the two extremes of existence are shown in sharp contrast, the exterior scenes being particularly well done. The burning of the mill, the mob scenes, and the escape of the mill owner from the strikers, are all parts of "The Modern Magdalen" that reflect credit upon the producer and the actors under his direction.

The acting is excellent throughout. Catherine Countess in the leading role plays with feeling and a sure grasp of its dramatic possibilities. Lionel Barrymore is the mill owner who starts Katinka on the wrong road. He realizes the character both in looks and acting. William H. Tooker plays a conventional part with a degree of sincerity and ease of method that makes Joe Mercer doubly convincing. Charles Graham's deft touches of comedy are a great aid to the character of the father.

MUTUAL MAJESTIC DRAMA BY THOMAS NELSON PAGE.

Thomas Nelson Page, the famous novelist and present United States Ambassador to Italy, has written a story for production in moving pictures. Mr. Page's contribution is called "The Outcast" and has been filmed by Majestic and released in the Mutual program with several of the best members of the Hollywood stock company appearing in the various roles. The directing was done by John B. O'Brien.

As the girl, whose identity is unknown in the dive where she is dancing, Mae Marsh gives a performance of unusual dramatic value. Robert Harron appears as the lover, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, Spottiswoode Aitken and Jack Dillon are also in the cast.

THE entire audience of a veritable theater plays an active part in "The Little Band of Gold." Possibly a thousand people, quite as possibly more or less than a thousand, participate with enthusiasm, for Roscoe and Mabel as husband and wife are in a box at one side, with Ford, Ethel and a secondary beauty in a box at the other, and psychology runs rampant on account of Ethel. Roscoe is slightly intoxicated when he brings his wife and her mother to an operatic performance and he evinces languid interest about all that is going on until he notices his former partner in crime, Ford, in the opposite box with a new and ravishing beauty. Ethel is not only a handsome woman but her figure is of the kind that caused Helen of Troy to be abducted by Paris. Ethel is superb enough to cause another Trojan war, and one actually takes place in miniature when Roscoe forgets "The Little Band of Gold."

The self-revelation of Roscoe when he ceases to remember charming Mabel and becomes absorbed in studying the stunning creature with Ford raises the farce to comedy—characterization dominates the plot. In fact, the plot is so entirely made by the characters that "The Little Band of Gold" is genuine comedy rather than farce, and it is the more delightful to those weary of knockdown slapstick of clowns and acrobats. Roscoe notes that decollete Ethel—she is not demi-decollete, but the whole thing—is a splendid specimen of womanhood, corresponding closely to the average man's idealization, and his primitive instincts become hectic. She is entirely too good for Gassy Gotrox—besides he has a chaser along—so Roscoe motions "See you outside." He excuses himself to wife and mama-in-law and meets Ford with his Brightlight ladies in the lobby. Still actuated by the primordial, Roscoe steals the stunning beauty from under her escort's eyes and carries her off to a lobster palace, where the customary discovery and riot follows. The story leads on to a definite and entirely natural conclusion with a deft finishing touch that is an inspiration.

Ford Sterling will be welcomed—he strengthens the cast—but it is about time for him to dispense with so much artificiality of grimace. It has a forced appearance from the front that could be relieved by more refinement of interpretation. The funniest thing in the world is not the monkey, but his noble prototype, just plain man, and he keeps on growing funnier the more seriously he takes himself.

A recent acquisition to the Griffith-Mutual forces at their studio in Hollywood, Cal., is Alfred Paget, an erstwhile member of the Biograph Company. He is appearing in the title role of "Enoch Arden," which is being produced at the Mutual studios by Director Cabanne.

Harry Weiss

HARRY WEISS, who is just entering his 27th year, is the youngest of the Chicago Film Exchange managers. What he is short in years, he has made up in experience. Graduating from St. Vaitors College, at Kankakee, Illinois, in 1902, Mr. Weiss put in two years studying electricity, and in 1904 was employed by the Chicago Edison Company, as calibrater, having charge of the meter department of the entire south side division of the City of Chicago.

Harry Weiss.

Early in 1905 whenever there was moving picture machine trouble in Chicago (and in those days there were but six or seven machines in operation at two of the theaters in Chicago, and a few of the Colleges), the work had a fascination for Mr. Weiss, as it coupled electricity with mechanics, and the year 1906 showed him to be a full-fledged member of the old Chicago Moving Picture Operators' Local, having one of the first cards issued in Chicago.

Between 1906 and 1908 Mr. Weiss in short succession became operator and then owner of a string of moving picture theaters. In 1908 he became associated with the Chicago Film Exchange, working for them in their various offices throughout the country. Mr. Weiss has also been manager of the Duluth Film Exchange of Duluth, Minnesota, the Minneapolis Feature Exchange of Minneapolis, the Feature Film Sales Company of Chicago, and was associated with the General Film Company of Minneapolis. Mr. Weiss, being a Chicago man, finally drifted back to his old home town in 1911. Early in 1914 he met Lewis J. Selznick, General Manager of the World Film Corporation, and on the 29th of April, 1914, took charge of the Chicago office, which then boasted of 600 square feet of space and two employees. Today the same office occupies an entire floor, has twenty-one employees, and is doing exactly twenty times the business that it did when Mr. Weiss took charge. In fact, the Chicago office is today the second office in point of business of the World Film Corporation, with a margin so close to the leading office, that it is a case of neck and neck for the first honors.

There is not a customer on the World Film Corporation's books in the Chicago office, but what is personally acquainted and speaks the highest words of praise for "Hustling Harry," as he is more popularly known in Chicago circles.

JACK DILLON JOINS UNIVERSAL.

J. Francis Dillon, known to the theatrical world as Jack Dillon, has joined the Universal West Coast forces and will hereafter be seen in Nestor comedies. Mr. Dillon was born in New York City twenty-six years ago. He has been on the stage for ten years, playing with Adelaide Keim, Harry Tighe and in many well known stock companies. Of the well known productions in which Mr. Dillon has been featured are "The Rosary," "The Right of Way," "Officer 666" and "A Gentleman of France." Previous to his joining the Universal company Mr. Dillon acted as director for Carlyle Blackwell. Mr. Dillon will be under the direction of Al Christie and will play juvenile leads.

A MAJESTIC "TEMPERANCE LESSON."

"A Temperance Lesson" is the title of a domestic comedy written and produced at the Majestic studio by Director John B. O'Brien.

This comedy theme deals with a wealthy aged gentleman who, in order to keep a remaining bottle of choice liquor for his wife, from his servants, locks it in his office safe. During that night his pretty young wife becomes ill. The physician prescribes the bottle of liquor. He starts for the office to get it, where he is mistaken for a burglar by a watchful policeman and is pursued to his home.

"M'liss"

Bret Harte Story Is Made Into Five Reel Picture by the World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE charm, the drama and distinctly individual characters conceived by Bret Harte and given literary expression in his story, "M'liss"—acted on the stage by Annie Pixley, some twenty-five years ago—offered photoplay possibilities that inspired this five part production of the World Film Corporation. Besides directing the picture, O. A. C. Lund played Don Jose, the villain, with Howard Estabrook cast as Gray, the schoolmaster, and Barbara Tennant in the title role. Supporting these actors is a quite numerous company that traveled from New Jersey to St. Augustine, Fla., and on to Asheville, N. C., in order to get the proper variety of settings for a colorful subject.

It is colorful, and no mistake, with the tropical luxuriance of Spanish gardens as a rich background for the second period of Melissa's career, when she has learned to dance and flirt and wear pretty clothes, and when the lean days of poverty in Smith's Pocket are but a remembrance. In the transition from the barren uselessness of a deserted Nevada claim to the splendor of a rich estate, there is a welcome contrast of environment and accompanying it, of course, is the development of the character of "M'liss." We find her a ragged, tempestuous little daughter of the wild, and leave her in silks and laces, the owner of productive lands and about to become the wife of the schoolmaster, whom she never quite forgot.

Miss Tennant has by far the most difficult part in the picture and despite a personality not especially well suited to M'liss, as a child, she presents the character with praiseworthy sincerity. There is no little appeal in her portrayal of the unhappy girl, whose father dies a drunkard and whose best friend, really her only friend, is Gray. Mr. Estabrook is manly, likable and an altogether satisfactory figure as the stalwart young American engaged in training the rising generation of Smith's Pocket. There is no serious fault to be found with the performances given by these players, nor, for that matter, with the acting of the remainder of the cast.

In the earlier reels showing with much detail the primitive life in the Nevada community and later on, when the action is supposed to transpire in Southern California, there are a number of scenes of individual excellence—M'liss attending the country circus, then in after years, the fete given in her honor, and best of all the spectacular burning of Gray's oil wells. But the dramatic possibility of these incidents is at times discounted by a construction which permits annoying jumps at vital moments of the story. For example, we see M'liss, still a ragged child, in the room with Don Jose, who has come to take her to California, and the very next scene, without an intervening sub-title, shows her to be a much changed girl in her new home.

The virtues of the story and its picturesque presentation are sufficient, however, to more than counterbalance defects and make "M'liss" a pleasing film, reminiscent of the romantic period of which Bret Harte wrote. Without question, the romance lends itself well to photoplay adaptation, for it deals with a phase of American life that naturally suggests a pictorial narrative of dramatic incidents.

Caruso Turns Universal Cameraman

For a few moments the other day Enrico Caruso, the King of Tenors, was a cameraman for the Universal Animated Weekly. Surrounded by a battery of reporters who hurled questions at the rate of about a dozen a second, and smiling, singing and kissing good-byes to a screaming, yivaing horde of fellow countrymen on the shore, Caruso was more occupied than he is in his role in "La Boheme." He blew kisses here and he blew kisses there and as his lips smacked against his swarthy palm it sounded like the threat of a German submarine.

And while he was being besmudged with return kisses and the members of the little Italian group were draping themselves about his shoulders, Jack Cohn and Cameraman U. K. Whipple, of the Universal Animated Weekly, suggested to the youthful spirited idol that he turn the tables and the camera on the army of photographers who were busier at that moment than a one-armed paperhanger with the itch.

Caruso met the suggestion with a burst of enthusiasm. Under the direction of Whipple the big tenor aimed the Animated Weekly camera at the battery of photographers and ground away at the handle like a Neapolitan organ-grinder in a charitable neighborhood.

The novelty went over with a yelp and every big newspaper carried photographs of Caruso in the role of cameraman and with his hat pitched on the side of his head he filled the role perfectly.

At the conclusion of the session Caruso congratulated Messrs. Cohn and Whipple on their ability as teachers. However, it is a matter of regret that after developing the film Caruso had taken the teachers could not speak as enthusiastically of Caruso's ability as a cameraman.

Among the poses filmed of Caruso by the Animated Weekly was a near close-up of the vocal organs which carol forth the $2,000 notes with as little exertion as it takes to eat a forkful of spaghetti.

"The First Commandment"

Fine Three-Reel Drama of Money God's Rule and How It Was Broken—Carefully Made Story Exceptional Offering.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS is the first of the three-act stories that the Kalem Company is releasing on Fridays. It is a picture full of substance and high merit, promising well for other offerings of this series. The author is Harry O. Hoyt and the tale appeared first in "The American Woman." Put on the screen by Tom Moore, the humanity of it is made to come out strong by skillful acting. The cast, with a single doubtful exception, is happily chosen and the characters are doubly pleasing on account of their convincing as well as attractive presentation. Among the many excellently drawn human entities it is hard to be sure where the honors lie; but, of this, one can be certain, that Marguerite

Scene from "The First Commandment" (Kalem).

Courtot, as the money worshiper's daughter, has as far as this reviewer can see, outdone herself. She has been doing praiseworthy work; but it is plain that she is growing very speedily into an actress of more than ordinary power. She has in this picture drawn a young girl, simple, fresh and lovable on whose heart strings the changing situation plays as on a harp notes of true-hearted filial and sisterly comradeship and sympathy, full of minor chords and joyous strains, moments of pleading, tears, laughter and love. That early scene by her father's chair in its delicacy and its girlhood is perfect, but not more so than the scene in which she receives her first foolish lover, who is a joke to her. There is no lost sympathy and no petulance; she packs him off just as a girl of that kind would. The highest kind of humor is in it.

The foolish boy, son of her father's business rival, is played by Lowell R. Stark, and is "in character" all the way, although it has been impossible for the actor to disguise his eyes and forehead that show him as, in actuality, of a diametrically different kind. Austin Webb, as the rich man, carries his stage business with the assurance of the finished actor, and the scenes in which he contends with his more or less dissolute son (Tom Moore), who marries a stage woman (Marie Wells), are full of convincing and restrained playing by all concerned. Robert Ellis, who plays the accepted lover of the girl, is aceptable, yet seems to find some difficulty in keeping within the measure of his part and in tune with the story—there is little romance in him. William Calhoun, as the business rival of the rich man, who tries to force him to bring about a marriage with his foolish son, has a role that is in the background.

There is nothing startling or new in the plot; but it amply justifies its use in a three-reel picture, its chief merit being that it furnishes many unusually human scenes. One may suspect that the quality of the whole comes largely from the players and their director. The staging and photography are all that one could want.

LESTER AND RAY IN "THE CITY OF THE DEAD."

Louise Lester and Charles Ray are seen in "The City of the Dead," a punchy Mutual release from Inceville. Charles Swickard did the directing. The settings are Oriental, and Ray plays the part of a young American traveller.

Sallie Crute

WHEN an actress is able to be really funny in comedy when she doesn't care a bit for that kind of work, when she is able to swing to the opposite extreme and play, with dramatic force and convincing power, the fascinating vampire, around which the burden of such a play revolves, it is safe to say that the actress is uncommonly versatile and talented. Such, briefly, is a sketchy outline of Sallie Crute, the Edison favorite.

Sallie Crute.

With the sunniest of natures and smiles, it at first might seem strange that she is so often cast in that role—so often as to be known as "the Edison adventuress." But when the picture must give good and logical evidence why men are fascinated, the reason is obvious.

Miss Crute hails from away down South and has all the sunny liveliness of the typical Southern girl. When the Southern Minstrels, on her plantation home near Huntsville, Ala., were finished, the darky performers with one voice would shout for "Miss Sallie," and up would get the nine-year-old whom the blessed fairies had endowed with gifts and "speak her piece." Her ambition spread with her reputation and she soon was found in the Elitch-Long Stock Company of Denver.

For various motion picture companies she then played juvenile leads, and in the latter part of 1911 and in 1912 she was the lead in the stage success, "The Rosary." Miss Crute thereafter appeared with Amelia Bingham as the ingenue in in "The Climbers;" the Widow Winters in "The Three Twins;" Dorothy in "The Deep Purple;" Agy Lynch in "Within the Law;" in "Brewster's Millions;" "Officer 666," and in other well-known plays.

Miss Crute puts her heart and soul in everything she does and is known as one of the most "natural" actresses on the screen. Her charm lies in spontaneity of interpretation, which seems to spring from the impulse of the moment, but is, in fact, the spontaneity that comes when technique is so absorbed as to be a part of one's nature. Her impersonations are always infused with infectious good nature—and personality—except when she plays the adventuress or vampire and then we do see art, for she seems the subtle, sinuous charmer incarnate. Although these parts are essentially not the kind that win sympathy and popularity, Miss Crute is a favorite and is easily in the forefront when it comes to depicting a fascinating vampire, such as her character of "Stella," the dancer, in the Edison three-reel, "In Spite of All," the play made famous by Mrs. Fiske.

MARSHALL AND FARRINGTON IN PRINCESS DRAMA.

Boyd Marshall and Rene Farrington play the leading roles in "And He Never Knew," by Arthur Ellert, a Princess release in the Mutual program. Others in the cast are Kenneth Clarendon, John Reinhard, Edward N. Hoyt and F. White. The story tells how, by a clever ruse, a wealthy girl made a poor man feel that he had enough money to marry her.

CAPT. BONAVITA JOINS HORSLEY.

Capt. Jack Bonavita, for many years the most celebrated lion-tamer and trainer of wild animals in the world, has been engaged by David Horsley, and has already joined the Bostock Arena and Jungle at Los Angeles.

Arrangements have already been completed whereby Capt. Bonavita will appear in and assist in the production of Mina Films. The releases of this new licensed brand have heretofore been confined to one reel comedies, so that the announcement that Bonavita would be associated with them has given rise to much speculation as to the further policies of the manufacturer.

Favorite Players' Star Crossed the Continent to Find Two—Sees Big Future for Polite Comedies.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL, star of the Favorite Players Film Company, crossed the continent in quest of two actresses. Since February twenty-sixth he has received possibilities in the offices of the Alliance Corporation on Forty-sixth street, and between calls his time has been utilized in closing contracts with authors and publishers for the photoplay rights to books and plays. He needs a lot of good material, for the Favorite Players have outlined a program requiring sixteen multiple reel pictures a year and two busy companies instead of one at the Los Angeles studio. A few days ago his inroads on the literary market were about completed; he had approved the printing of the delicate light effects in his latest production, "The High Hand," and he was almost, but not quite, ready to announce the capture of two actresses worth traveling a few thousand miles to find.

Mr. Blackwell has no intention of making the return journey alone. To feel that the trip has been an entire success, he must look across the dining-car table and see an actress whose name will not appear strange in big type. He will tell her of the star parts she is to have in two forthcoming productions, while at his right hand will be seated a new leading lady for the pictures in which he is to feature himself. It is rather likely that whether Mr. Blackwell looks across the table or glances at his right-hand neighbor his eyes will rest on a pleasing countenance topped by dark hair, or, if not exactly dark, say hair of a nondescript brown.

Carlyle Blackwell.

You see he doesn't take much stock in the popular notions about the physical requirements of a woman who is to be photographed in dramatic action. He admits that a pronounced blond takes a good picture and that by all the laws of photoplay mating he should be linked with feminine fairness—but. And after the "but," with its indecisive suggestion of some mental conviction, one may gather from guarded comments that Mr. Blackwell is not predisposed to look for emotional expressiveness under a particularly light marcelle wave. Such is the opinion of a man whose youth has been a somewhat disconcerting dream of fair women, and he is gallant enough to say (for publication) that all of his leading ladies were wonderful.

Reminiscing about these wonderful leading ladies, Mr. Blackwell recalled the days, back in 1909, when he enjoyed playing light comedies in the Vitagraph studio with Florence Turner, Lillian Walker, Mary Fuller, Norma Talmadge and Virginia Pearson. After that came two years of Western drama with Alice Joyce and two more years, still with Alice Joyce, when society dramas were wanted by the Kalem Company. Following the long stay with Kalem, he played with Mary Pickford in "Such a Little Queen" and with Violet Mersereau in "The Spitfire," and more recently Edna Mayo, Ruth Hartman and Neva Gerber have been in his own companies.

In considering the subjects he has in mind, Mr. Blackwell declared that he sees no reason why straight comedies should not be made in multiple reels; that he knows there is a market for them, and that he intends to have a hand in supplying the market. He cited "Tillie's Punctured Romance" as a striking instance of the success of slapstick comedy in extended form, and held with apparent conviction that more refined humor has equal possibilities.

"With the actors we have now, with those I am going to get, and with William D. Taylor to look after the direction," he said, "we will be finely equipped for just such work." As a producer, he is a stickler for the careful handling of a film after it has been photographed, and acts on the assumption that a director's task is not complete until a picture is cut, sub-titled and properly printed and toned. Having concluded that two men generally have two ideas about the important points of a story—one right, the other wrong—he cuts his own film.

Mr. Blackwell will leave for Los Angeles on March sixth, his pockets bulged by contracts with authors and his hands laden with the baggage of a star and a leading woman—perhaps.

THIS play is selected from an unusually fine program for many reasons, and first of these is its hold on the audience. Like many productions that fascinate the spectator from beginning almost to the last moment, "Snatched from a Burning Death" lacks an original, or a strikingly artistic, conclusion. It will not win open commendation on that account, but its holding power is beyond question. Though nominated a melodrama, the story is romantic in depicting heroic, idealistic and poetic phases of human character—it has a sympathetic story value attained through superior characterization, and it reminds us of the terrible issues at stake when our ancestors blazed the trail of American civilization.

Supported by strong company, every member an admirable type, Helen Gardner easily carries off the honors—it has never been necessary to force pre-eminence upon Miss Gardner—and she demonstrates her ability in the rude attire of a frontiersman's daughter instead of through the distractions of clinging draperies. Her finest work is purely psychological—she has an artistic combination of imagination and intelligence that enables her to reveal varied aspects of a woman's heart and mind. In some of her past efforts to brace up weak plays she has been led into an excess of acting that destroys its own purpose by overemphasis of detail. In "Snatched from a Burning Death" she departs entirely from theatricalism and adheres to a realistic delineation without injuring its poesy.

Scene from "Snatched from a Burning Death" (Vitagraph).

The story as presented has that Autumn-like haze of old romance about it, that pathos of distance, which arouses a sensation of viewing awakened spirits of the past. The charm of the piece is atmospheric, just as much of its beauty is topographical. It is a picture of primitive characters releasing primitive emotions during the frontier pre-emption of land in this fair country of ours, with that logic of cause and effect which makes the screen portrayal more convincing than the stage play. It is to be especially commended because it is on the right lines of motion picture evolution.

"A Gentleman of Leisure"

Wallace Eddinger Featured by Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., in a Well Known Broadway Production.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

"A GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE," a Lasky feature, went well at The Strand theater. There is no reason to doubt that it will go equally well elsewhere. Wallace Eddinger has a pleasing personality, he seems well fitted for his part, and he certainly is the centre of things every time he appears upon the screen. He was well supported on the whole. The most valuable thing in a screen adaptation of a play like "The Gentleman of Leisure" is, of course, the humor as it grows out of natural situations. It seems to me that at times there is just the suspicion of a "drag," but just then something really funny happens and we resume our interest at once. As usual with Lasky films the titles always hit the right psychological moment, which means a whole lot when we remember that often the best part of a comedy is dialogue and that not all dialogue can be effectively translated into screen action.

The painstaking attention to detail which has become a distinguishing mark of all the Lasky films, is apparent all through this production and most pleasantly apparent. The subject was full of pitfalls for the average director, but the direction here has triumphed over them all. There is in the settings and in the groupings that touch of art and beauty which reviewers of Lasky films have had occasion to comment upon favorably and frequently.

"A Gentleman of Leisure" was by no means as filmable as other plays taken from the legitimate stage, the plot though interesting enough is spun out over something of a distance. In spite of these handicaps the filmed version has been made most acceptable. There is a lot of good characterization in the play, of which the actor who played the part of the burglar gave the most convincing demonstration. "Molly Creedon" had no easy task and at times the art of the actress was strained to the breaking point. Creedon, the deputy commissioner of New York in the days before the Lexow Committee was a clever impersonation. That he was spared from all consequences of his grafting just because he made a promise never to do it again seemed to many an abuse of dramatic license. The acting of the two men who rendered the part of the Englishman and his son was decidedly good. Taken all in all this production averages well.

ELAINE IVANS AT LIBERTY.

Miss Elaine Ivans, a most dainty little actress of the ingenue type, would like an engagement with some motion picture company working in a New York studio. Miss Ivans has had considerable experience in pictures, having appeared in Biograph, Imp, Lubin, Reliance, Pathe and Centaur subjects to the entire satisfaction of the directors under whom she worked. Owing to the fact that she is the sole support of a widowed mother and younger brother living in Brooklyn she has been compelled repeatedly to give up engagements which would take her out of New York. Miss Ivans picture training has been under such directors as Griffith, Kirkwood, Fahrney, Fitzmaurice and Powell, and her work has been highly commended.

PHOTOPLAYS FOR HIPPODROME.

While the Shuberts intend to offer feature photoplays as the chief attraction at the Hippodrome during the spring and summer, there will be much besides films to make the entertainment interesting, according to the plans that A. Toxen Worm, general press representative for the Shuberts, outlined recently.

The new policy, to be inaugurated March 22d, calls for a series of spectacular pictures that will be presented to the accompaniment of a symphony orchestra and in many instances with novel stage devices, permitted by the exceptional equipment at the Hippodrome. In one way or another it is probable that use will be made of the celebrated tank and where the action on the screen may be supplemented by figures on the stage, it is likely that they will be supplied. The details of such embellishments will, of course, be changed to suit each production.

In addition to the symphony orchestra of one hundred players, a singing chorus of three hundred voices will assist in interpreting the music, and the pipe organ, already installed in the Hippodrome, will be used at each performance. Grand opera singers from the leading companies in this country and abroad, are being engaged for solo work.

There will be four performances daily, the evening prices to range from fifteen cents to one dollar, whereas in the afternoon the best seats will be twenty-five cents. A number of photoplays are under consideration for the initial offering, but as yet no decision has been reached.

LUBIN SPECIALS DIRECT.

In order to improve its service to exhibitors and, incidentally, to satisfy innumerable requests, the Lubin Company has adopted a new policy in regard to some of its special features and will handle them direct. The first of the big reelers to be sent out is "Eagle's Nest," a thrilling drama of Western life in which Edwin Arden, the author, is featured.

"Eagle's Nest" has unanimously been called by the photoplay critics one of the best pictures of its type ever filmed. It was made by Romaine Fielding in Colorado and most of the big scenes take place in the Garden of the Gods, which gives the story a wonderful background. "Eagle's Nest," as a play, was a great success some years ago and earned for its author a fortune of over $75,000. As a screen play its possibilities were unlimited and Arden and Fielding in cooperation obtained wonderful results with it. One thing for which "Eagle's Nest" will long be remembered is the vividly realistic battle between Indians and emigrants which takes place on a picturesque plain close to rugged mountains, and in which the old Western warfare is reproduced with historical accuracy.

Lubin is at present making a number of special productions, all of which were big successes on the legitimate stage. In each one of these plays a widely known star will be featured and supported by a strong cast of Lubin players.

GLORIA REPRESENTATIVE IN TOWN.

B. Blumenthal, the general representative of the Gloria Film Company of Torino, Italy, has just arrived in New York. He is staying at the McAlpin Hotel. Mr. Blumenthal has with him a number of excellent feature films which are considered the cream of the Gloria's recent productions. He has a five reel feature called "The Pearl of the Ganges," which had a great run in Europe. He is looking for a suitable agency to distribute the Gloria product for the United States and Canada. Mr. Blumenthal, who has the world's rights for the Milano, will later go to Mexico where he will seek a good distributing station for the output of that company in South America.

"Affinities"

United Film Service Releases Two Reel Grandin Comedy in Which the Affinity Idea Runs Riot.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN SPITE of the fact that "Affinities" persists in being classed as a comedy-drama, we will release it from the latter term because the gravity of the situation is so slight as to be scarcely noticeable. On the other hand, the comedy side, which, as already inferred, is almost all of it, has been developed logically and well.

Pretty Ethel Grandin plays the role of the much-distressed young wife, while William O'Neil impersonates well the equally distressed husband. There are several women and men who figure innocently enough in luring on a divorce case. There is a detective who, as a type, stands forth with a thick-skulled assurance that aids the comedy of the play considerably. And there are complications which follow thick and fast on one another, and which, we are glad to say, are brought about in the most remorselessly natural manner.

It is a perfectly natural happening that the husband should work after hours trying to reconcile a discrepancy in his books, and that the telephone repair man should drop in late to look the telephone over. And it is quite as natural that the young wife, uneasy at her spouse's deferred arrival for dinner, should ring him up to find out the reason. Neither was it an unexpected sequence that caused suspicion to enter the mind of the wife at receiving no answer to her call; nor that the same unhealthy train of thought should find its way into the gray matter of the husband when the naughty little wife, receiving a call from hubby shortly afterward, in a fit of pique fails to respond. Then finally comes the first real fuss, when more misunderstandings bring with them the employment of a detective, who proceeds to bungle things generally, and a couple of attorneys who finally succeed in giving the case a speedy entry before the judge, who all too speedily grants the divorce, while those who would rectify the mistake and ameliorate the situation clamor before the door in vain. And then comes the grand climax, when the true facts of the case are laid bare to the divorcees, when they fall on each other's necks, rush for another license, and before the judge has left the courtroom prevail upon him to repair the damage.

The production is one that will meet with success in any theater in which it may be presented. It is well photographed, well staged and, above all, is presented with a good cast.

PICTURE PLAYHOUSE DECLARES DIVIDEND.

An event not at all common in the feature film business was recorded Tuesday of last week when the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., with offices in the World Tower Bldg., 110 West 40th St., New York City, declared a semi-annual dividend of four per cent. on the preferred stock of the corporation.

FOUR NEW MUTUAL DIRECTORS.

Among the most recent additions to the directors' forces at the Reliance and Majestic studios are Baldy Belmont, Tod Browning, George Nichols and Lloyd Ingraham.

The Mutual Directors' list is now a pretty big one.

Paul Panzer Popular

Old Pathe Player Receives Royal Reception From Photoplay Fans.

AS EVIDENCE of the popularity of the picture play among the very best class of the theater going public, the present tour of Paul Panzer, the popular Pathe star, is even stronger than the dollar prices asked and willingly paid on Broadway.

Mr. Panzer has been appearing in person at the picture houses in the East and Middle West, since the completion of the Pauline series, and the outstanding features of his appearances in the different cities, has been the receptions tendered him by the best social organizations, business men's clubs, and high public officials; the newspapers have devoted space on their front pages to his engagements, and in their society columns, to the events planned in his honor.

On the occasion of his visit to Boston, Governor David I. Walsh of Massachusetts, expressed the intention of attending his performance, but business preventing, the Governor invited him to visit at the capitol, and a picture of the Pathe star, now occupies a prominent place on the walls of the Executive Chambers.

In one of the cities in Massachusetts, the name of which Mr. Panzer does not wish mentioned, a banquet was tendered him by the Manufacturers Club, every member of which is a millionaire; at the close of the reception, each member present, removed an article of jewelry from his person and presented it to him as a memento of the occasion.

Mr. Panzer will bring his tour to a close in a few weeks, and resume work before the camera in the Pathe studios.

Crane Wilbur Joins Lubin

CRANE WILBUR, widely known as a leading man and photoplay star, has joined the Lubin Company in Philadelphia and is to be featured in a number of novel productions that the Lubin Company began making this week. Wilbur will have as his leading woman Miss Mary Charleson and will be directed by John Ince.

Crane Wilbur.

As a photoplayer, Mr. Wilbur has made an enviable reputation for himself, not merely through his good looks, but by his versatility as an actor as well. He began his theatrical career some fifteen years ago as a fifty-cent super in the old Manhattan Theater in New York with Mrs. Fiske. Six months afterwards he was assistant stage manager, and for four seasons he played various parts with Mrs. Fiske in all her notable productions.

Following his engagement with Mrs. Fiske, Wilbur went into stock and met with much success. For two seasons he had a stock company of his own and toured extensively. His advent into pictures was rather unusual. The Pathe Company wanted a certain type of player for a picture they were making, and someone running across a photograph of Wilbur it was unanimously decided that he was the very man they wanted. After quite a hunt, they found Wilbur rehearsing for "The Girl in the Taxi" and persuaded him to go into pictures. He was with Pathe for four years and is widely known for his work in "The Perils of Pauline." Previous to joining the Lubin forces, Wilbur toured in vaudeville.

Wilbur is a type particularly adapted for screen acting, his clean-cut features, lithe, athletic figure and ability as an actor making him a valuable asset in photoplays. In the new plays in which he will appear for the Lubin Company Wilbur will have one of the best opportunities of his career.

"The Great Italian Earthquake"

Some of the Most Startling Scenes Ever Shown Are in These Pictures of Terror and Suffering That Followed the Recent Great Earthquake in Italy (True Feature).

By Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is somewhat over two reels of this offering which was taken by cameramen happening to be in the neighborhood of the catastrophe with cameras ready. The scenes of destruction and misery were taken in and about the towns of Avezzano, Paterno, San Bennetto and Artuchio. Some of these places were populous and prosperous cities and their remains are in truth less than heaps of ruins; they look as though the years had shaken them down into dust heaps.

It is not the shapes of these dust heaps that yesterday were dwellings that makes this offering startling; but the pictures of stunned and still weeping humanity that it gives. And of all things shown in it the most terribly astonishing is the sight that it gives of a young girl being literally dug up from living burial under the fallen wall of her former home. We are told that she had been there five days. The beams of the wall had felled her and had then protected her from the debris above. We see her uncovered before she could be drawn out of her close prison. The very taking of such a scene was cold hearted and the impression that looking at it leaves is unpleasant, especially in spectators with the keen and unblunted sensibilities of those who as in this happy community, see few scenes of pain and very few of horror.

The picture shows the irrepressible light heartedness of the children playing among the ruins of their homes. It shows the tears of those who not yet being attended to, still suffer from wounds and fear. It shows the tears of the old women who have lost everything they cherished and who turn their heads towards the camera as though sending a message out to the world as to some who are friendly, telling them of their pain.

The photography is very fair; it is all that could be expected under the circumstances. The subjects were chosen to interest and instruct. It is a powerful plea for help.

JAY HUNT IN KAY-BEE DRAMA.

Jay Hunt, the veteran director and actor of the Ince forces, who is affectionately known as "Daddy," will soon be seen in what is expected to prove the greatest triumph of his screen career in a two-part rural drama entitled "His Brother's Keeper," which will be released by the Kay-Bee-New York Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Hunt portrays the part of David with a skill that makes the character fairly breathe on the screen. He is capably supported by Violet MacMillan in the role of Amanda and Joseph Dowling and Gertrude Claire and Jeremiah and his wife. In addition to playing the principal part, Mr. Hunt directed the production.

RUBE MILLER WITH KRITERION.

A. M. Kennedy, general manager of productions of Kriterion Service, has succeeded in obtaining the services of Rube Miller, who for the past year has been directing comedies for the Keystone Company. Mr. Miller will have a company working in Santa Barbara, and his productions will be released through the Kriterion Service in the near future, under the Kriterion Star Comedy Brand. Great credit to Mr. Kennedy, as much was due to his personal efforts in securing this able director.

Irene Fenwick

PRETTY blue-eyed, brown-haired, magnetic Irene Fenwick, present sensation of Broadway, has signed a contract for a term of years with George Kleine to appear exclusively in pictures for him. Just how important this announcement is you can learn only by a fairy visit into the private haunts of New York film magnates, who for more than a year have unsuccessfully tried to lure this slender slip of a girl into motion pictures.

Irene Fenwick is the star of the "Song of Songs," Al. Woods' latest play, now breaking records at the Eltinge Theater, New York. Her newly signed contract with George Kleine will in no way interfere with Miss Fenwick's extraordinary stage career. While playing in New York, she will be engaged in film work in the Kleine studio. Miss Fenwick, therefore, will continue to be seen in the life in Manhattan and in film everywhere. In this way her wonderful stage reputation will be preserved and enhanced.

Irene Fenwick.

Miss Fenwick is a Chicago girl in the early twenties, but her professional career dates back to the days of "Peggy from Paris," in which she found her first "bit" part. She has appeared successively under five of the best-known managements on Broadway and has starred in several internationally known comedies and dramas. Henry W. Savage, Charles Frohman, William A. Brady, Cohan & Harris and Al. H. Woods have featured dainty Miss Fenwick at different times in recent years.

Following her success in small parts in "Peggy from Paris," "The Office Boy" and "Just One of the Boys," Charles Frohman gave her the first really serious work of her career in the role of Sylvia Futvoye, the leading feminine part in "The Brass Bottle." In this she scored an instant hit and the following season appeared in Frohman's "The Speckled Band," a detective story by A. Conan Doyle. "The Importance of Being Earnest," that clever skit by Oscar Wilde, was her next success and in this she toured the principal cities of England. "Kiki" in the French farce, "The Zebra," followed under management of Frohman. Hamilton Revelle, who plays DeCosse Brissac in the Kleine film, "Du Barry," appeared with her in this production.

Miss Fenwick's next triumph was the role of Beatrice Lind in "The Million," that delightful farce which proved one of the most popular of Savage's many comedies. Next came what many regard as the best work of her career, that of the Princess Irma in "Hawthorne of the U. S. A." with Douglass Fairbanks. In this she fairly covered herself with glory, the pensive, dutiful, loving princess being much to her liking and well suited to her capabilities. "Hawthorne of the U. S. A." proved an exceptionally popular play, and Miss Fenwick has been seen in it in all the principal cities of the United States. This she followed with the Kitty May of Owen Davis' "The Family Cupboard."

But it is her present work in Al. Woods' latest production, "The Song of Songs," that has shot Miss Fenwick over night into the upper realms of stardom. In this she has proven herself an actress of remarkable powers and great promise. The role of Lilly Kardos calls for a rare quality of histrionic ability, and the expression of emotion more subtle than the confines of word and gesture. New York has been quick to recognize the extraordinary distinction of her work, as the daily crowded Eltinge Theater well testifies.

Miss Fenwick will be seen in a number of big Kleine features this year. Already elaborate plans are being made to star her in some of the well-known successes in which she has played. At the present time she is busily engaged at the Kleine studios, where Director Fitzmaurice is filming that popular Forbes comedy, "The Commuters."

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE BLOOD OF THE CHILDREN." (Gold Seal)

No industrial drama, perhaps, has aroused more discussion in the South than has "The Blood of the Children," a two-reel Gold Seal (Universal) release featuring William Clifford and Marie Walcamp. Prints of the drama, which is to be released on March 16, were privately sent to Atlanta and New Orleans for exhibition to audiences of cotton men.

Many of the cotton men admitted that the conditions depicted in the drama were only too faithfully drawn to life and not a few, upon the conclusion of the private exhibition, announced their intention of showing the film in "cotton towns" along the Mississippi Valley. One cotton gin man declared that he would buy a print of the film for continuous free exhibition at frequent intervals by the local motion picture exhibitor in his town. Hundreds of children, this cotton man said, were employed in a great factory in the small Southern village in the midst of the cotton belt and each year the local cemetery numbered among its victims at least seven or eight emaciated child factory-workers whose lungs had been affected by the lint from the cotton sorting machines.

"The Blood of the Children" is a startling expose of the conditions in cotton factories both in the South and in New England where the deadly lint is constantly in the air. The Universal points out that it is criminal to employ children in these factories and, in fact, the production of the film followed a visit made to a Southern cotton factory by President Carl Laemmle on one of his frequent tours among small-town exhibitors.

In the drama, scenes showing the interior of a cotton ginning mill are depicted with great faithfulness in mechanical details to the original factory upon which the studio set was modeled. Some of the studio constructed sets cannot be told from the real factory scenes which are interspersed through the film. The drama, as a whole, is a powerful argument against the employment of child labor in factories.

EDISON COLLEGE CONTEST DECISION.

After careful consideration of every scenario submitted, Horace G. Plimpton, manager of Edison studio, has decided upon the winning manuscripts in the scenario contest for college students inaugurated by the Edison Company, May 19, 1914, and running till December 1, 1914. Out of 337 scenarios submitted from ten colleges only eight were found acceptable, and of these eight the winning one was written by William Marston, Harvard. His script, "Jack Kennard, Coward," the plot of which was original and full of suspense. This play, to be released shortly, will be advertised as "The Prize Winner of the Edison College Contest."

SIEGEL, OF CLEVELAND, GOING EAST.

A. E. Siegel, very prominent in the trade as the feature film man of the middle states, with offices formerly at Cleveland, notifies us of change of address. Mr. Siegel has spent almost three years of his time with the exhibitors in Ohio, and not saying a word about the many friends he leaves behind, he takes with him a reputation for being one of the most reliable and successful film men known in that section. Mr. Siegel has not made known his future plans, but advises that he will locate in Philadelphia or New York. At the present time he is enjoying a much-needed rest in Philadelphia and his definite plans will be announced later.

LIFE PHOTO PURCHASES "THE UNBROKEN ROAD."

Contract has been entered into between Thomas Dickinson and the Life Photo Film Corporation, through the agency of Alice Kauser, for the exclusive world's motion picture rights of the successful drama, "The Unbroken Road." This production will follow the release of "The Curious Conduct of Judge Legarde," now nearing completion, and depicts a story both unusual and tense in its dramatic interest.

"PATSY IN TOWN." (Lubin)

In this number of the series, Patsy in town with money in his pocket is a ripe member for plucking. He has a big heart and falls for the hard-luck story of a professional crook, who, with his associates, find it easy to squeeze him out of his last quarter. The ever faithful Jane, who is the one bright star in Patsy's life, however, bobs up to save him from desperation. Through a personal in the daily paper she locates him and with Jack and his wife, Mary, reach the city in time to block several various attempts of suicide that Patsy contrives to end his continuous misfortunes. He, as a last effort at destruction, makes his way to the dock where he finds a gang of crooks attempting to kill Officer Flinn. After a fight they succeed in throwing Flinn in the river. Patsy leaps in and forgetting the fact that he came down with the intention of drowning himself, rescues the officer. For this he is dragged to the station house and enlisted as a member of the force. His first job as a policeman is a veritable success as he rescues Mary and Jane from the gang of yeggmen. Here it is that for the first time he takes the faithful Jane in his arms. The act, though melodramatic, is fun fast and furious and played with a vim by the excellent cast.

"THE FORK IN THE ROAD" (Selig).

"The Fork in the Road" is a Selig drama in two reels, to be released Monday, March 15. This production was directed by Thomas Santschi, and features Bessie Eyton. It is a story possessing medieval atmosphere and shows how fate came with bravery.

Elsa, the pretty daughter of the inn-keeper, refuses to elope with Rudolph, the inn-keepere's assistant, and he goes forth to seek his fortune. He reaches a fork in the road, and sitting down to rest, he falls asleep. In his dreams, he arrives at a beautiful city, becomes a soldier, and by his deeds of valor, obtains supreme command of the army. The King offers him the Princess' hand in marriage. After the wedding ceremony, Rudolph sees Elsa and her father in the crowd of onlookers. He stops and gives the inn-keeper a purse, leaving Elsa sobbing in her father's arms.

Rudolph's dream then changes, and he finds himself taking the other path in the road. It is a gloomy, desolate pathway and leads to a forbidding city. A dying citizen accuses Rudolph of having slain him. He is condemned to execution. He repents now having left the love and comfort of the old inn, and the more, when, mounting to the block, he sees Elsa and her father among those gathered to witness his fate.

Awakening at the road-side, Rudolph finds himself unable to decide which path to take. He, therefore, determines to return home. He arrives in time to save Elsa and her father from an attack of three thieves. The prophecy of a soothsayer that Rudolph's fate would come through his bravery is realized when the inn-keeper gives his glad consent to his marriage to Elsa.

MINERVA'S MISSION (Majestic).

Minerva, young and pretty, comes home from school filled with a great mission in life. All society needs reformation. Her maiden aunt comes to live with her as chaperon and Minerva immediately starts reconstructing her. The trust company that has charge of her fortune is represented by young Mr. Grant, who tries to dissuade her, but without success. She stops him from smoking and quarrels with him. A laborer making some repairs at the house drinks a pail of beer with his lunch. She remonstrates with him and questions him about his home life. As a result she visits his mother's home and tried to educate the family. The boorish workman, misconstruing Minerva's interest, puts on his Sunday best when she calls, and at last insults her. When she repulses him, his cupidity makes him covet her money, and he resorts to force to get it. She manages to get word to the banker's son, who comes with policemen and rescues her.

KLEINE'S "OFFICER 666" OPENS BIG, NEW LIBERTY.

The New Liberty theater, Spokane's (Wash.) latest and largest addition to its list of representative picture houses, opened its doors recently with much ceremony. The mayor of Spokane officially opened the doors with a welcome speech, responded to by the manager of the house. There were selections by a male trio and any amount of instrumental music. Flowers were passed out at the door and uniformed attendants showed the visitors to their seats. George Kleine's "Officer 666" was the attraction selected after many features had been viewed by the management. The New Liberty has a thousand seats.

"THE CURIOUS CONDUCT OF JUDGE LEGARDE" NEARING COMPLETION.

The five part feature, "The Curious Conduct of Judge Legarde," by Victor Mapes, is nearing completion at the studios of the Life Photo Film Corporation. The photodrama deals with the dual personality of Judge Legarde, and numerous striking and unusual double exposures and light effects are employed throughout the picture. Mr. Lionel Barrymore takes the leading role, supported by William H. Tooker, Charles Graham and Edna Pendleton.

This production is the first in which a spot light, invented by John Arnold, head cameraman of the Life Photo, was used. This spot is of one and one-half the power of any spot light now on the market. It is portable, and of such size and weight as to permit of a child seven years of age to carry it about.

COMMERCIAL MOTION PICTURES COMPANY'S COLOR REEL.

The success of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company at its laboratories at Grantwood, N. J., in turning out prints with unusual color effects, has prompted Mr. Charles Hirliman, the superintendent of the laboratories, in conjunction with Edward M. Roskam, the president of the company, to make, for the benefit of the trade, a Commercial M. P. Color reel which contains every conceivable form of tint and tone that it is possible to use in motion picture prints.

BEN WILSON IN "THE RIDER OF SILHOUETTE." (Rex)

Eighteen Esquimaux and forty Esquimaux dogs which were used by Admiral Robert E. Peary on his dash to the North Pole take part in "The Rider of Silhouette," a two-reel Canadian northwest drama featuring Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips, to be released on March 21 under the Rex brand of the Universal program.

The scenes in the drama were filmed high up on the crests of two mountain peaks in the Adirondacks during the recent blizzards which swept the range. An old colonial inn was chosen from many other lodges and logcabins offered for the purpose as a background for the photodrama.

In one of the scenes twenty dogs were used to pull the 14-foot mail sledge which has seen service in Alaska and the far Canadian northwest. Real lumberjacks played the minor roles under Ben Wilson's direction. Wilson, during the drama, used a powerful black stallion which when silhouetted against the sky at the top of the range afforded a splendid spectacle.

Dorothy Phillips appears in the picture in snowshoes and from the way she covers the ground in the clumsy impedimenta one would think she had spent all her life in the snow country. While in the Adirondacks Mr. Wilson and Miss Phillips visited Saranaca Lake where they met Cameraman U. K. Whipple filming the winter carnival scenes. Miss Phillips mounted her first pair of skiis and, profiting by her snowshoe experience, retained her equilibrium even on some of the steepest descents.

"The Rider of Silhouette," by Anthony P. Kelly, tells the story of life in a Canadian trading post. Tex Davis, bad man and ranger, wounds the sheriff. Later he rescues the sheriff's baby and saves his wife from death in the woods, and, out of gratitude, the sheriff lets bygones be bygones.

"HER BURIED PAST" (Majestic).

How Muriel, a clever newspaper girl, tracked down a baffling murder mystery is told in two reels of action under the title of "Her Buried Past." The scenario is by William Parker, and the drama was produced by F. A. Kelsey and released by Majestic in the Mutual program. Irene Hunt plays the part of Muriel and she is ably supported by Florence Crawford, Jennie Lee and W. H. Brown.

Receiving the bad news that a $500 mortgage is about to be foreclosed on her aged father's home, Muriel Manning, of "The Evening Statesman," resolves to win the prize of $500 offered by the paper to any reporter who discovers the author of a murder then engaging the interest of the city. Shortly after learning the murder has been committed by the wife of the man who is holding the mortgage over her father's head, she goes straight to the woman. The woman tells a pitiful story of blackmail and lost reputation, and Muriel spares her after a struggle with herself. The release date is March 14.

"THE WOOD NYMPH" (Essanay).

A love romance with exceptionally beautiful scenic effects are found in Essanay's two reel photoplay, "The Wood Nymph," written by Eleanor Talbot Kinkead. One of the features of the play is the dance of the wood nymph at a garden party. This dance is performed by Miss Ruth Stonehouse, who plays that part. Miss Stonehouse was a professional dancer of rare talent before going into motion pictures, and has originated several dances of great beauty. She consequently portrays this part with exceptional skill. The scene in which she appears to her sweetheart in the woods, pinning a rose on him while he sleeps, also makes a charming picture. The attachment between this girl, left alone in the world, and a great poet, is a touching love story. After many seemingly impossible barriers are surmounted the couple are united.

MARGARET WYCHERLEY IN "THE FIGHT."

The Jane Thomas of the Lederer production, "The Fight," which the World Film Corporation releases on March 8th, is Margaret Wycherly, who like so many other artistes of the regular stage finds that the stellar glory of the screen far transcends the uncertain radiance of "the legitimate."

Miss Wycherley came into prominence as one of Lady Gregory's band of Irish players. Then she was a member of Ben Greet's famous organization of outdoor Thespians.

"Within the Law" found her prominent in its cast; and she also played in "The Thief," taking the part created by Margaret Illington. "The Force" was another play she was cast in. There were others, of course, all helping Miss Wycherley to make one of the best known names on the American stage.

The original Jane Thomas of Bayard Vieller's stage play, "The Fight," she repeats the fine performance she gave in that production before the camera.

Miss Wycherley's restrained, not to say suppressed, method of interpretation will come, perhaps, as a novelty to students of film acting, accustomed as a rule to more assertive styles; but it will undoubtedly be popular.

As a World Film star she becomes famous; whereas, before, she was merely well known.

"A SIREN OF CORSICA." (Lubin)

This story, written by Clay M. Greene, is a powerful one and doubtless will be a sensational success. The Corsican woman, played by Lilie Leslie, is an intense role and the clever and beautiful actress is eminently fitted to depict the fierceness of the latin race. It is a romantic tale with scenes laid in America and at Nice, in the south of France. The keynote of the story is the passion of an unworthy love, which, however, ends in a tragedy that secures the happiness of the worthy ones. The cast is a very unusual one including Jack Standing, Florence Hackett, Raymond Hackett, Herbert Fortier, Florence Williams and Lilie Leslie, who is the star. With a wonderful story and the powerful cast, Col. Joseph Smiley has been able to evolve a beautiful photoplay.

Scene from "A Siren of Corsica" (Lubin).

SCHEDULE OF SELIG ZOO PICTURES.

The Selig Jungle-Zoo wild animal pictureplays have won deserved popularity with all lovers of the screen. Every Saturday the Selig Company releases a wild animal pictureplay in one reel and they are always eagerly anticipated. A variety of wild beasts perform and the plots are convincing. The wild animal picture play program for March follows:

Saturday, March 6—The Guardian's Dilemma, a story of circus life. Wild animals roam at large in Old Man Cummings garden spot and he climbs a tree.

Saturday, March 13—Come 'Round and Take That Elephant Away. Rajah and two other elephants take leading parts in this funny picture play and an elephant discovers a gold mine.

Saturday, March 20—Jack's Pals are wild animals in a Zoo. They miss him when he loses his job through the machinations of an enemy and they welcome him when he rescues them from a fire. A variety of wild animals perform.

Saturday, March 27—Another entertaining wild animal picture play in which the animals perform naturally in developing and carrying out the plot.

"JULES POREL—SERPENT" (Itala).

Man's wild scramble for wealth has developed the brute, the ruffian, the vandal, and every form of evil-doer. Jules Porel was of the serpent type, however. He used the methods of the viper to attain his end—he owned no conscience and knew no form of mercy.

Two beautiful children stood in his path to fortune. Did he hesitate to strike at the opportune time because of the youth and innocence of these babies? Not Jules Porel. But fate, or Providence, or both, intervened, after days of frightful suspense in which a tender-hearted, lonely old man looked in vain for a sign of the little ones, and the devilish calculations of the serpent, Jules, were overthrown, just in the nick of time.

Jules was young, handsome and tall. His rascally accomplice was of the wine bibbling yet crafty type one recalls having seen as the Incendiary in "The Palace of Flames" and, as in the former story, this love for wine proved the undoing of both men. The lovable old Grandpa as portrayed by the grand old man, "Archimedes" in "Cabiria," is an exceptionally strong character.

Scene from "Jules Porel—Serpent" (Itala).

Delightful scenic backgrounds and other touches of the beauties in nature form a happy contrast to the scenes of intensity and suspense.

"DAMON AND PYTHIAS" CAMPAIGN.

The latest Universal feature, namely, "Damon and Pythias," which was recently exploited at the New York Theater, New York, and the Fine Arts Theater, Chicago, and received splendid criticism from the trade and daily papers, is now working in all sections of the United States and Canada, through the seventy Universal Exchanges.

The advertising and publicity campaign in connection with this picture has been unusual. We are in receipt of a 20-page book 12 in. x 16 in. in size, profusely illustrated and carrying six color insert reproductions of all the lithograph matter furnished for this attraction. This book also contains all the criticisms, reviews, endorsements and complete line of suggestions which will enable the exhibitor to boom this picture in a showmanlike manner.

The Universal Booking Office has a figure of $200,000 to reach in gross the bookings from this picture, before it has run its course.

PICTURE PLAYHOUSE OPENS ST. LOUIS BRANCH.

Arthur Lee, special representative of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., is now in St. Louis, where he has opened the eleventh branch office of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., at 3431 Olive Street, and has sent in some very good contracts.

Mr. Lee was formerly manager for the General Film Company at Toronto, Ontario, of their special feature department, resigning the latter part of July to accept his present position. Few young men in the film business have had the vast experience in booking that he has had, having visited every city in the Dominion of Canada and the principal cities in the United States, always securing good business.

INDEPENDENT MANUFACTURERS FORM THEIR OWN PROGRAM.

As the result of the success obtained by the Life Photo Film Corporation in contracting for its entire output for a year with the leading exchanges throughout the United States, which achievement, prior to the results obtained, was considered almost impossible by the larger number of feature photoplay manufacturers, several of the independent feature manufacturers not allied with program releasing concerns have been in communication with the officers of the Life Photo Film Corporation, in an endeavor to interest them, and through them, their exchanges, in tying up the releases of these other manufacturers for the same territory and with the same exchanges and upon the same terms as those secured by the Life Photo Film Corporation.

The plan is that three other reputable and well known feature manufacturers, together with the Life Photo Film Corporation, shall between them all, agree to supply the exchanges with one feature a week for six months, making one feature a month from each manufacturer and thereafter two features from each manufacturer a month, making a total release of two features a week, each manufacturer to attend to its own lithographs, heralds, slides and publicity matter, but the four manufacturers agreeing upon release dates, and from the Board of Directors of each concern, one gentleman to be chosen to act as a committee to pass upon each play, the star, the scenario, and finally the production itself when completed, before permitting its release, to the exchanges

"SUNSHINE MOLLY" (Bosworth).

Closely following Elsie Janis in "The Caprices of Kitty," Bosworth, Inc., announces as a March release, "Sunshine Molly," a photoplay of unusual qualities, both spectacular and dramatic, and a picture which, judging from the advance reports, will register another triumph for the producers.

"Sunshine Molly" is the product of that well-known couple Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley and will undoubtedly prove one of the most notable successes resulting from the efforts of these directors, who also portray the principal parts of the play in a manner that will add greatly to their laurels.

The story, although presenting a thrilling drama of life in the California oil fields, will not be found wanting in its comedy element. Adele Farrington, Herbert Standing, Vera Scene from "Sunshine Molly" (Bosworth).

Lewis and Roberta Hickman, as well as Margaret Edwards, whose appearance in the dainty part of "Truth" in "Hypocrites" has already placed her among the prominent stars of the screen, attend to the humorous side of the story and give the film added merit through their able characterizations.

Outside of the high merit of the subject itself the picture boasts of other features that are out of the ordinary such as the burning of three large oil wells at night, with the accompanying pandemonium, offering picturesque panoramic, as well as gripping close-up views of the demolition of an entire oil plant and presenting various photographic effects of rare beauty. Other clever tricks in photography are successfully put over by "Dal" Clawson.

With an exceptional cast headed and directed by such able artists as Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, a strong story that will hold interest to the very end, and the usual high grade of technical merit evident that is noticeable in all Bosworth productions, this Paramount release certainly seems to face a roseate future.

VENGEANCE (Majestic).

Circumstantial evidence and blackmailing play important parts in "Vengeance," by Paul West, which was picturized by the Majestic as a three-reel subject.

In prison, Bobby Harron, as Frank Hastings, in the role of the falsely accused victim, who is a locksmith, plans to escape from his unjust fate. He is almost successful in picking the lock, when the guilty party, for whom he is serving a term in jail, and who had been arrested for another crime, discovers this and threatens to inform the keepers, unless he takes him out with him. Forced to do this, they both leave prison together. The falsely accused escaped prisoner and the guilty one part, when they reach the exterior of the prison. Hastings goes to another town, where, under an assumed name, he obtains employment in a lock factory, and rises. He marries Mary Curtis, without telling her of his past. The other fellow, who is naturally bad, turns up a little later with the intention of causing trouble. Hastings, knowing this, moves with his family to New York, where he greatly prospers. He is followed to New York by his enemy. Mae Marsh takes the part of Hastings' wife. Eugene Pallette plays the heavy. George Siegmann is taking unusual pains in the production.

SCENERY TO TALK ABOUT.

The All-Celtic Film Corporation has, it is stated, secured interior scenic art that heretofore, outside of the legitimate stage, has never been seen in pictures. The work is being done by the Physioc Studio, 624 West 24th Street, New York, which has furnished the majority of the scenes for the leading Broadway productions. This work will be shown in the coming comedy series entitled "Peaceful Rafferty," written by Charles C. O'Hara, president of the All-Celtic Film Corporation, Inc.

Physioc productions are masterful handling of big themes; the architecture, perspective and color schemes with well balanced composition of subjects and attention to detail, all show the work of a master hand. These scenes and all to follow in the series are the design of William McNulty, who looks after this end of the productions, aside from acting in the capacity of general director under Mr. O'Hara. Even the exterior locations will be judged by their composition, setting and balance of subject to meet the critical eye of the public before presentation on the screen.

"THE BLACK SHEEP" (Reliance).

"The Black Sheep," by Will H. Ellis, serves as the title for a well constructed Reliance one-reel subject. The treatment given this story in the scenario results in several intense situations. In one of the many strong scenes a terrific fight takes place. It is between the husband of the Black Sheep's sister and a gang of hold-up thugs.

The Black Sheep, ignorant as to the identity of the attacked man, shows that there is at least one tiny spark of manhood left in him, by siding with the under dog.

The splendid acting part of the Black Sheep is capably handled by Joseph Hennaberry, his sister, Loretta Blake and brother-in-law, Mr. Elmore.

Director Joseph Belmont has shown excellent results with the subject.

SELIG'S WEEKLY PRESS SHEET.

A commendable method of releasing stories of its pictures and its accomplishments and accounts of its producing companies, has been inaugurated by the Selig Polyscope Company, of Chicago, Ill., which is getting out each week a press sheet full of useful information to the theater manager, editors of photoplay departments of dailies and other newspapers and magazines which devote space to the moving picture. The matter is printed in type which is readily readable, and its columns are of the standard newspaper width. The page is printed on one side of the leaf only, so that in clipping any of the material nothing will be mutilated on the other side. The press sheet is four pages in size.

KRITERION ADDED TO THE "BRIGHT LIGHTS."

The "Gay White Way" is flashing a brand new message to the millions of people in New York City. The big, towering sign, with its thousands of blinking bulbs, on the building at Broadway and Forty-seventh street, flashes its message every night from dusk until dawn that "Kriterion Motion Pictures are Decidedly Distinctive." Its location is but a half block from the Kriterion offices, and overlooks the busy portion of Broadway from Forty-second street to Forty-seventh.

BOWMAN FINDS BUSINESS GOOD.

E. S. Bowman, of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Co., has just returned from a trip covering the middle west and established several agencies. He found the moving picture industry very much alive and reports excellent business.

H. C. Smeral, special representative of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register for Ohio, reports exceptionally good business. With the introduction of their electric machine the Automatic is rapidly gaining and promises to be a leader in the field. It is now being used by the biggest theater chains in the country.

Notes of the Trade

RALPH LEWIS, the talented photoplayer, who appears in features produced by D. W. Griffith, received word of his mother's death. It is with deep regret that his associates at the Reliance and Majestic Studios learned of his misfortune.

Miriam Cooper and Elmer Clifton are featured in the one reel Majestic drama, "His Return," written by Russell E. Smith and produced by R. A. Walsh. A pretty romance is interwoven into the plot.

Theodore Marston, the Vitagraph director, will take a trip to the woods of northern New York in quest of some snow pictures. Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison, George Copper, Carl Ladenhaupt, Mr. Bell, Reggie Lyons, the camera man, and others will accompany him to portray these scenes.

"The Balance," produced by Mr. Belmont at the Reliance studio, deals with a rich manufacturer, a crook, his jealous sweetheart, and a little flower girl. The cast includes Mae Gaston and Mr. Stone.

Manager Jacobs of the Star Family theater of 443 Third avenue, New York City, writes the following: "Last week I ran the Vitagraph feature "Underneath the Paint," which had Gladden James, the popular player as its star, and did over twenty dollars worth of extra business. I intend to feature all releases that my exchanges gives me with this star as my patrons liked his work immensely."

* * *

Georgia and Parker Oliver are the names of two clever children who are appearing in Reliance and Majestic photoplays. "Sheriff" Arthur Mackley just completed "Your Baby and Mine," in which the Olivers played. They appeared in a number of Kinemacolor children pictures before coming to the Mutual studios.

* * *

As the little girl in the Edison "The Portrait in the Attic," whose father brings her home a "new mother," Viola Dale finds a role closely allied to the child role in the Broadway success, "The Poor Little Rich Girl," in which she was starred not long ago.

Norval MacGregor, the Selig director, who has produced many of the Selig jungle-zoo wild animal comedies says: "All dumb animals are treacherous and we are constantly on the look out for the unexpected."

* * *

George J. Beihoff, who has been the World Film Corporation manager in Indianapolis and Philadelphia, has been appointed personal representative for Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation.

* * *

No. 19 of the Paul West "Bill" series, "Ethel's Doggone Luck," is a sparkling one-reel Komic. A mix-up in dogs causes many embarrassing situations. The usual clever Komic cast of comedians all appear to advantage in Edward Dillon's latest comedy effort. Fay Tincher is supported by Chester Withey, Bobby Feuhrer, and Max Davidson.

A Majestic two-reeler which is bound to hold the interest is "The Last Car," by Will E. Ellis, which contains several novel situations. The acting is in capable hands, with Augustus Carney, Frank Bennett, Billie West, Jennie Lee, and Tom Wilson in the cast, with Lloyd Ingraham as the director.

* * *

The latest additions to the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation are Miss Emma Boas, formerly with the General Film Company, and Mr. Al. Rosenthal will be city representative. The World Film office force in Chicago now numbers twenty-one employes.

Lloyd Ingram, the Majestic director, has completed a one reeler entitled "The Emerald Brooch," by Paul West. There is an interesting plot in "The Emerald Brooch," in which Billie West, Eugene Pallette, Vester Perry, Tom Wilson and W. E. Lowery play important parts.

George Wright, a face new to the Edison films, is cast for the exacting role of the Parisian "rat" in the forthcoming "In the Shadow," an adaptation of Mary Imlay Taylor's "Fate and the Pomegranate." As the hunted thief, he does some splendid work.

* * *

"The Forged Testament," a two-reel Majestic subject deals with a gentleman of leisure, who endeavors to part a rich but passe widow from her vast fortune. A female reporter and the widow's daughters also figure prominently in the plot. In the cast are Charles Cleary, Cora Drew, Olga Grey and Signe Auen. The director is George Nichols.

In "Winning Back," a Broncho release in the Mutual program, a scene inside a theater is shown. On the mammoth stage at Inceville they constructed a special theater interior and stage and drilled a chorus for two weeks just to take part in it.

Kathlyn Williams, well known actress in Selig photoplays, says she likes to play with leopards above all other members of the wild animal family.

Chet Withey, who succeeded Tod Browning when the latter assumed directorship as James Hadley in the Paul West "Bill" series, now being produced by Edward Dillon, at the Komic studio, has other accomplishments, in addition to being a good comedian. As an author of photoplays, he has quite a number of successful scenarios to his credit.

* * *

In anticipation of putting on an additional company, Captain Wilbert Melville, manager of the Lubin West Company at Los Angeles, has been gradually adding to his list of artists. Among the new ones who have joined are George Berreil, the well known actor, and Jay Morley, who will be remembered for his work with the Lubin Western Company some time ago.

St. Louis Girl Wins Prize

Ida Damon, Popular St. Louis Stenographer, Receives $10,000 Check Offered by Thanhouser Company for Solution of Million Dollar Mystery—Mayor of St. Louis Hands the Bit of Paper to Winner in Grand Central Theater—What She Will Do With Money.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MISS IDA DAMON, a stenographer living at 3731 Minnesota avenue, St. Louis, wrote the scenario for the concluding scene of the Thanhouser serial, "The Million Dollar Mystery," and a check for ten thousand dollars was presented to her by Mayor Henry Kiel at the Grand Central theater on Monday afternoon, February 22d.

Ida Damon.

Miss Damon is only twenty-four years old. She was forced to leave school at thirteen on account of sickness in the family, and at sixteen she was earning wages as cashier in a store. She studied at night school, and a year later graduated in stenography and shorthand. She is now employed in a responsible position in the advertising department of the General Roofing Manufacturing Company.

The fact that Miss Damon was denied many of the so-called advantages had no effect on her ability to analyse and write the solution of a mystery play and win ten thousand dollars in competition with thousands of people all over the world. In fact, Ida Damon is a splendid example of the self-reliant and self-educated American girl. She has read the lessons of human life at first hand.

Miss Damon lives with her parents and a brother, who is a traveling salesman, and she is entirely unspoiled by the fortune that dropped out of the sky into her hand. She says she will be back at her desk in the office as usual, and her greatest happiness seems to lie in the fact that she will be able to build a nice home for parents, both of whom are somewhat advanced in years.

EUGENE COX TALKS ON CENSORSHIP IN ST. LOUIS

National Board Man Points Out Danger of Censorship Lacking in Uniformity.

The Social Service Conference, whose aim is to study various civic and social questions, learned that Eugene Cox, of the National Board of Censorship, was to pass through St. Louis, and invited him to address the members of the conference at a luncheon held at Lippe's Restaurant, on February 18th. More than a hundred persons interested in various phases of social welfare attended the meeting, and Mr. Cox gave an interesting and illuminating talk on the work of the National Board of Censorship.

He explained the work of the Board in detail, and spoke of the sixteen thousand moving picture theaters in the country, and the great educational value they have been to the people, and he dilated on the fact that when the moving picture show comes in a neighborhood the saloon goes out. He also explained the fact that pictures may reach St. Louis that are not sanctioned by the board, by way of Ohio or Illinois, since neither of these states will submit to the ruling of the National Board.

Mr. Cox also spoke of the attitude of the people who want to censor things, who do not try to censor books, periodicals, or vaudeville. Moving pictures, he said, awake the neighborhood conscience, and are an element for good, at the same time he warned against too much of the uplift kind, as that would soon become distasteful to the public.

ST. LOUIS TO HAVE FACTORY.

Minusa Gold Fiber Screen Factory to Be Opened by American Theater Curtain People.

The Minusa Cine Products Company have opened offices at 300 North Broadway, and a factory is being fitted up for the manufacture of the Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, which is to be the chief output of the company. The Minusa Company is composed of the members of the old American Theater Curtain & Supply Company, which formerly operated here before their amalgamation with the Atsco Inc., when the offices were removed to New York. Nat I. Brown, E. R. Anderson, Charles Hetzel and William Schoenning comprise the official personnel of the firm, and as many of the old-time salesmen and office help as can be secured are being brought together. An office will also be maintained at 814 Times Building, New York City, where a projection room has been established for the demonstration of the screens. Mr. Anderson declares that the business of the Minusa Company will be conducted with the same policy that made the American Theater Curtain & Supply Company so many friends in the past.

PICTURE PLAYHOUSE FILM CO. OPENS EXCHANGE.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., have opened a roomy and handsomely appointed exchange in the 3500 block on Olive street. Arthur A. Lee, the special representative of the company, is in charge, and will be until a local manager has been appointed. The exchange will handle only large features.

THE BANNER SPECTATOR.

August Roettger, owner and manager of the Fairy theater, at 5640 Easton avenue, claims to have the champion moving picture devotee as a patron of his theater in the person of a lady who has missed only two programs in five years. The Fairy has another unique distinction in the fact that it is operated by Roettger, his wife and children. Mrs. Roettger sells tickets in the box office, and the children form the three-piece orchestra of cornet, piano and violin, that furnishes music for the theater. The Fairy gives a five-reel program for five cents, and the Roettger family are in the house personally at every performance, all giving their best interest to the enterprise, which is paying them handsomely.

OTHER ST. LOUIS NOTES.

Henry Scherer, of Scherer Brothers Theatrical Managers, who took over the active management of the Mikado theater, 5955 Easton avenue, several months ago, has built up a large and enthusiastic following for moving pictures. Before Mr. Scherer took charge of the Mikado the house had been devoted to vaudeville, local dramatic stock and tabloid musical comedy. Mr. Scherer says the people responded at once to an all-picture program, and seemed to like it much better than the former bill. Paramount features and Shubert & Brady releases are used.

C. S. Edwards, district manager of Pathe Exchanges, visited the St. Louis office, and E. W. Dustin, the manager in charge, during the week ending February 20th.

BUFFALO'S NEW VICTORIA OPENS.

By Billy Bison, 23 Victoria avenue, Buffalo Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE New Victoria moving picture theater, Ferry and Grant streets, Buffalo, opened for the first time Saturday evening, February 20. This $250,000 house was built by Mitchell H. Mark. The managing director is Mrs. Lillian M. Hastings. Fifteen minutes after the opening everyone of the 2,500 seats was filled and a large crowd was waiting outside the theater. The New Victoria has many attractive features, including a comfortable palm room with fire place and lounging chairs, and a spacious smoking room. Entrance to the seats in the front of the house is gained by wide areaways. The balcony is eliminated. Sloping from the roof the loges, automobile seats, boxes and general seats are grouped effectively. The color scheme of champagne and buff shades blend with the red rose plush of the seats. A medley of national airs by a 12-piece orchestra marked the opening. The players were seated on the stage, the scene representing a Japanese garden. Mitchell H. Mark, owner of the New Victoria, and Mrs. Hastings, managing director, received various floral tributes and congratulations.

ERDMANN POPULAR BUFFALO EXHIBITOR.

G. W. Erdmann, manager of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo, recently gave a benefit performance for the children of the Buffalo Orphan Asylum and the Deaf and Dumb Asylum of that city. Mr. Erdmann recently addressed the Women's Federation of Clubs on "The Educational Possibilities of Moving Pictures." He also spoke at the University Club on "How Moving Pictures Are Made." As he is an experienced camera man he was able to give complete details. He used his camera for the benefit of his hearers, who asked him many questions.

WORKS TOWARD TEMPERANCE.

The Elmira, N. Y., Gazette, in a recent editorial, stated that there are various powerful factors working toward temperance and that not the least of these is the moving picture theater.

NEW THEATER FOR SYRACUSE.

The United Booking Offices of America (Keith's) will build a $500,000 theater and office building at 410-412 South Salina street, Syracuse. The house will be of the Hippodrome type and seat 2,700 to 3,000. The building will be of steel and concrete construction with an ornamental terra cotta front.

SHORTER BUFFALO NOTES.

The new Palace theater, which has an expensive location on Main street, Buffalo, opened to the public Saturday, February 27. The house is a marked improvement to the downtown section. Harold Edel is managing director and Deshler Welch, house manager. Full details of the opening will be given later.

A. P. Anthony projected a series of pictures for Prof. C. B. Connelly, of the Carnegie Technical Institute of Pittsburgh, at the Builders' Exchange, Cleveland, Friday night.

Manager S. E. Morris, of the Crown theater, East 105th street and Kempton avenue, Cleveland, has arranged a booking of Paramount Pictures, in addition to Box Office Attraction features in midweek.

The Ray theater, Prospect avenue, Cleveland, is using a seven-piece orchestra as an added attraction of its Sunday entertainment.

Architect A. F. Moyer, Dayton, is preparing sketches for a two-story brick picture theater building to be erected for Albert Arnold, Germantown, O.

George Hare, cameraman for the Buffalo Express, recently took moving pictures at the J. N. Adam memorial hospital.

The new Columbia moving picture theater, Genesee and Mortimer streets, Buffalo, will open in two months. This house is owned by the Model Theater Co.

Charles M. Johnston is manager of the Ellen Terry moving picture theater, Grant street, Buffalo, which opened recently. This is a homelike house, seating 1,200. Mr. Johnston uses a general program, and special features. His printed programs are noted for their pleasing color effects. He gives his press work personal attention. His recent attractions were "The Black Box" and "The Spoilers."

G. Morton Wolfe has taken over the Globe theater, Buffalo. The price of admission has been reduced to five cents.

George A. Keating is manager of the Jubilee theater, 1882 Niagara street, Buffalo. He uses the World Film Corporation's features. His recent attractions were "Wild Fire" and "Deep Purple."

Mr. and Mrs. George Eisele have taken over the management of the Empire theater, Buffalo, which reopened recently. Mrs. Leo A. Lutz has charge of the music.

The M. A. Myers Amusement Co. has leased the old Victoria theater, Buffalo, and the name has been changed to the Airovict. A complete orchestra has been installed.

A public hearing was recently held in Buffalo on the proposed ordinance calling for the licensing of moving picture operators. The ordinance would also create a board of paid examiners.

Buffalo Aldermen are considering an ordinance by which proprietors of moving picture theaters, in obtaining licenses, would be charged $10 for each 100 seats. This plan, it is said, would raise the license fee.

A moving picture theater in the Roe building, Canisteo, N. Y., may be opened shortly.

Builders are figuring on plans for the new moving picture theater to be built in Geneva, N. Y., by E. D. O'Reilly and C. H. Sweeney. The house will seat 1,250.

Plans are being prepared for the theater to be built on East Water street, Elmira, N. Y., by the T. M. Harton Co., Pittsburgh.

There is an agitation in Fulton, N. Y., to close the theaters there on Sunday.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

GREAT children's matinees from 10:30 to 1 o'clock "with films especially suited to childhood" are an innovation for the Salon Rojo. Twenty cents admission is secured.

General Alavaro Obregon recently issued orders to the chief of police to close the cinematograph shows which were giving immoral exhibitions with the restriction "For Men Only."

Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter" was one of the biggest feature attractions ever shown at the Empire theater.

Moving pictures were on the program of the meeting of the joint company section of the employees of the Manila Electric Railroad and Light Company.

At the Willis Wood

Kansas City's Leading Picture House Earns Its Place By Up-to-Date Business Methods—Brilliant Example of What Can Be Done and How to Do It—Effect of Professional Advertising.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

THE Lappe-Tighe Amusement Co., owners, and Jos. H. Gilday, manager, of the Willis Wood theater in Kansas City, already a very successful high-class moving picture house on the most elaborate scale that has ever been attempted, at least in the West, have recently adopted some rather new ideas in management and policy. In connection with this change, which is an advance, Mr. G. W. Bauerlein has been engaged as advertising specialist.

The Willis Wood has, since its opening as a high-class moving picture house, been very aggressive in advertising. Until the opening of the regular stage theater season it spent more money in display advertising in the newspapers than all the other theaters combined; and it now spends more than any one theater in Kansas City. A new feature of its advertising methods is its use of billboards. It has fourteen de luxe lighted billboards in various parts of Kansas City, distributed in such a manner that every person who rides a street car or automobile must see the billboard advertising the Willis Wood if he takes his eyes off the middle of the road. This is the only theater having lighted-painted billboards. An additional feature of these boards is that they are painted—every week the new attraction is exploited by fresh painting. This phase of advertising is expensive, but it is proving very effective.

One of Mr. Bauerlein's new features is a de luxe souvenir program. The new program is of a novel form and appearance. It consists of only four pages. This de luxe program is more than paying its way; and wherever anybody sees it, it can be recognized even without close examination as the Willis Wood program.

The Willis Wood last week included in the program a short number of the new society dances by a couple who appeared under the "auspices" of Mr. Bauerlein. It was a high-class number and was used because it fit so admirably into the scenic arrangements for the principal attraction that week—Lew Fields in "Old Dutch." The idea in this plan is to give a slight variety, especially when the moving picture shown is a drama.

In connection with the enterprise of the Willis Wood management, both in this pretty new program and in their extensive advertising campaigns previously, mention might be made of the very broad benefit to good films and to the moving picture business which has resulted from this company's expenditure of money. Throughout the southwest, where the Kansas City newspapers circulate, and where stage plays heretofore have been received with open arms because they appeared "at the Shubert" or "at the Willis Wood" in Kansas City, now films are being advertised as "shown last week at the Willis Wood in Kansas City," or with other phrases suggesting the endorsement of appearance at the Willis Wood. While this reference to the theater is, of course, a big advertisement for that moving picture house, the conviction cannot be avoided that it is also doing a great deal of good for films generally.

Incidentally, such deference to the Kansas City moving picture house puts a large responsibility upon it in the selection of films.

KANSAS CITY PICTURE BUSINESS HEALTHY

Exhibitors In City and Neighborhood Have Felt Depression, But Are Recovering.

KANSAS CITY is a big distributing point in the heart of a large farming and manufacturing district. For some time business here has been doing everything except booming. Many bankruptcies have occurred, and as they happened new theaters opened up to take their places. Several trades have been making good profits; many have not; yet the people here realize that everything will be running smoothly in a short while. The moving picture theaters have been drawing large crowds, especially those houses devoted to feature pictures, and all the owners have been adding to them to be better able to take care of the patronage which is sure to increase with the increase of better business. The people are not spending large sums for amusements, and recently one theater that leads all the others in Kansas City in the production of good plays drew only 50 people to the seats on its main floor. That same evening every picture house in the city showing feature films was crowded, and it has been the same in the territory surrounding the city. The film exchanges here report excellent bookings on their feature films for the city and its territory.

MRS. MARGARET KEANE DEAD.

Mrs. Margaret Keane, forewoman in the film department of the General Film Company's branch office here, died Friday night, February 19. Mrs. Keane leaves five children. She was one of those efficient workers that make themselves loved by those with whom they work. She and her family were well known in Kansas City film circles, and the General Film Company as well as the others extend their sympathies to those who survive.

OTHER KANSAS CITY NOTES.

The Willis Wood theater had the biggest audience it has ever had last Tuesday night when it was showing the New York Sun's war pictures.

The Twelfth Street theater, which has been showing only feature films for the last two months, will show a film of vital interest to the public, one that has been heartily endorsed by the censor boards, "The Drug Terror."

The Globe theater at Kansas City, which produces vaudeville and moving pictures, staged one of the cleverest little acts last week that has been seen on the vaudeville stage of Kansas City. A vaudeville team sung and performed antics of "Pity, Pity Poor Pauline," while the moving picture operator threw extracts of the "Perils of Pauline" on the screen.

At the Benton, Lillian Russell in "Wildfire" featured the program last week. "The Attorney for the Defense" is the chief attraction this week.

The eleventh episode of "Zudora" will be shown at the Star theater at Hannibal, Mo., this week.

For Better Credit System

Pittsburgh Exchangemen Endeavor to Formulate New System for Giving Theaters in City and Vicinity Credit on Films—Much Money Has Been Lost Through Irresponsible Exhibitors Who Decamp With Unpaid Bills—Meeting Held in Lincoln Hotel.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

A MEETING of a large and enthusiastic crowd of exchange men of Pittsburgh was held Tuesday night, February 23d, at the Lincoln Hotel, for the purpose of establishing a new credit system covering the entire Pittsburgh and surrounding territory.

A practice has been going on for a considerable length of time whereby film renting exchanges have been suffering great financial losses, due to unreliable, irresponsible exhibitors, and exhibitors with no purpose other than to obtain as much service from the indivdiual exchanges as was possible to get, and then leave for parts unknown, owing as many exchanges as would extend credit without restrictions.

This practice has been carried to such a large extent, due to no organization for the protection of the exchanges, that the Pittsburgh managers propose to deal with the situation as nearly as possible upon a cash basis plan.

There were some very enthusiastic speeches made, and the purpose is being received with such hearty favor that it is very probable that this new plan will become effective in the Pittsburgh district within the very near future.

ARREST HEAD OF PITTOGRAPH SCHOOL.

The moving picture producing plant and school for moving picture actors and actresses conducted by the Pittograph Company of America in Fourth avenue, near Smithfield street, Pittsburgh, Pa., was raided last week by the police, and Marquis Chisholm, alias Marcus Scott, an actor, the alleged proprietor, was lodged in Central Police Station charged with being a suspicious person. The raid followed several complaints made to Acting Captain Homer Crooks of the Secret Service Bureau, as a result of which an investigation was made by a policewoman posing as a would-be star.

AMERICAN PLAYERS TO MAKE PITTSBURGH PICTURES.

The American Film Company of Los Angeles is preparing to bring to Pittsburgh actors, camera men, light operators and full equipment to put the steel city into a motion picture drama. Advance representatives of this company are already in the city going over the local ground preparatory to beginning the production of this screen drama.

Local scenes and personages will figure prominently in the Pittsburgh film, the title of which is "A Twentieth Century Courtship." Marie Post, formerly with the Kalem and Lubin companies, will enact the leading role.

FAMOUS PLAYERS FILM SERVICE CHOOSES OFFICE BUILDING.

James Steele, General Manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Pittsburgh, Pa., recently announced that he had secured a five-year lease on the five-story building now being erected at Twelfth street and Penn avenue, this city. The building is 25 by 100 feet, built of white brick, and fire-proof. Film vaults will also be installed to insure against any danger of fire.

It is thought Mr. Steele will use the first floor for a projection room and for offices, and the fourth and fifth floors for the film, poster and shipping departments. It has not been decided as to what use the second and third floors will be put to, but it is rumored that they will be sublet to two reliable film companies. The building is expected to be completed and ready for occupancy in about five weeks.

NO UNLICENSED OPERATOR CAN TAKE CHARGE.

The Department of Public Safety of Pittsburgh, Pa., recently issued an order warning operators to remain in their booths over the supper hour or to provide for relief a licensed operator. Hereafter the assistant operator cannot take charge of the booth unless he has passed the examination required by the city and been granted a license.

EXCHANGE MEN HAD TO FIND NEW FILM ROOMS.

On account of a notice that was recently served on Al. W. Cross, of the Hudson Feature Film Company, and D. L. Dennison, of the George Kleine Attractions, located in the Lyceum building, Pittsburgh, Pa., that films cannot be stored in that building on account of the large increase in insurance rates, these gentlemen had to get out and hunt new quarters. They both secured film rooms in the building at 212 Fourth avenue, Dennison on the first floor and Cross on the third. The offices of these concerns will remain in the Lyceum building.

OPENED AGAIN SUNDAY NIGHT.

A motion picture show in the Majestic theater, 1215 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., was in progress from 10 o'clock Sunday morning until 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon, when Patrolman John McClucky, after inquiry, communicated with his superiors and received orders to close the theater. Nevertheless the theater was open in the evening, and films depicting European war scenes were shown until late in the night. No admission was charged, a donation being made. Attendants at the door welcomed patrons, of whom there were many. Nobody could be found who could tell how the theater came to be open after being notified to close. Patrolman McClucky was told in the afternoon that permission for the Sunday performance had been received. The proceeds of the performance were said to be intended for the relief of Jewish sufferers in the war zone.

SHOWS HOW IRON PIPE IS MADE.

Films showing the manufacture of the iron pipe in the factories of the National Tube Company was shown the class in scientific shop management in the Y. M. C. A., Pittsburgh, Pa., last week.

OTHER PITTSBURGH ITEMS.

Three hundred persons in the Pearl moving picture theater, at 1108 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., were marched out in perfect order at 10 o'clock Friday evening, February 19, while the smoke from a fire next door filled the theater. That there was not a panic is due to the coolness of Peter Alderman, who warned the audience.

Fire of unknown origin in the store of J. and T. Shehab, at 1106 Fifth avenue, was discovered by Alderman. He sent another man to notify the fire department while he ran into the theater. Jumping onto the stage he told the audience to stand up and march out. One woman started to scream, and he warned the audience that the only danger was in a rush for the door. The fire was soon controlled.

James Steele, General Manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Pittsburgh, Pa., recently reported that his office in Chicago closed a contract for Paramount pictures with one house for $30,000 per year. The service covers only one picture a week. Mr. Steele says his firm has quite a few customers who are paying better than $20,000 per year.

Statements were made that moving pictures do not constitute a menace to the eye-sight and are not a particular strain on vision in a general discussion of modern lighting effects at a meeting last week of the Engineering Society, in the Engineers' Society auditorium, Henry W. Oliver Building, Pittsburgh, Pa. The paper of the meeting, dealing with illuminants and eye fatigue, was given by Prof. Francis C. Caldwell of Ohio State University.

A Pennsylvania State charter of incorporation has been granted to the Coliseum Amusement Company of New Castle, Pa., with a capital of $70,000; incorporators, Benjamin Robins, Walter Hanitch and Mark L. Rabinowitz, New Castle.

A Pennsylvania State charter of incorporation has been granted to the United Film Service Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., with a stock $5,000 to $60,000.

In the future vaudeville and moving pictures will constitute the program of the Imperial theater, Beaver avenue, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pa. A. R. Cherry, formerly of the Variety theater, this city, is now manager of this house. Carl Carleton of Butler, Pa., is the owner.

The Eastern Booking Office reports that they have closed their Cleveland branch and will in the future make all shipments from the Pittsburgh, Pa., office. A. Parke, who was in charge in Cleveland, will be affiliated with Mr. Marcus in Pittsburgh.

Wolf & Brown, owners of the Happy Hour theater at Evansburg, Pa., recently purchased the Moose theater at Cresson.

A. P. Brinkmeier of the Castel theater in Wheeling, W. Va., was in Pittsburgh last week and closed a contract for "Runaway June."

P. L. Guthrie, formerly of the Jefferson theater at Punxsutawney, Pa., recently leased that house to Joseph Weist.

N. W. Treggessor of the Grand theater at Ambridge, Pa., reports that he has had the largest crowds ever taken care of with "Runaway June."

Cameraphone theater in Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., reports better business than ever with the "Twenty Million Dollar Mystery."

The twenty-five members of Local No. 342, Theatrical Employes and Moving Picture Operators' Association, quit work February 19 in four of the vaudeville and picture houses in Butler, Pa. Recognition of the union was demanded by the strikers. The two picture show houses signed the scale, but the two vaudeville houses held out. All four houses opened the same day with non-union help.

The Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., has a new carrying case for films, which meets the requirements of the railroads, and for which they have the exclusive agency in this city. It is lined with tin and can be supplied in either four or six-reel sizes. In either size there is ample space for accommodating the specified number of reels and also the tin cans, or containers, which is also a requirement demanded by the railroads.

John Murray, of the Morgan-Grand theater, Sharon, Pa., is remodeling that theater at an expense of $10,000.

Lew R. Palmer, chief fire inspector of the State, and James Patterson, an inspector of the first grade, were in New Castle, Pa., last week. The two men devoted one solid day in inspecting the moving picture houses. In a number of cases they specified changes that must be made by the movie proprietors. The changes are relative to exits and arrangements for seats.

Mr. Palmer was impressed by the number of picture houses in New Castle. He publicly stated that the city had as many establishments of this sort as many other cities of a much greater population.

PHILADELPHIA REEL FELLOWS HAVE GOOD TIME

Screen Organization in City of Brotherly Affection Give Good Fellowship Party.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

A NOVEL entertainment was recently given by the Reel Fellows of Philadelphia, an organization formed for the promotion of good fellowship in film circles, at the Alhambra theater, Twelfth street and Passayunk avenue. A varied program was offered to entertain the gathering. Music was furnished by an orchestra, and several clever turns were given by vaudeville entertainers. Moving pictures were also shown. Last, but not least, came the eats. It was one wonderful layout of all that came under the heading of eats. The committee in charge of the entertainment consisted of Jay Emanuel, Dave Sabolosky and Steve Talbott. The Alhambra theater was furnished through the courtesy of Mr. Stanley Mastbaum, at the suggestion of Abe Einstein, manager of the Stanley Publicity Bureau, both of whom are Reel Fellows in good standing.

THEATER AT LAMBERTVILLE.

Preparation for New House Under Way —Will Seat 1,000 Persons.

Charles C. Hildinger and Philip Papier, of Trenton, have closed a deal whereby the Van Horn property on Coryell street, Lambertville, N. J., passed into their hands for the purpose of erecting a large moving picture theater.

The property has a frontage of 76 feet, with a depth of 200 feet, and, therefore, is of sufficient size to permit the erection of one of the largest houses in the State. The proposed theater will have a seating capacity of 1,000, and will be known as the Strand theater. The work of demolishing the buildings which now occupy the site will be prosecuted with all possible haste, and the work of construction will be started in time to allow for the completion of the theater in time for an opening some time in the early spring.

It is the intention of the two promoters to open the new house with the Vitagraph Company's famous picture, "The Christian," and to thereafter exhibit the feature films of the Paramount program, which has already been booked. A small stage will be erected to provide for the convenience of speakers and lecturers who happen to be passing through Lambertville.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

Lewis Swaab and R. V. Carrick are looking forward to their trip to the Panama Exposition and the Universal City with great expectations, and are busily completing preparations for the journey.

George J. Bischoff, special representative of the World Film Corporation, upon returning from a highly successful trip throughout the middle and western States and as far as the Pacific coast, was recently appointed the personal representative of Vice-President Lewis J. Selznick of the World Film Corporation.

The newly-built Imperial theater on 60th street, below Walnut, West Philadelphia, lot 80 feet by 200 feet, and assessed at $65,000, has been sold by Mastbaum Brothers and Fleisher and Albert M. Greenfield, representing the Active Real Estate Company, to Meyer Magill, subject to a mortgage of $72,500.

The good citizens of Millington, Md., are being entertained during the winter months by a series of moving picture shows which are being shown at Comegy's Hall. Along with the moving pictures several acts of vaudeville are interspersed.

Building Inspector A. J. Grove, of Reading, Pa., is at present making a tour of inspection of the moving picture theaters in and about town, and reports that he finds that the majority of the managers are running their respective establishlishments in perfect accordance with the regulations required by law.

Rigorous Censorship

Tennessee's Proposed Censorship Measure Will Give Full Authority to One or More Censors In Each City to Forbid Showing of Any Film—Provides for Supervisor, His Secretary and Censors—Salaries and Fees—Will Disorganize Business.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A CENSORSHIP Bill now before the Tennessee Legislature is said to be one of the most drastic measures ever introduced, and a number of Tennessee moving picture men are making a vigorous fight to prevent this bill from becoming a law. This bill provides for a State supervisor of censors, who will draw a salary of $1,500 a year, with a secretary, who will draw $1,200. The supervisor will have authority to name one or more assistants in each city with authority to prevent the showing of any film, whether approved by the National Board or not. A fee of fifty cents will be charged by the censors for watching a picture, this fee to be assessed against the theater owners. Exhibitors claim that it will be necessary to raise the price of admission at every picture house in the State if the bill goes through. It has passed one reading of both houses, and is in charge of the senatorial and legislative judiciary committees. The bill is said to have the support of Gov. Rye.

According to moving picture men, the bill would severely handicap all of the houses in the State, as all pictures shipped in would have to be censored before they could be run. In many cases the films are received from the express offices and rushed to the theaters just in time for the first morning performance, which in some cases are several hours late as it is. If the new bill becomes a law it would probably be necessary to start the shows later in the day or the exhibitors and exchange men would have to figure out some system whereby a day or more would be lost before the pictures would be charged to the exhibitors' account. Taking into consideration the fact that it takes an hour and a half to run off a six or eight-reel production, it would almost be necessary to have a censor for each and every theater in the city running first-run productions.

CHATTANOOGA CENSORSHIP.

Some of the moving picture men of Chattanooga, Tenn., have sided with Mayor Thompson in approving local censorship of motion picture films. This change in attitude is probably brought about to some extent by the State censorship plan, as local censorship would be far more favored than a State law on the matter. A number of the exhibitors were recently present at a meeting of the city commission for the purpose of presenting their opinion on the censorship ordinance introduced by Mayor Thompson at the last meeting of the board. This measure has passed one reading. The proposed ordinance prohibits the showing of films in the city that have not been approved by the National Board of Censorship. Some of the theater men have expressed a desire to see the ordinance go into effect, but all of the exhibitors will be given an opportunity to discuss the measure before it is passed in the second or third readings. It has been stated that about ninety-five per cent of the pictures sent to the Chattanooga theaters have been approved by the National Board of Censorship, and that but few would be effected by the new ordinance.

PREFER HUGHES BILL.

A good deal of interest is also being displayed in the Hughes Bill for a federal motion picture commission. This bill, as is very well known, provides for five commissioners to license films which go into interstate commerce, and provides that films not so licensed might not be transferred from State to State nor copyrighted. A favorable report was recently filed in the House of Representatives at Washington, in which it was stated that State or municipal censorship of moving picture films cannot be adequate because of the character of the moving picture industry. The exhibitors are generally of the opinion that strict national censorship would be far superior to State censorship, as the films would be censored before being released, and it would take all of the petty worry, strife with inspectors, etc., off the hands of the exhibitors.

SUNDAY PICTURES.

Editorial in Chattanooga News Fears Effect of Sunday Pictures.

The Chattanooga News, one of the leading Tennessee papers, which is very influential throughout the State and has a big circulation, recently handled an editorial on "Movies on Sunday." The article follows: "Possibly the objection to Sunday picture shows is not that there is any moral harm in going to such entertainments on the Sabbath. It may be argued with force that there is no more innocent amusement, provided the exhibitions are of wholesome character. But the opening of these cheap theaters of the people, without doubt, means the breaking down of the bars for other forms of amusement which are not in the same class, and soon the observance of the Sabbath, in the manner of the earlier days of America, will be abandoned, and we shall make of Sunday a gala day, as it is in continental Europe. If public sentiment approves this, then the picture shows should be open on Sundays. But if there is any widespread feeling that Sunday ought in all respects to be different from other days and be observed in the old-fashioned way, then this sentiment of good Christian people ought to be regarded with due respect.

"It is true the moving picture play and other exhibitions have proved among the most powerful of educational forces in the world. Some day perhaps they possibly may be used as an adjunct of the work of the church on the Sabbath and without commercial profit. Sentiment then may be modified. But if now the Christian people oppose the exhibitions on the Sabbath it would be an indignity to this large element to have them operated."

TENNESSEE BRIEFS.

Moving pictures in girls' schools showing canning operations are the latest thing in the educational way in Tennessee. Arrangements have been made whereby a number of pictures showing complete canning operations will be shown at the University of Tennessee during the week of May 10 to 15, at which time members of girls' canning clubs of various counties in the State will be present. Miss Virginia Pearl Moore, State agent, will be assisted in giving instruction by experts from the bureau of chemistry, the Bureau of Chemistry and the National Canners' Association, besides members of the faculty of the University of Tennessee.

Joe Goldberg, former owner and manager of the Lillian Theater, of Clarksville, Tenn., has started a stock company which is to be incorporated for $20,000 to rebuild the theater which was recently burned. He has agreed to take stock for his property and salvage to the amount of $4,000, and also agreed to subscribe $6,000 additional if the people of Clarksville would subscribe $10,000 or that portion of it necessary to erect and operate the theater. The plan is meeting with considerable favor on the part of the people and stock is being subscribed.

Is Applause Doomed?

Louisville Times Sees Possibility of Our Growing Unresponsive As Result of Cold Way We View Films—Legitimate Actors Said to Be Already Noticing Difference in Chilly Way Audiences Respond to Their Efforts—They May Be to Blame, Who Knows.

By C. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Louisville Times, one of the leading afternoon dailies of Louisville, is giving a good deal of attention to editorials concerning photoplays just now, and the moving picture business in general. A recent editorial under the title of "Photoplays and Applause" was very interesting from the viewpoint of the exhibitor and the public at large. The editorial is as follows: "The silent drama, otherwise the motion picture, will create silent audiences for the spoken drama in the future, say prominent actresses and actors. The effect of the picture play already is noticeable on the spectators who witness the dramatic productions, they claim, and the time is not far off when audiences will stare at Maude Adams, Mrs. Patrick Campbell and John Drew in the same unresponsive manner as they gaze upon Mary Pickford and Francis X. Bushman.

"That the motion picture has had some effect upon the heartiness and spontaneity of applause as bestowed upon the acted drama is obvious from the expression now frequently heard among stage hands to the effect that their theater has a 'motion picture audience.' The motion picture has had a tendency to stifle expressions of emotion in every city of the country, and actors are beginning to feel that, in spite of their best efforts, a pall has settled down over things and audiences are beginning to regard their work with stony indifference.

Concerning the commercialization of motion pictures, Mr. Cox said: "The difficulties that lie in the way of producing the kind of pictures we should like to make are very real. And yet the fault is our own. We have let this business grow up 'commercialized' under our very eyes. We might have known that it would happen if the churches, the universities and the libraries did not start out and do the work themselves, but they did not. They let a number of ambitious and clear-headed business men get to work on the problem, with the result that a wonderful system of circulating films has been worked out. At the same time the motion picture has become commercialized, and now we want to stop it all, raise standards, eliminate what we do not like and change the whole industry. It can't be done in one year or two." Mr. Cox said that "the by-products of the motion picture are its ability to keep children off the streets, men out of saloons, and to preserve the family tie." Of the Louisville children's programs Mr. Cox said: "You have been working on a problem that commands our attention, for it is the first and best type in the United States of constructive effort to get wholesome, high-grade entertainment for children. We shall co-operate with you in every way possible and watch your progress with the greatest interest. If you succeed, the results of your work will go to children in all parts of the country." Mr. Cox said it is almost impossible to realize the hold which the motion picture has taken upon the public or the influence that it exerts. There are now about 1,700 motion picture theaters in the United States, and about 900,000 persons daily attend the shows in New York City, with the proportion much the same in other cities and towns. Mr. Cox commented upon the fact that the motion picture activity is the only form of recreational activity which is held in check by a national force. "You cannot go beyond a certain limit," remarked the speaker. He spoke in this connection of the license of the stage, stating that from New York vaudeville companies were sent out representing exactly the same stunt in five forms, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5, according to the moral standard of the town in which it was shown. Mr. Cox mentioned several popular authors who have, for the sake of money, descended far below the level of morality, but who have been read just the same.

ORIN COCKS TALKS TO LOUISVILLE CENSORS

Gives Exceptionally Interesting Talk On What National Body Is Trying To Do.

Some exceptionally interesting facts regarding the work of the National Board of Censorship of motion pictures were disclosed when Orin L. Cocks, advisory secretary, addressed the Louisville Board of Censors for Children's Motion Pictures at the Louisville Y. M. C. A. "The National Board has been working on basic morality," said Mr. Cocks. "Its members have tried to establish a moral medium below which producers may not go. We have reached the point where we may say to the great industry: 'You cannot do this thing.' Now, in Louisville you may not think that we have done very much; certainly, we have not done all that we can do. But the National Board has managed to gather to itself by steady, sane, conservative effort the power to say to the producers that if they make the film that we call bad, we shall kill it." Mr. Cocks emphasized the fact that the board is constructive. "Motion pictures are cheap, wholesome and fairly clean amusement—for the whole people. The National Board has, therefore, put individual opinion in the background, in order to give all classes of people in all sorts of places the kind of picture they want. Thousands of pictures are passed which individual members of the board would throw into the discard if their own opinions were consulted.

"I feel that, in the present state of film development, it is not possible to establish standards of perfection. Even here in Louisville you will find it extremely difficult to get the kind of pictures you want, for children, if you insist upon a certain definite standard." Mr. Cox defended the comic picture and urged the Louisville board to give it space on the program. "The local work will fail if you try to give a purely educational or uplift performance. Comedy is necessary and good comedy is hard to get."

OTHER LOUISVILLE ITEMS.

J. L. Thomas, of Cleaton, Ky., was recently in Louisville arranging for film service. Mr. Thomas maintains a picture show on the second floor of his general store at Cleaton, and is doing nicely with a proposition which would never draw in the larger towns.

C. C. McClure, of Clearfield, Ky., who has been suffering from an attack of pneumonia for several weeks, has nearly recovered and will shortly resume active management of his theater.

H. A. Faith, of Elizabethtown, Ind., was recently in Louisville buying supplies and making arrangements for feature films.

August Mueller, of Cincinnati, a well-known film man, was recently in Louisville visiting the local exchanges.

L. J. Dittman, secretary of the Central Amusement Company of Louisville, has filed notice stating that, pursuant to consent of its stockholders and directors, the company is closing up its business. All persons with claims against the company are notified to present them to Mr. Dittmar at once for settlement.

Consternation reigned at the Walnut theater a few days ago when a crying baby was found in one of the dressing rooms and the owner could not be located. Announcement was made from the stage that a baby was crying in the dressing room and that the owner would please take charge of it. The company has become rather scared of crying babies since a few weeks ago when one was discovered in a chip basket and the owner could not be located. In the first case the baby was turned over to one of the local foundling institutes. In the second case this means of disposing of the "chile" was not necessary, as the young mother blew in a few minutes later from the street after finding out that she was minus her offspring.

The Lancaster Picture Show Company, of Lancaster, Ky., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $1,500. The incorporators are F. H. Anderson, D. H. Marsee, R. P. Gregory and L. E. Herron.

W. L. Salyers, of Carrollton, Ky., recently awarded a contract for erection of a new airdome which will have a seating capacity of 600 persons. Mr. Salyers is the leading motion picture man of the town and has other houses in operation. A period of prosperity has hit the city and business is humming just now.

Rowland Clark, manager of the Arista theater, of Lebanon, Ky., recently offered to the Ladies' Chautauqua Auxiliary half the proceeds of an entire day and night's performance at the popular photoplay house. The offer was readily accepted, and a big crowd was present to help swell the funds. "Her Ladyship" was the play shown. Misses Goodwin and Bosley and Dr. Charles McCord rendered vocal selections at the special performances, and Mrs. Merrill, Lillian Jackson and Frances Crenshaw delivered recitations.

George Bleich, of the Empress and Princess theaters, of Owensboro, Ky., and the Princess theater, of Henderson, Ky., will, inside of sixty days, be at the head of another theater which will be quite up to his present Empress in Owensboro. A lease has been taken on a large building on Third street in Henderson, and work will shortly start. The building will be remodeled, renovated and complete equipment, heating plant, ventilation apparatus, etc., installed. A stucco front will be erected and a system of columns will be erected to give the Colonial effect. An extensive lighting equipment will feature the front of the building. The house in Second street will be closed when the new theater is completed. The name will be selected through the popular voting system. Some vaudeville will be handled at the new house, and big features will command a better price than the old reliable one dime.

Negotiations which have been pending for some time were recently closed whereby the Phoenix Amusement Company takes over a large brick building in Lexington, Ky., which will be converted into a motion picture house, at an expense of about $35,000. The new amusement company has just been incorporated with a capital stock of $40,000 by Mr. Switow, of Louisville, as president; James H. Button, also of Louisville, vice-president, and Louis Zahler, of Chicago, secretary-treasurer. Mr. Zahler will be in active charge of the theater when it is completed. The debt limit the company is authorized to incur is placed at $25,000.

Mr. Switow has had experience in the moving picture business during the past ten years in Louisville and through Kentucky and Tennessee, and is president of several large companies operating in the district. The capacity of the new theater will be about 1,500.

The Kentucky Amusement Company, of Louisville, has filed articles of incorporation listing its capital stock at $20,000, and is authorized to incur liabilities of a like amount. The stock is divided into shares of $100. The incorporators holding three shares each are M. Switow, A. Rothstein and R. A. McDowell. The company will take over and operate the Novelty theater on Fourth street, near Green, which was recently purchased by M. Switow from D. Levenson, who purchased it about two years ago from Mr. Switow.

IN NORTHWEST.

Manager Kelley of the Empress theater at Salida, Col., has been trying some of the big features with a view to having every Thursday night a feature night at 15 and 10 cents.

Films of Governor Hanna's (North Dakota) Norwegian trip went well at the Strand in St. Paul.

The Grand, at Duluith, Minn., got the local pictures of the big ski tournament held near Duluth.

It was announced that cold weather delays would not allow the new Alhambra theater at Ogden, Utah, to open on March 1, as planned. The big pipe organ has been installed.

Aside from the theaters films are serving many purposes in the northwest. "Evangeline" was shown at the First M. E. church, in Colorado Springs, Col., by the Epworth League. Films of the South Dakota State College and of Brookings, S. D., were features of the program of the South Dakota Good Roads Association at Aberdeen. An industrialog of slate industry helped students at the state normal school at Winona, Minn. Harvard men in Minnesota saw the 1914 Yale-Harvard football game again, in film, at their annual banquet in Minneapolis.

A. C. Bosel opened the Empress at Crosby, Minn., with "The Littlest Rebel."

A. J. French and S. W. Montague, of Huron, S. D., have purchased the Gale theater, in Salem, S. D.

Harry Woodruff, of Minneapolis, Minn., has taken over W. W. Davey's lease on the opera house at Lansford, N. D., and will operate a picture show.

Joseph Anderson has opened a moving picture show in the opera house at Hatton, N. D., making the second show for that place.

W. M. and W. L. Danes have leased the Baker opera house at Fort Benton, Mont., for a 10 and 20-cent picture show.

Howard Atz has started a twice-a-week show in the opera house at Hancock, Minn.

E. L. Houk and Edward Lamp, of Harrington, who bought the Princess theater, at Garfield, Wash., from L. E. Logan, will seek a more central location for the house.

A new moving picture theater will be opened in Long Prairie, Minn., in the spring, it is reported.

A new front and increased seating capacity are among the plans of R. H. Sanders, of Bismarck, N. D., who recently purchased the Family theater, at Mandan, N. D., from Fred Domeyer.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Banta have sold the Princess theater, at Kennewick, Wash., to M. W. Mattecheck, formerly cashier of the bank there.

Gust Swenson, of Minneapolis, has assumed the management of the Lyric, at Atwater, Minn.

I. S. Mistachkin, new manager of the Zelda theater, at Duluth, Minn., for W. M. Abrahamson, has booked many features.

Cedric Laing has opened a picture house at Scotland, S. D.

Preparations have been made to open a new house—the Idle Hour—in Longmont, Col.

A. A. Green has entered the exhibition field at Pillager, Minn.

Henry Lokken is the proprietor of a new theater at Boyd, Minn.

Buffalo Lake, Minn., has been added to the field of operations of C. J. Thomas, conducting shows at Stewart, Lester Prairie and elsewhere.

The opera house in Hartford, S. D., burned a year ago, will be replaced in the spring.

G. H. Ostrander and C. P. Bussing, of Denver, have remodeled and reopened in the Empress at Boulder, Col.

G. I. Richards is back in the picture business at Windsor, Col., having leased a building for a theater.

J. F. Parks, of Hot Springs, S. D., has taken over the Morris Grand theater, which has been operated there by Grant Robinson. His son Walter will help him manage it. Theatrical attractions may be added.

Wisdom in Minnesota

Co-operation Between Women's Clubs and Picture Exhibitors Advocated At Big Federation Breakfast in St. Paul—Interesting Account of Place of Pictures in Modern Life and Their Value—Truths That Should Not Be Lost Sight of.

By F. H. Madison, Northwestern Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CO-OPERATION between federated women's clubs and moving picture exhibitors seems to be the likeliest plan for Minnesota. This was the method advocated by Miss Mary Gray Peck at the midwinter breakfast of the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs in St. Paul and which is now being developed in that organization.

"Of all the mistakes and fool notions I ever heard of for dealing with motion pictures," said Miss Peck, "Federal and State censorship is the worst. Who would you have censor the motion pictures? If you were to have one man do it, who would it be—Anthony Comstock? Consider if Anthony Comstock lived in the days of Shakespeare. He certainly would have ruled out Falstaff and put the stamp of his approval on Little Lord Fauntleroy." In her definition of the moving picture as the poor man's theater, library and school, she said: "They are making good literature known as never known before. Books by the best authors are being dramatized and people are reading 'Les Miserables,' the Odyssey and the Bible who were not interested in them before."

There is an over-emphasized notion that there is a widespread hostility to moving pictures, Miss Peck declared. Those who believe the photoplays are deteriorating the morals and tastes of the public were termed a little too sensitive on the subject because of their concern for the 600,000 children attending the shows daily.

Mrs. Charles W. Cartwright, of Minneapolis, who has been appointed chairman of the Drama Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, has sent out the following statement:

"Individual club centers have seriously taken up the moving picture problem for children, but we feel that it is only by concerted action that the greatest good can be obtained. The drama committee of the G. F. W. C. has drawn up the following plan by which it hopes a Children's Show will be inaugurated. Our object is not educational, but recreational, and the children must be influenced to go to the better picture houses by choice. Co-operation with the managers is necessary, and they must be shown that good films for children will play as well, if not better, than poor ones.

"It is hoped that each club center will form a committee of club women who will attend the picture houses in their vicinity and pass judgment upon the films exhibited; that the names of the films and of the film manufacturers of those they find suitable for children be sent to the chairman of the drama committee, G. F. W. C., by which means a clearing house will be formed and information accumulated and classified which may be easily accessible to all; that these women in local centers co-operate with the managers so that a program of their choosing may be given once a week, if possible, preferably Saturday afternoon, and that they endeavor to interest a local newspaper to obtain expression from the children themselves of the pictures they like best, so that in framing programs the children may be given the best of the pictures they enjoy most.

"The personal interest of the child will enter into the selection of the moving pictures and will develop discrimination.

"As a standard, to be followed by club women in passing on a film, the following is drawn up by Mr. C. V. Newton, chairman of the educational committee, Minneapolis center of the Drama League, after an interesting survey of the children's opinions, undertaken by the Minneapolis Tribune, and Ida May Ferguson of the public library.

"Types wanted:

"Amusing pictures. Interesting educational pictures. Athletic. Animal. Historical. Scientific. Adventures. Wholesome stories.

"Types barred:

"Scenes in bar and wine rooms. Featuring drunkenness. Murders and robberies. Luring of girls and similar sex pictures, including trashy love stories.

"Inducements to be offered to managers to give children's shows conforming to the above standards:

"1—Reference to those shows at meetings of associations and patronage of them through the efforts of schools, settlements, associations and women's clubs.

"2—Announcement of programs, put in attractive form through school, settlement, library and club bulletins.

"3—Co-operation of women's clubs with Drama League and other civic associations.

"It is hoped that this plan will receive immediate attention. It is not wholly experimental, but is already working successfully in at least one community. If it can be made a nation-wide co-operative movement of club women, it will produce definite and helpful results in the bettering of children's standards of art and morals."

STRIKE IN DULUTH CALLED UNFAIR.

Illegal tactics by Union pickets at Thomas Furniss' Rex and Lyric theaters in Duluth, Minn., will be prosecuted, it was announced. A conference was held at which members of the Commercial Club, the Builders' Exchange, Real Estate Exchange and the Rotary Club protested to city officials against unfairness in the strike. The chief of police promised to personally investigate specific complaints. The labor troubles arose over the alleged failure to employ union operators and musicians.

NORTHWESTERN BRIEFS.

Chisholm, Minn., high school is the first in that state to get on the visual instruction circuit of the University of Wisconsin. The films and slides sent out by the Wisconsin school have been shown in a Chisholm theater, but arrangements have been made to install projection apparatus in the public library where adults of the village may share in the educational benefits.

A new phase of the moving picture question in St. Paul is the suggestion of the municipal censorship of motion picture theaters made in the report of Cyrus F. Stimson, playground specialist. He advocates a five-member board of recreation to supervise amusement, including commercialized forms.

Many unsafe moving picture theater buildings are found in Utah, according to State Sanitary Inspector Emery and legislation to remedy the evil is being sought. Buildings in Topele were reported in bad condition and the owners were instructed to remodel them.

Grand Junction, Col., residents will vote, probably next November, on the Sunday theater closing proposition. The ordinance requested by the church people, barring Sunday shows was passed, but a petition signed by 1,400 persons delays its operation until a vote has been taken.

Does Sioux Falls, S. D., need a picture censor? Let a local paper quote Jack Toohey. "With my wife I attended two moving picture houses Sunday night, and there were pictures shown which should have been suppressed. They were a disgrace, and I stopped at each box office and not only protested against their character, but said several other things which would not sound well before a Sunday school class."

Churches and Sunday Shows

Illinois Exhibitors Hear Some Interesting Propositions to Solve Sunday Opening Question—Galesburg Alderman Wants Churches to Run Sabbath Shows—Other Cities Throughout State Actively Taking Up Picture Theater Questions.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Sunday closing issue still looms large in certain Illinois cities. Just at the time that there were indications that the petition to vote on the question in Galesburg might not be legally sufficient there came a suggestion from Alderman Charles Miller. He would have the churches of Galesburg take over the moving picture houses on Sunday afternoons and give films based on Biblical stories. Tickets for the afternoon exhibitions would be distributed at the morning services.

The alderman's suggestion is akin to that made in an address by George Woodruff, president of the First National Bank at Joliet, before members of St. John's English Lutheran Church, in that city. "Put moving pictures in the churches and advertise their programs as the theaters do," he advocated, "and I will wager they will outdraw and successfully compete with any theater this city ever saw. Run the church picture shows free and make the church a club house * * * Put the church on a modern basis and advertise as the theaters do in the daily papers. Not now and then, but consistently, every day."

The Galesburg petition contained 1,890 signatures. The law requires 1,748, and the opponents of Sunday shows hoped to disqualify enough to render it invalid.

Opposition to the movement for Sunday shows has developed in Danville. The Ministerial Association has appointed a committee to inquire into the legal phases of the question and individually some of the clergymen announce they would fight the plan from the pulpit.

In other cities municipal action regarding the picture houses has been taken. Clinton has passed an ordinance prohibiting the sale of more tickets than there are seats and offenders will be prosecuted.

In Moline a morals censorship committee consisting of Chief of Police O. M. Bisant, Rev. J. C. Connor, pastor of the First Methodist Church, and Mrs. C. J. Seymour, made a quiet tour of investigation of the picture houses. This was done at the request of the Ministerial Union, which objected to films showing white slavery, dope fiends and criminals.

Complaint was made at Carthage that the opera house was over a garage and steps toward adequate fire protection were taken.

La Harpe's City Council has passed a new license ordinance fixing the picture show rate at $25 a year or $15 for six months. Benefits, religious and educational shows are exempt.

MUNICIPAL SHOWS AND DANCES.

Dr. Taylor of Chicago Advocates Theaters and Dance Halls Run By Community.

"Municipal moving picture shows and municipal dance halls are needed in every city," said Dr. Graham Taylor, of Chicago, one of the most prominent social welfare workers in the middle-west, in an address before the Federated Brotherhood at Galesburg. "Every citizen must concentrate on the welfare of his town, and it is the commercialization of innocent recreations such as these that brings us to the present predicament."

BENEFITS AND NEIGHBORHOOD ACTIVITIES AID EXHIBITORS

What Illinois Picture Houses Are Doing In Way of Comm unity Work.

That variety in programs, which exhibitors in most Illinois cities find essential, has not been lacking. Benefits have changed the make-up of the crowds and the friendly co-operation in local affairs has proved profitable. The Vitagraph at White Hall showed for the benefit of the town band's treasury Washington's Birthday. A Francis X. Bushman feature went along with the senior class play in the opera house at Collinsville. Y. M. C. A. members at Carthage had a contest to see who could sell the most tickets for their revenue-sharing show at the American.

In Belleville the poor and unemployed were helped when the Washington turned over a day's receipts to the local Welfare Association. Manager Roy MacMullen of the Colonial, at Joliet, had a private show of "The Escape" for the medical fraternity, prominent club women and leaders in civic affairs. In Dixon, St. Agnes' Guild, of the Episcopal church, supplemented the picture bill at the Family with some special numbers. Again "The Spoilers" has been booked for Springfield, this time at the Capitol.

Names of Waukegan residents were hidden in the want ads of a local paper and the finders were given four tickets. The young men of Somonauk who promoted "The Perils of Pauline" complete in three shows at the Elite sold season tickets at $1. The Metropolitan, at Plymouth, showed "Satan" on Sunday, but in the afternoon to avoid conflict with church services. "Damon and Pythias," at the Elite, in Petersburg, was sponsored by the local lodge Knights of Pythias. The Pythians at Winchester gave over half of their minstrel show at the opera house to the three-reel Vitagraph "Love, Luck and Gasoline." The Bureau of Mines safety pictures, under the auspices of the Illinois Miners and Mechanics Institute, were shown free at the opera house in Collinsville, and the Labor Temple in Staunton. The Colonial, at Galesburg, has announced daily programs of features averaging five reels instead of shorter length subjects.

The new West theater, in Galesburg, has the slogan "House of Quality." Local snapshots enlivened the shows at the Princess in Kankakee. The Court, in Kankakee, is issuing a weekly program distributed every Saturday. The Grand, at Oakland, finds serials pay and "The Trey o' Hearts" is following "Lucille Love." The Capitol, at Pekin, has been enlarging its stage for occasional theatrical attractions.

OTHER ILLINOIS ITEMS.

The Meridian Amusement Company of Illinois, with headquarters at Danville, has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,100 to operate moving picture shows and amusements. The incorporators are William J. Vesey, Nate Erber, Gottlieb H. Heine, Fred C. Heine, Arthur Beuke, A. E. Heine and C. J. Scheimann.

Frank McGuire, who formerly operated the Princess at Macomb, has started a picture show at Mt. Pleasant, Ia.

Burr Swan, of Pittsfield, is not giving up his serials on account of the lecture course he is running, but gives two picture shows at 6.30 and 7.20 on these busy nights.

The Majestic, vaudeville house, in Springfield, is opposition for the picture theaters on Monday and Thursday afternoons. A coupon and 5 cents is the admission then. This house has adopted the "pay day" stunt sometimes used to bolster up business by photoplay theaters.

The Princess theater, at Watseka, has been closed, at least temporarily. Mearl Eastburn, former proprietor of the Star, has purchased the equipment.

Monday and Thursday night shows have been dropped by the Lakin theater at St. David. As a balm Tuesday night is a big feature night.

JACKSONVILLE STUDIO NOTES.

By Leon Louiso, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Director Robert G. Vignola found it necessary for a slight operation and he was recently operated on at De Soto hospital by Dr. Sandusky. The operation was a slight one and he will not be inconvenienced greatly by it.

F. J. Marion, secretary-treasurer of the Kalem Company, has returned to New York City. His family remain here for the remainder of the winter.

Some of the Kalem people attended the masque ball at the Germania Club this week. Some of the best makeups at the affair were those of the Kalemites. John E. Mackin was made up as "The Clutching Hand." Jere Austin as "Beau Brummel," in colonial costume. Director Robert G. Vignola was made up in a kid character costume. Tisdale J. Dowe made a good country constable. Jack Macomber used a "Ford Sterling" make-up. Miss J. K. Reed wore a hoop skirt and was made up as a Southern, before the war girl, character. Others from the company, who were not made up, were Miss Dorothy Benard, Miss Anna Nillson, Mr. Guy Coombs and Geo. Lanning.

Arthur Albertson, of the Kalem, put on a dance number with a partner at the Hotel Mason at the Associated Charities Society Cabaret. He received excellent press notice and was considered one of the best dancers on the list of entertainers.

The Lubin Southern studio here closed Feb. 13, and Mr. Hotaling left the following Monday for New York City. The future plans for the use of the local studio have not been given out. Mr. Hotaling has not returned to Jacksonville as yet, at this writing. Raymond McGee, juvenile man with company, has left for New York City. Norwell "Babe" Hardy, who has been playing comedy "fatman" leads, has also gone to New York City. Jerold Hevener, character and lead man, and Garry Hotaling, cameraman, went to Philadelphia. Miss Mae Hotely, comedienne and star of the company, is taking a vacation. Other members of the company are still in Jacksonville.

The Lubin dramatic company, under the direction of Geo. Terwilliger, is at St. Augustine, and will likely be there for about six weeks.

Storm V. Boyd, stage manager of the Kalem studio, executed the decorative scheme for the society cabaret at the Mason. The work was perhaps the best of its kind at a local charity entertainment and the ladies who promoted the affair were very grateful to Mr. Boyd for his excellent work.

From Palatka, Fla., comes the following. Mr. H. D. Blauvelt, of the C. L. Chester Company, Inc., New York, now on a world tour making pictures, has just made the Ocklawaha trip on the Hart line steamer Hiawatha making pictures of the river, orange groves, alligators and the steamer in motion and at rest.

JACKSONVILLE THEATERS.

The walls of the new Montgomery theater, under construction, are going up rapidly and the building will soon be ready for the opening. The theater will have a capacity of more than a thousand and it will be the largest picture theater in Jacksonville, or in the state.

The Republic showed Lillian Russell in "Wildfire" this week, and the picture proved to be a winner. Signor De Maria is the novelty singer.

The Doric Trio are furnishing the entertainment to the picture patrons at the Imperial theater this week. The theater has undergone entire redecorating and the interior is now very cozy, with its newly decorated walls and interior.

"Spartacus," the eight-reel feature picture, was shown at the Grand this week at popular prices. It was well patronized. "Exploits of Elaine" are going well at the Grand.

At the Savoy "Runaway June" is an attraction on Fridays.

IOWA CITIES CAN NOT OWN MUNICIPAL THEATRES.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

HE lower house of the Iowa Legislature defeated by a vote of 59 to 20 the Bremer bill to allow cities and towns to own and operate municipal theaters.

DES MOINES PRESS CLUB HAS MELODRAMA.

The plot of a novel moving picture made for the Press Club of Des Moines was woven around a session of the State Legislature.

The hero is a member, who defied a Big Boss lobbyist and refused to report out of a committee one of his corporation bills. There are several thrills, including a jump for life from a five-story building. The film will be sent on a tour of Iowa after it runs in Des Moines. The picture, a portion of which was made in the State House, shows Governor Clarke, Lieut.-Gov. Harding, other State officials, Miss Vernal Patterson, the telephone girl who won second prize in the Essanay's beauty contest, and Miss Anna Pierce, daughter of J. M. Pierce, prominent farm paper publisher.

IOWA ITEMS.

"At the risk of running up against some orthodox opinions," says the Tama News, "we are going to say that we, in a measure, fail to see just exactly how the local picture shows can lower the morals of the goers. We have attended a few of the shows and candidly have seen nothing that we could condemn."

D. C. Johnson has taken over the Princess theater at Ida Grove, which has been operated by Joseph Goedert, and will give pictures and vaudeville. The Bennett orchestra will be used for the musical program.

H. R. Bygel has sold the Electric theater at Union to J. S. Skillen. The latter's son, George Skillen, will be manager.

Edward Killian of Algona has purchased a moving picture theater at Whittemore, assuming charge March 15.

A company has been formed at Russell to operate a moving picture show.

The Knights of Pythias opera house at Pacific Junction is now under the management of Merritt Mendenhall and Marvin Moore.

J. L. Bandy of Redfield has purchased the Gem Photoshow at Corydon.

G. W. Curtis has leased the People's theater at Redfield to E. H. Holmes.

J. W. Hadley is reported to be contemplating the erection of a new home for the New Orpheum theater at North English next spring.

The editor of the Sentinel at Maquoketa gave "The Christian" a strong boost when the Pastime ran the picture. He had seen it in Chicago, adding, "We climbed five flights of stairs, sat up under the rafters and paid twenty-five cents for the seat, but it was worth it."

A moving picture show has been opened in Castle Hall at Walcott.

A. L. Belding's opera house at Van Wert was destroyed by fire.

Moving pictures of the Iowa National Guard have been shown at the A-Muse-U in Muscatine and the Crystal in Cedar Rapids.

SOUTHERN ITEMS OF INTEREST.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

MISS CLAIRE WHITNEY, who was in Augusta, Ga., producing "The New Governor," appeared in person at the Grand theater and talked about "The Walls of Jericho," a current attraction in which she was featured.

Ben R. Harley of Brunswick, Ga., is manager of the Pastime.

W. W. White has opened the Mutual theater at Commerce, Ga.

Manager Chapelle of the Dreamland theater at Mobile, Ala., has leased the Cozy theater at Bay Minette, Ala.

R. E. Martin, who is having the new Grand theater erected at Columbus, Ga., has sold the Bonita theater.

The Jewel City

Panama-Pacific Exposition Opens—Called the Jewel City—Located in Heart of Big Metropolis It Is Bound To Help Picture Business There—Opening Day Left Shows But Slightly Attended; But Entertainment Grows In Demand—Picture Men In Parade.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco, to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal, was opened in a completed form on February 20th, with an attendance but little short of a half a million. Despite the fact that the greatest war in history is now waging in Europe and the entire world for two years has been feeling the effects of a financial depression, this exposition enjoys the distinction of being by far the most costly of any ever planned, with more foreign countries and states participating.

The exposition differs from any others ever held in that it is located in the heart of a great city, instead of in an outlying district; in that it fronts upon deep water, enabling vessels to discharge cargoes of exhibits directly at the grounds; in the adoption of a court plan for buildings, instead of having them scattered; in the following out of a definite color plan for buildings, statues and roads, and in the use of motion pictures for educational purposes. On the opening day more than fifty moving picture machines were in operation on the grounds and within a few days this will be swelled to a total of at least seventy-five. The free exhibitions offered proved to be popular from the opening of the gates on the morning of February 20th and promise to be one of the great features of the Exposition.

The regular moving picture houses thrughout the city did but a very light business on the opening day of the Exposition, and some eliminated their customary matinee. It is anticipated that for a few days business will be interfered with, but that after the initial excitement wears offs the attendance will be heavier than ever, owing to the vast crowds of visitors that will be here throughout the year.

Many prominent exhibitors and exchange men took part in the great parade held on the morning of the opening day. There were no automobiles, carriages or other vehicles in this, it being the march of public citizens to the "Jewel City" they had assisted in creating. Dozens of moving picture cameras were posted at leading vantage points to secure views of what is probably the greatest public demonstration ever made.

ORGAN RECITAL AT U. S. STEEL EXHIBIT.

A very interesting organ recital was given on the opening day of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco in the moving picture demonstration hall of the United States Steel Corporation in the Palace of Mines and Metallurgy, by Henry Spiller, organist. This concern has fitted up one of the finest moving picture halls on the grounds and has prepared a wide range of subjects illustrating processes of manufacture. A Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra has been installed to furnish music and the organist is qualified to explain the workings of the instrument to those who may be interested.

STUDIO AT OAKLAND

The Macograph Moving Picture Company, Claus Spreckels Building, San Francisco, is preparing to erect a studio at East Oakland, to be operated in conjunction with the school that is being conducted. The work there will be in charge

STANDARD FILM CO. OPENS OFFICE.

The Standard Film Company, recently formed at San Francisco, has opened offices in rooms 620-21, Mechanics Bank Building, Market and Mason streets, and is now ready to make bookings. J. L. Warner is general manager of the concern, which has on hand a large stock of Keystone comedies, two and three reel features, and which has the California rights for the five-reel feature "Alone in New York."

AL. WOODS MAKES THE OCEAN TRIP.

Al. H. Woods, well known in Eastern moving picture circles, arrived here recently on the steamship Great Northern which made her maiden trip through the Panama Canal. Grace Darling, of the Hearst-Selig service was also a passenger on this boat.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO ITEMS.

The Cosy theater has been opened on Fillmore street, near Golden Gate avenue, by a Mr. Blackwell. The new house has a seating capacity of about 300.

The Realty Rebuilding Company has taken out a building permit for the moving of the old Chutes theater on Fillmore street, near Eddy, and will remodel this at a cost of about $5,000.

The Globe Film Exchange, Inc., Pantages Building, has added to its office and storage space by taking on another room.

The Sunset theater at Irving and Seventh avenue, formerly known as the Parnassus theater, has been reopened under the direction of Messrs. Ritchie, Earl and Arens.

Irving Lesser has returned from a trip through Northern California in the interests of the Golden Gate Film Exchange. He found conditions greatly improved there, with the prospect for immense crops.

G. A. Metcalfe has been appointed exclusive distributor for Powers machines throughout the Pacific Coast, except Southern California. A large stock will be carried at San Francisco to meet immediate requirements.

The American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., upon which Coast supply houses depend to a marked degree for the transportation of moving picture house equipment, has advised that it can accept no more west bound freight for the month of March. There is now a scarcity of equipment owing to the demands for Exposition needs, and it may be necessary to send stocks by rail.

M. N. Zar, who has filled the position of general manager for the Berkeley theater, Berkeley, Cal., since this house was taken over by C. W. Reavis, has resigned and the management is now in the hands of the owner.

Mark Hanna has sold his interests in the White theater, Salinas, Cal., and his former partner, Mr. Barrier, is preparing to open Brown's opera house at that place.

Dan Wolf, who conducts a moving picture house at San Luis Obispo, Cal., has taken over a theater at Santa Maria, a prominent city in the oil fields.

The Dreamland theater at Fort Bragg, Cal., is to be opened under the direction of Tom Kuhn. A Powers Cameragraph No. 6A and a mercury arc rectifier have been installed.

The Unique Amusement Co. has installed a new motor-generator set at its house at Santa Cruz, Cal., under the direction of the operator and part owner, A. Higgins.

Arthur E. Miller, formerly of New York and San Francisco, has succeeded Wm. Timmins as manager of the T. D. theater at Sacramento, Cal.

Deputies Close Theaters

Michigan State Fire Marshal's Semi-Annual Inspection of Detroit Results in Temporary Closing of Two Picture Houses—Department Is Allowing Time for Changes Needed to Comply With Law—Larger Theaters Commended by Deputy Schaefer.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETERMINED that Michigan moving picture theaters shall comply with the law, wires leading into seven Detroit motion picture theaters were cut by deputies of the state fire marshal's office on Wednesday morning, Feb. 24, but before night five of them carried out the orders of Thomas C. Schafer, deputy state fire marshal, and were permitted to give their shows. Two theaters remained closed and up to the time of writing are still closed. Mr. Schaefer said that many other theaters in Detroit will be closed unless the owners comply with the state law. The theaters closed were the Pekin, 574 St. Antoine street, and the Columbus, 326 Watson street.

There are at the present time an even 140 theaters in Detroit devoted to moving pictures. The semi-annual inspection under the state fire law started February 1. Although but five days are allowed for owners to make changes ordered by the inspectors, in many cases two weeks have been granted, it being the aim of the department to give every latitude to the owners and managers of the theaters. Last fall when the department made its inspection in Detroit, the Edison company, which supplies the current to local theaters, removed its meters and connections when informed that certain houses were disobeying the law, but this year, to save the company trouble and expense, only the wires were cut. Soon after this was done, the fire marshal's office in the Majestic building was thronged with owners and managers of theaters and their attorneys. Officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League were also present. But the deputy was emphatic in his orders and told the picture men that as soon as they complied with the laws and paid the $10 inspection fee, they could continue to do business and not before. "Every year we seem to have trouble with some of the theater men," said Mr. Schafer, the man responsible for the wires being cut. "They refuse to do anything until we stop them from giving shows. Then they toe the mark. They have all been given plenty of notice and it was up to them to obey the law. The law is there and until such time as it is repealed, this department will see that the law is enforced. As for the moving picture men, they have no right to take it upon themselves to disobey the law or to dictate what should be done. A law is a law and their individual opinion cannot change it. I didn't make the law. It is up to our department to enforce its provisions and we are determined to do it. We find that in some instances men are handling moving picture theaters here who have just purchased them. They don't know that the changes have been ordered, and after they have paid over the money they find out that the conditions have been misrepresented by the sellers. In two or three cases I gave them permission to continue giving performances, with a promise that the necessary changes would have to be made at once.

"The trouble with the moving picture theaters is that there are a lot of men running them who don't know the first thing about how they should be conducted. Many of them were formerly salesmen, meat market owners, or in some other line of business. They have an idea that owning a picture house is like having a mint. The men who sell the theaters to them, in many cases, exaggerate the possibilities of the business, and when they step in they find out that things are not so rosy. They are constantly in 'hot water.' They are not making the money they expected; in fact, ofttimes the theaters are losing propositions. When we come along and order changes that cost dollars and cents naturally they resent it. But that is not our fault.

"We find that the owners of the larger theaters are living up to every letter of the law. We have not the least complaint to make against them. They are always willing to co-operate with our department because they are men of experience and know that it is only for their own welfare."

On Thursday, Feb. 25, wires to three more motion picture theaters were cut by deputies of the state fire marshal's office, and the fuses were taken from a fourth theater.

The deputies claim that many of the exhibitors have refused to pay their inspection fees, while the exhibitors claim that the deputies have been unreasonable in their demands.

It is believed that by the time this issue of the Moving Picture World is in the hands of our readers, conditions in Michigan will have been amicably adjusted. The state association is certain that before the year has elapsed Michigan will have not more than one annual inspection.

PATHESCOPE FILMS CAUSE STIR IN DETROIT

Deputy of State Fire Marshal Closes Department Store Pathescope Show —Injunction Demanded.

On Feb. 23 a deputy from the State Fire Marshal's office of Michigan ordered Heyns Bazaar, a Detroit department store, to stop selling the Pathescope and giving exhibitions; also the Detroit City Gas Company from giving Pathescope exhibitions. The next day Heyns Bazaar, who sold the machine to the gas company, applied for a temporary injunction in Judge Codd's court in Detroit, restraining the state fire marshal's office from prohibiting motion picture exhibitions in churches, factories, etc. The application sets forth that the Heyn concern sells Pathescope machines to Detroit schools, churches and private families, apparatus not subject to the state laws governing the picture theaters, because celluloid films are not used, that these films are shipped by mail and express without a danger label. The company states that the films have been pronounced not inflammable by United States experts and the New York city board of fire underwriters. It claims that the films are made of a composition having cellulose acetate as its base, that they are slow burning and do not come under the law for the regulation of celluloid films.

MANY CHANGES IN THEATER OWNERSHIP.

February Sees Several Changes of Ownership Among Smaller Houses.

The month of February was an extremely busy one for the change in ownership of moving picture theaters. It is doubtful if ever there was more activitity in this respect during one month. Most of the theaters selling have been of the smaller capacity, the reasons being that the managers or proprietors desired to enter some other line of business or that they found the percentage of profits too small for the time involved. Here are a few of the changes: The Louis theater, 710 Mt. Elliott avenue, sold by Bertram Boyd to Edward Beardsley, the lease and equipment; the Kercheval theater, sold by George W. Weeks, to the Widner-Johnson Company of Alpena, Mich., for $1,500; and the Colonial, sold by Lou and Ben Cohen to J. W. Quoitter.

Following are the theaters which have closed down entirely owing to poor business, and the buildings will either be remodeled or leased to other parties: Woodward theater, on Woodward avenue, near Milwaukee avenue, one of the pioneer picture houses in Detroit; the Hamilton theater, at Hamilton Boulevard and Pennsylvania avenue; the Calvert theater, on Woodward avenue, operated by the Calvert Theater Company, and the Ideal theater, Field and Mack avenue. The latter house is closed for alterations.

NO SECOND STORY SHOWS.

Fireproof Buildings Can't Have Shows Up Stairs—Lawmakers Fear Panics.

The attempt of Representative Palmer, of Detroit, to have passed by the Michigan legislature a bill to permit moving pictures being shown on the second floors of fireproof buildings, on permit of the state fire marshal, was defeated on Feb. 24. An amendment was made to the bill to include basement halls, but this was defeated before the bill was given its quietus by members who feared that they would be blamed for passing such a law if a panic ever occurred in a second-story hall. The bill was intended principally to allow the Detroit Y. M. C. A. to show moving pictures in its second floor auditorium.

MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS WILL OPPOSE NEW CENSOR BILL

Measure Proposed by Representative Kooyers of Holland Not Acceptable to Exhibitors.

A board of censors for moving pictures is provided in a bill introduced into the Michigan legislature on Feb. 25. It calls for three censors, to work under the labor commissioner, and to be paid out of that department's funds. The board would have its headquarters in Lansing, and would collect a fee of $1 for every 1,000 feet of film inspected. No film could be shown publicly anywhere in the state until it had the board's official O.K. The bill further provides a fine of anywhere from $25 to $300 for any one who fraudulently marks a film "approved by the Michigan Board of Censors."

The fact cannot be denied that the requirements of the above bill are drastic, to say the least. The bill was introduced by one Representative Hooyers of Holland. It is needless to add that the above bill will be vigorously opposed by the exhibitors as well as the exchange men of Michigan.

CLOSE CHURCH PICTURE SHOW.

On Feb. 22 the state fire marshal's office ordered that motion picture entertainments in the Fort Street Presbyterian Church, Fort and Third streets, be discontinued. The pastor of this church stated that the motion picture machine had been installed with the approval of local officials. Other churches had planned to install machines, but none had done so up to the time of the deputy fire marshal's order. "My primary object in closing up these entertainments is to safeguard the public," said Deputy Inspector Thomas C. Schafer. "The state laws provide the kind of booths that must be built about the motion picture machine, the width of the aisles in the auditorium, the number of exits, the electric wiring, as well as other safety details. Detroit theaters who comply with these laws pay a license fee every six months of $10. There is no reason why the churches and public halls should not do likewise."

DETROIT LEAGUE TO DANCE.

It has been decided to hold a ball on Thursday evening, April 15, at the Arcadia Dancing Academy, under the auspices of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The Arcadia can take care of 3,000 people. Howard O. Pierce, chairman of the dance committee, is making all necessary arrangements. The members are taking a great deal of interest in this coming event and are working hard to make it a success from every standpoint. The committee promises many unique and novel entertainment features.

WORK TO BEGIN ON NEW REGENT.

William F. Klatt, of the Detroit Theater, Inc., announces that work will start soon on the erection of the Regent theater at the southeast corner of Woodward and Horton avenues, which is just a stone's throw from the proposed Duplex theater on the East Grand Boulevard. Mr. Klatt states that the Regent will seat 3,500 people, while the duplex will take care of about 2,500. The first floor of the Regent alone will handle 2,000. The estimated cost of this structure is about $150,000, and its owners promise that it will embody all that is best in modern theater construction. The main entrance will be on Woodward avenue. The foyer will be 35 by 100 feet.

DETROIT BRIEFS.

A new theater opened on Monday, Feb. 22, at 1090 Third avenue, under the name of the Merrick. It seats 300 and is an attractive and cosy playhouse. The owners are B. L. Booth and James Dunwoody. The company owns 65 feet of property in the rear of the theater, and if business warrants it, they will enlarge the theater later on. The Mutual program is being used at present.

R. H. Riddell is erecting a theater at the corner of Kirby and Greenwood avenues, which will be completed within 90 days.

About March 20 is the date set for the opening of the new Majestic theater, Woodward avenue, near Willis avenue.

Alterations are now being made to the Broadway theater on Broadway. When completed the name will be changed to the Broadway Strand. The new lessee, Harry I. Garson, told a representative of the Moving Picture World that thousands of dollars were being spent by the owner of the building to make it one of the finest and prettiest houses in the United States. An entire new front will be installed; there will be a new entrance into the balcony; new scheme of decorating and electric lighting, so that it will practically be a new theater. Mr. Garson contemplates having the house ready some time in April.

Starting Sunday, Feb. 28, the Washington theater inaugurated a new scale of prices, making the entire house at night 25 cents down stairs and 10 and 15 in the balcony, with matinee prices the same. By reason of this change, the Washington will hereafter be the home of the big features to be handled through the Selected Film company, such as the first Mary Pickford releases, the Eternal City, etc. "Hypocrites" started an indefinite run at this playhouse on Feb. 28. Manager Starr of the Washington has been given permission by the lessee, Mr. John U. Kunsky, to enlarge the orchestra, to go more elaborately into scenic effects, and in other ways to make improvements in the matter of presentation of these big features.

SOUTHWESTERN ITEMS.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

"FREE Will Offering" is the Sunday admission price of the Gem at Little Rock, Ark., and the Palace in the same city advertises, "Donation at the Door." These are among the houses battling with the problem of keeping open on Sunday and avoiding a clash with the statutes.

Manager J. M. Vivion has installed a second Simplex machine in the Princess at Denton, Tex., to avoid waits.

The Pope and Happy Hour theaters at McKinney, Tex., are now using four reels a day, each.

The Wigwam theater at El Paso, Tex., gave a private showing of Elephant Butte dam pictures to irrigation officials.

Filling Dark Nights

Cincinnati's Leading Theater Gives Mid-Season Week to Moving Pictures—Five Reels of War Film With Prices Ten to Twenty-Five Cents—Business Depression and Bad Theatrical Season Cause of Innovation—Other Houses May Follow.

By Kenneth C. Craine, Cincinnati Corresp ondent of the Moving Picture World.

DURING all of last week the Grand Opera House, one of Cincinnati's leading theaters, which has shown some of the biggest hits of the current theatrical season, including "A Pair of Sixes," "Potash & Perlmutter," "Under Cover," etc., was devoted to moving pictures. Under the auspices of a local newspaper a very good set of war pictures, taken in various parts of the war zone, on both sides of the line, were exhibited, five reels constituting the program, with prices ranging from 10 to 25 cents. Four performances a day were given, and excellent houses were the rule. The real importance of the event, however, lay not so much in the fact that these pictures were shown, but in the fact that a leading playhouse was given over to them. A bad theatrical season, due to the business depression, coupled with the steady and unswerving advance of moving pictures, is of course responsible for this significant development, and to the minds of keen observers foreshadows what is going to happen quite generally during the next few years.

Already it is understood that Cincinnati theaters will be given over to moving pictures this summer quite as generally as they were last summer, which is to say that all of them will show pictures, either exclusively or in connection with vaudeville programs. The Empress and B. F. Keith's, of course, use pictures regularly, winter and summer alike, while the Grand, the Lyric and the Walnut, all of which were devoted to pictures exclusively during parts of last spring and summer, are said to be contemplating the same step this year. The Gayety of last summer, one of the burlesque houses, has for several months been the Strand, one of the largest exclusive picture theaters in the city, which will make the thing pretty nearly unanimous this summer.

BOARD PROSECUTES EXHIBITOR.

Showed Film Without Board's Approval Mark—Claims Picture Has Been Passed.

One of the first definite steps taken by the Ohio Board of Censors toward the enforcement of its censorship authority, in Dayton, at least, was the arrest last week of Theodore Chifos, an exhibitor, on the charge of showing a film not bearing the boards' approval. Inspector S. E. May, of the board, made the charge, Chifo's defense being that the picture had been duly approved by the board, but that the approval mark had been torn off in transit. As in other cases where this point has come up, the board has run up against a difficulty involved in its inability to prove that the picture has actually not been approved by it, as this is the charge always made, and the burden of proof rests on the prosecution. The absence of the approval mark does not complete the case, and it is thus somewhat troublesome for the board to furnish the necessary proof.

SPRINGFIELD MINISTERS AGITATE SUNDAY CLOSING

Exhibitors Through the Press Present to the People Their Case.

Motion picture exhibitors of Springfield, O., have been placed on the alert recently by the agitation started by the Ministerial Association, composed of Protestant ministers, to obtain the closing of picture shows on Sunday. The matter has not yet been brought before the city commission, but it is the object of the exhibitors to head it off effectually before it gets that far. To that end they have vigorously presented their case to the public through the press, not that they fear the result of a fair hearing, as they point out, but rather that they want the truth to be known, in order to avoid possible prejudice resulting from the attitude of the ministers. They state that not only are the theaters not open in the morning, so as to prevent church attendance, but that the films shown are usually of a character selected especially with reference to being shown on Sunday. Furthermore, they point out that the moving picture theaters are now paying a part of their receipts over to the Anti-Tuberculosis League in Springfield, enabling a visiting nurse to be maintained and other phases of the organization's excellent work to be continued, and that this contribution might be impossible if the Sunday revenue were cut off.

NEIGHBORS RESTRICT THEATER.

A victory for Joseph H. Thal, of Dayton, who proposed to build a moving picture theater in Dayton View, resulted from the attempt of certain residents of that suburb to have the project enjoined. A temporary restraining order was issued, which was dissolved by the court after the hearing last week, and a permanent injunction against the theater was refused. The objectors made a small point or two, however, as the court made his order such as to restrict the operation of the theater to the hours between 10 a. m. and 10.30 p. m. daily, and between 7.30 and 10.30 p. m. on Sunday. It was held that the district where the theater is to be located is not strictly residential, and that therefore an injunction could not be obtained.

CINCINNATI BRIEFS.

M. N. Wear, of Charleston, W. Va., manager of the Colonial Amusement Co.'s two theaters at Charleston and Huntington, was in Cincinnati last week, calling on the General Film Co. on matters connected with service for the theaters. Both of the houses are among the leaders in their two cities, with 10-cent admission charges and a generally high level of business. Mr. Wear states that business has been excellent.

The Chamber of Commerce of Canton, O., was entertained at its recent annual dinner by a series of moving pictures showing scenes and incidents in the Glacier National Park, in connection with the movement, backed by civic organizations all over the country, to "See America First." The screen was so arranged as to give all the diners a good view while the dinner was going on, saving time and adding interest to the occasion.

The seating capacity of the Dome theater, of Youngstown, will be increased by the addition of about 500 balcony seats, according to Messrs. Deibel and Renner, the proprietors. Other alterations, the whole involving an expenditure of about $10,000, will make the theater much larger and more convenient in every way.

FILMS SHOW HOW ELECTRICITY HELPED DIG BIG CANAL.

A striking evidence of the extent to which moving pictures are appreciated nowadays by large industrial corporations, as a means of preserving a record of work done, as well as of demonstrating the operation of their machinery, was given in Cincinnati recently in the several displays of the series of pictures taken by the General Electric Co. of work on the Panama Canal.

Showing Too Many Films

Washington, D. C., Director of Playgrounds Martin, Predicts Many Houses Will Be Crowded Out of Business Because They Show Too Many Reels—Advocates Novel Measure of Licensing Manufacturers of Pictures—Wants Pictures in Schools.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANY moving picture houses in Washington will be crowded out of business because of the attempt to show too many reels, was the prediction made by E. S. Martin, director of playgrounds of the District of Columbia, in an address before one of the Parents' Leagues of this city. Mr. Martin also expressed himself as in favor of the licensing of manufacturers of moving picture films as well as operators of the theaters and asked the co-operation of his audience in bringing this about. He declared that a rigid censorship is necessary and that the present board of examiners find it impossible to do the work. He favored the use of motion pictures in schools as an aid to education. An investigation conducted by the playgrounds department, according to Mr. Martin, revealed the fact that the average child of the city visits the moving picture show at least once each week.

SUNDAY REGULATIONS WAIT ON SUPREME COURT.

The District Commissioners, it is said, will not endeavor to make any Sunday regulations until their power to do so has been fully determined. This decision was communicated by them to Rev. G. G. Johnson, pastor of Immanuel Baptist church, who recently suggested to the Commissioners that regulations preventing the giving of motion picture exhibitions in the theaters of the District of Columbia on Sundays should be enacted. The suggestion was referred to the Corporation Counsel who advised the Commissioners that he understood the decision of the District Court of Appeals sustaining the power of the Commissioners to make Sunday regulations was to be carried to the United States Supreme Court for review. Mr. Syme advised against the promulgation of any new regulations until it was known beyond all question what the rights of the Commissioners in this matter are.

DRUM TO MANAGE WORLD FILM BRANCH OFFICE.

Ben E. Drum has arrived from Denver, Colo., to assume the management of the local branch of the World Special Film Corporation, succeeding W. H. Irvine. Mr. Drum was at one time booker in the Chicago and later in the Minneapolis offices of the General Film Company. He became manager of the Denver branch, remaining in charge in that city for about two years when he accepted a similar position with his present employers. Because of the high altitude of Denver he was forced to leave that section of the country. District Manager Swain, whose headquarters are in Atlanta, Ga., is in the city aiding Mr. Drum in picking up the lines where Mr. Irvine dropped them.

TICKET AND TURNIP.

Alan Bachrach, manager of the Casino theater, running vaudeville and moving pictures, and of several of the exclusive motion picture houses in the Brylawski chain, has adopted a number of unique schemes to attract patronage to the Casino. The latest novelty is the use of cardboard tickets distributed among the school children of Washington, which states that "This Ticket, a Turnip and Five Cents Will Aumit Any Child to Casino theater, Saturday Matinee, Feb. 20. * * *$2.00 in cash will be given to the child bringing the largest turnip." The card further admonishes the entrants to "write your name and tie on turnip." The previous week it was potatoes and some enormous specimens were turned in, the winning fruit weighing more than seven pounds, and the total amount obtained approximated three bushels which were divided among two charitable institutions. Next week it will be carrots.

OPERATORS' UNION GIVES DANCE.

The Motion Picture Operators' Union of this city enjoyed themselves immensely last week dancing. A film was taken of the boys at the annual ball, which film is to be exhibited at a number of the local theaters. Dancing was indulged in until a late hour and in view of the large number of people who attended it the ball was declared a decided success.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NOTES.

L. G. R. Hitchins, who operates a motion picture exhibition in the Opera House, Frostburg, Md., and L. A. DeHoff, of the New theater, Baltimore, Md., visited Washington last week.

Leo Garner made a trip through Virginia last week in the interests of the United Film Service Company. This concern reports good business with the feature films "The Price He Paid," which was booked for a three days' run at the Blue Mouse theater in Baltimore and later extended so as to run for a straight week, and "Are They Born or Made." Both of these were privately exhibited to the theater men of Washington and elicited much favorable comment.

A. Dresner, who at one time was the manager of the Washington Film Exchange of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in this city, and later manager of the Pittsburgh, Pa., branch of Warner's Features, Inc., has gone to Indianapolis, Ind., to open a branch for the Kriterion service.

The Electric Theater Supply Company will no longer maintain a distributing branch in this city and last week the entire equipment of the two rooms in the Bank of Commerce and Savings Building, at Seventh and E Streets, Northwest, was shipped to the Philadelphia office. George W. Smiler, the local manager, will maintain his offices at rooms 204 and 205 in the building, but will accept bookings only, the shipments being made direct from Philadelphia. The Baltimore office will also be put on a booking basis in the same manner.

A bi-weekly motion picture exhibition is to be given in the town hall at Warrenton, Va., by W. A. Garner and J. J. Jeffries.

Strange Bros. have secured control of the Colonial theater in Annapolis, Md., formerly owned by Mr. Boyer, of Hagerstown, Md.

Fred Hable, who operates the Auditorium theater in Winchester, Va., as well as the Gem theater in Washington, and the Masonic theater in Clifton Forge, Va., has under way a fourth theater which will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,500. The new venture is to be named the Strand Motion Picture theater, and will be located in a building now undergoing construction, the upper part of which will be used for office purposes. It is not expected that the house will be ready for opening until September next. It will be used for vaudeville and road-show purposes, as well as for motion pictures.

Mr. Smith, of the Empire, in Frederick, Md., is running big features with an admission charge of ten cents. The city opera house is running vaudeville as well as pictures.

D. P. Wein, of the New Virginia theater, in Harrisonburg, Va., and George Karanicholas, of the American theater, in Norfolk, Va., were visitors here during the week.

Lieutenant Jim P. Anderson is busy changing the signs around his headquarters following the change in name from the Box Office Attraction Company to the Fox Film Corporation.

It is reported that M. E. Lindsay, of the Bijou Dream, in Havre-de-Gras, Md., is running a ten-cent show one day a week, using features at that time.

An open air motion picture show has been established at Elkton, Md., although it is rather early to embark on such an enterprise.

Charles G. Wells, of Elkton, Md., reports good business with serial stories, particularly with the "Exploits of Elaine."

KANSAS LEGISLATURE CONSIDERS NEW LICENSE BILL

Provides Licensing of Picture Theaters —Fees That May Be Imoosed.

Special to Moving Picture World by Kansas City News Service.

A BILL to stop display of crimes in moving pictures was introduced in the house of the Kansas Legislature last week by Representative Pierce, of Wyandotte county. The bill provides for a county license of all moving picture houses. The license fee is to be $300 a year; $250 to go to the city and $50 to the county road fund, if the theater is within the city limits and all to go to the county if the picture house is without the city limits.

BEESONS PLAN NEW THEATER.

An up-to-date opera house, one of the finest in Kansas, is planned for Dodge City by Ote and Merritt Beeson, sons of the late Chalk Beeson. The house will cost about $30,000. It will have a stage 25 feet deep and 32 feet wide. The main floor will seat 700, and the balcony 300. The building is to be of reinforced concrete with stucco trimmings. The announcement is made now that moving pictures will be featured frequently, although good shows will be obtained when possible. The Beeson family is well known in Kansas, and the name will not be attached to any enterprise that will not be first class in every respect.

OTHER KANSAS NOTES.

The Daily Tribune at Great Bend is offering the great unheard-of inducement to the people to subscribe to their paper and two tickets free to either of the moving picture theaters in Great Bend.

"413" is the feature on the program of the De Luxe theater at Hutchinson. The De Luxe theater has been showing many of the Keystone, De Luxe and Vitagraph comedies.

The Iris theater at Hutchinson is showing the two-act Biograph "A Scrap of Paper." The Iris is one of the most up-to-date theaters in Kansas and shows some of the best pictures produced.

"The Morals of Marcus" is the picture occupying the title role on the program of the Orpheum theater at Leavenworth last week.

The Hippodrome at Leavenworth is advertising the coming of the "Master Key" and the "Heart of Lincoln."

"The Chinatown Mystery" drew a good audience at the Lyceum theater at Leavenworth last week.

The Victoria theater, 505 Kansas avenue, Kansas City, Kan., is delighting its patrons with the elaborate and varied music of a Fotoplayer.

The Elks theater, Parsons, Kan., has installed an electrically-operated piano player, with numerous orchestral features, to provide music for the performances.

AFTER TEN O'CLOCK AT NIGHT.

Minister Preaches Sensational Sermon About Beloit Pictures After That Hour.

By F. H. Madison, Wisconsin Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"BELOIT'S Biggest Blunder or the Menace of the Movies." This was the title of Rev. George E. Lockhart's recent sermon at the First Baptist Church in Beloit. Aside from remarking that his observation of Beloit film shows led him to wish he could have changed his topic to "Beloit's Biggest Crime," his methods of handling the question were to apply the adjectives "vicious," "salacious," "suggestive" and "melodramatic fraud." And to suggest a local censorship board appointed by the city council of volunteer citizens which would "give the men who run these shows to understand that if they want the patronage of the city they will have to show nothing but that passingly decent and to a degree educative."

A film to which he objected showed:

"A little girl in a den of outlaws, the leader of whom was her foster-father. Detectives surprise them at their gambling and the little girl is hidden away. In the gun fight which follows, the leader of the gamblers is shot and the little girl runs from her place of hiding and lolls the head of the dead outlaw in her lap.

"And a little girl in the audience screamed with delight, and not a single person objected. This happened not in Chicago, but in Beloit. This is my challenge to the citizenship of Beloit: that the cultured persons on the West Side and Piety Hill come down out of their smugness and see what is going on in this city after 10 o'clock at night."

WISCONSIN NOTES.

Otto Weber, who managed the Orpheum theater in West Bend, and Alex Yahr of the Harmony orchestra of that city have purchased the Mermac moving picture house, and West Bend will have but one theater. The orchestra will be a feature at the Mermac.

A company has been organized at Kewaskum to give moving picture shows in Groeschel's opera house.

It is reported a new moving picture house may be opened in Fall Creek.

Frank McCarthy, original owner of the Lyric theater at Eau Claire, has bought that house from Tilton Brothers.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Collins and John David of Bruce have opened the Isis theater at Osceola.

Joseph Guenther and Julius Schoblaska have let the contract at Antigo for a new $20,000 two-story 53x120 steel and brick moving picture theater, seating 1,000. It will be completed May 1.

The Pastime theater has been opened at Cascade.

August Tegge, proprietor of the Tegge Opera house at Edgar, has purchased the Gem theater at that place.

F. M. Rehfuss has again assumed the management of the Star theater at La Crosse.

J. B. De Lorenzo, photoplay theater owner of North Milwaukee, got $300 damages from the village for false arrest, and now Floyd M. Hardy, vaudeville performer, is suing for $10,000. The authorities claimed the license did not include vaudeville.

G. W. Turner has opened the Savoy theater at Park Falls.

Walter Gnatzig of Palmyra has opened a moving picture show at Dousman.

Plans have been drawn for the $350,000 Palace Hippodrome, seating 3,000, to be erected next spring at Grand avenue and Sixth street in Milwaukee by Milwaukee and Chicago capitalists. Martin Beck vaudeville will be used.

Alderman Alford of Madison has introduced an ordinance providing that no machines in that city shall be operated by other than skilled operators. The city electrical inspector shall decide who is skilled. Assistants, not thoroughly qualified, may operate under the supervision of a licensed operator. Only motors approved by the national board of underwriters may be used. Smoking in booths is forbidden.

Religion and Censorship

Ontario Board of Censors Has New Advisory Member Suggested by Archbishop McNeil—Will Advise Board on Matters of Interest to Roman Catholic Church—Orangemen Jealous of Advantage May Also Demand a Place Among the Censors.

By David K. Billings, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONTARIO now has a new member on its censor board. The latest addition is a member of the Catholic church and was appointed upon the suggestion of Archbishop McNeil. His principal duty will be to look after the interests of the Catholic church and to prevent pictures obnoxious to Catholics from appearing on the screen. The new censor is John Burns, formerly chief clerk in the sleeping car department of the Canadian Pacific Railroad and he started his duties immediately after his appointment. It seems that the new censor will have no actual authority on the board, but will act as an advisory member, supported by the Catholic church. Considerable interest was excited among the Orangemen of the city by the announcement and numerous objections were made, some of which inferred that the Orangemen should also have an official representative on the board. There have been no steps taken to bring about the change.

TORONTO EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION CHARTERED

Toronto Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association Has Provincial Charter—Elects Directors.

At a meeting of the Toronto Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association held on February 26, it was announced that a provincial charter had been obtained for the new society, and instead of the executive committee a Board of Directors was elected. The membership of the society now includes practically every exhibitor in Toronto.

TORONTO CONSIDERING THEATER TICKET TAX

Tax of Cent on Each Ticket Proposed —Burdensome Measure In a Bad Season.

There is considerable talk in official circles of imposing a ticket war tax on all theaters in Toronto such as has been inaugurated in Montreal. The new rate would probably be one cent on all tickets up to 25 cents and five cents on all higher priced tickets. The tax would mean that there would be an increased curtailment of the business which is already poor and would, without doubt, put some houses out of business altogether. As yet opposition has prevented any definite action.

JOHN BARLEYCORN TO BE SHOWN.

Phil Kauffman, general manager of the Famous Players Film Service, has just returned from a trip through the eastern provinces and while in Montreal made arrangements with Mrs. Waycott, president of the Woman's Temperance League, to show the anti-liquor film, "John Barleycorn," in that city under the auspices of the league. Tickets will be sold by members of the league and a regular advertising campaign will be instituted. Similar arrangements have been made with the president of the W. C. T. U. in Toronto where the film will be shown after its Montreal engagement.

OTHER TORONTO ITEMS.

Next week will be "Pythian" week in Toronto. Under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias the Universal special feature, Damon and Pythias, will be shown at the Grand theater.

C. H. Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, is leaving for Universal City next week to look over things there.

The weekly feature releases of the Conness-Till Film Company are attracting a lot of favorable comment and are exerting pull in houses all over Canada. There are many predictions that the venture will be a failure, but at present indications are otherwise.

Loew's Winter Garden has abandoned its policy of playing vaudeville, and has booked with the Famous Players Film Service to show Paramount pictures. The first week under the new program was a huge success, the theater being packed day and night.

W. F. Reid has been appointed assistant general manager of the Famous Players Film Service, and started his duties last week.

Feature plays seem to have lost some of their pulling power unless they are shown in one of the big downtown theaters, judging from the results obtained from Julius Caesar, which failed to draw more than a normal crowd at the Garden theater.

The opening of the Legislature and the proposed legislation affecting the moving picture business, which will be passed at this session, are keeping the moving picture men on edge, as some of the laws, especially that relating to children, are especially important.

MICHIGAN NEWS LETTER.

By Midwest Special Moving Picture World Service.

THE Gladstone opera house at Gladstone, Mich., has been sold to R. C. Diggins of the Regent Theater Company of Chicago, who will operate it as a moving picture house. New projection apparatus has been installed.

Roy Hough has sold the Princess theater at Blissfield to Adrian parties.

M. R. Williams, who formerly operated the City opera house in Port Huron until its destruction by fire, has leased the Auditorium in that city and will operate it as a moving picture house, to be known as The Strand. It has been re-equipped. Williams will have 1,000 seats at ten cents and a few at fifteen. The house will be operated in conjunction with his other Michigan and Ohio enterprises.

W. S. Butterfield plans a new vaudeville house, seating 1,400, for Flint. When it is done the Bijou on First street will become a high-class feature picture theater. Butterfield also has been making plans to increase the seating capacity of his Saginaw house, the Bijou, to 1,200, and to add vaudeville to the moving picture bill. The improvements will convert it into a house of the garden type.

Manager Stoffer of the Family theater at Iona has increased his seating capacity to 400 and installed a stage.

A. M. Renne has bought Million's Family theater at Ipsilanti and will operate it as a three-reel five-cent picture house. A new ventilating system has been installed.

E. N. Hennessy sold his interest in the Garden theater at Cheboygan to Walter C. Gregg, local manager of the house, who now is sole owner.

Oscar Price, formerly of Rochester, Minn., new owner of the Electric theater at Traverse City, will use a good many features.

S. S. Fraser is remodeling a building in Durand to be used as a moving picture theater.

More expensive feature pictures will come to the new Princess theater at Albion with the completion of a new house.

The Marquette opera house at Marquette had a special feature week with a "season ticket" at forty cents. Such features as "Samson," "An Odyssey of the North," "Across the Pacific" and "As Ye Sow" were included.

NEW COQUILLE OFFICERS.

New Orleans Company Changes Its Executive Staff.

Special to Moving Picture World from Southern Newspaper Bureau.

AN entire new staff of executive officers has been put in charge of the work of the Coquille Film Co., New Orleans. This move, according to announcement from the company, is a development of the recent growth of the company, with particular reference to the contract previously noted as having been signed by Pathe Freres, whereby that organization takes over the product of the company.

W. J. Hannon, one of New Orleans' wealthy men, largely interested in the producing company, is president, succeeding J. F. Carter. Mr. Hannon will now devote his entire time to the affairs of the film company, it having come to a sufficiently sound basis to make it worth his while to give up his other activities.

Rene Plaissetty, director-general of the company, has been made first vice-president, a new office for the company. Mr. Plaissetty has produced for Pathe previously and will, as before, have active charge of the plant.

William Morgan Hannon, prominent lawyer and son of W. J. Hannon, the president, has been made second vice-president, a new office. He will continue to act as general counsel for the company, and as scenario editor.

M. B. Trezevant, until recently general manager of the New Orleans Association of Commerce, has been made secretary, succeeding N. C. Barnett, who is now made treasurer. Mr. Trezevant, in addition to his duties as secretary, is director of publicity under the new regime.

J. E. Pearce, Southern manager of the Pearce interests, returned recently from Shreveport, where he went to look over the exhibiting situation and to confer with his Shreveport associates, the Saenger interests. Mr. Pearce says he is well pleased with the general situation in the north Louisiana city, especially with the new policy of exhibitors in showing features at feature prices.

SHE'S G'WINE COOK.

The Coquille Film Co., New Orleans, has added a real "black mammy," a Creole cook, to its staff. Whether "Aunt Pauline Batiste," that being her name, will be seen in the films can not be announced at this time. It is not in her contract. It is thought likely, however, that she may be used by way of "local color."

"Aunt Batiste's" initial effort, a knockout in seven reels, was presented one day last week to the very pleasantly surprised members of the company and attaches. The big scene was a daube file, riz a la Evangeline and the fade out was real Creole dripped coffee.

The luncheons are served in a big sunlit room of the executive building, the old Spanish mansion on Bayou St. John adjoining the new glass enclosed studio, so considerable precious time is saved by the new arrangement, and besides Director Plaissetty believes that "Aunt Batiste's" efforts will go far toward keeping the morale of his company up to par—he subscribes to Napoleon's dictum that "An army (moving picture company) travels on its stomach," esthetics to the contrary notwithstanding.

KEEN RIVALRY IN GRETNA.

Pictures appeared as instruments of political rivalry last week with the reopening of the remodeled "Mound City" at Gretna, a suburb of New Orleans. Evans and Zimmer, proprietors of the new house, are leaders of the reform faction which is now in power in the town of Gretna. Andrew Gugle, proprietor of the "Jefferson," is strong with the "regular" faction which holds, and has held for a long time, about all the power there is in Jefferson Parish, otherwise known as the "Free State of Jefferson," in which Gretna is situated. The "people" of Gretna are said to be getting somewhat more than their money's worth as a result of the politicians' efforts to please.

SELIG'S PANAMAIANS BACK.

The Selig company which went to Panama five weeks ago to film the closing scenes of Rex Beach's novel, "The Ne'er Do Well," returned to New Orleans February 23 aboard the United Fruit ship "Heredia." Only one member of the company which sailed away from New Orleans in January was missing. That was Miss Helen Castle. Miss Castle was taken sick before leaving for Panama. In Colon she became worse and at Mr. Selig's direction was brought back to New Orleans and given every attention at one of the sanitariums. Despite every effort she died. Her brother, who had come on being told of her severe illness, took the body back to Los Angeles, their home.

It had been the intention of the Selig company to film the local scenes in a "Lafitte the Pirate" film while in Louisiana, but it was learned when the boat docked that the company would wait until the Spring before taking up this work. Most of the company has left for Chicago; others will follow.

NEW ORLEANS BRIEFS.

Pathe's New Orleans exchange reports that it has booked 65 per cent. of the houses in the Louisiana and Mississippi territory for the "Exploits of Elaine." Pearce's Tudor will have first release for the territory of "Queen Margaret," a big color feature.

The William Fox Film Attraction Co. (formerly Box Office), has, through its New Orleans office, closed a year's contract with the "Princess" at Memphis, Tenn., S. Dembow, supervising manager for the South.

W. H. Gueringer, representing the Fichtenberg interests, left New Orleans recently for Dallas, Houston and other Texas points to secure film for the Fichtenberg houses in that territory and to look over the general exhibiting situation.

The old Majestic theater at Elysian Fields and Dauphine streets, New Orleans, was sold at auction one day last week to Steve Ciolina, the price paid being $9,500. The Majestic will continue in the pictures.

Foster E. Simmons, manager of the Dreamland theater, 703 Euclid Evenue, has added one more reason for making that popular little playhouse more attractive to the hundreds that pass it each day. He has installed a Bartola player. The Dreamland is running Mutual releases, with features occasionally.

OHIO NEWS LETTER.

By J. D. Raridan, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Market Square theater, 7640 Broadway, Cleveland, has established a reputation for its feature programs. S. H. Barck, manager, adopted this attitude in determining the policy of his theater: first, to learn what his patrons desire in the way of moving pictures; second, to provide for them exactly the sort of entertainment they want. As a result the house runs a new feature every day. A four-piece orchestra contributes musical entertainment.

Harry Vestal, Columbus, member of the state board of censors, a recent visitor in Cleveland, found himself the victim of such an excellent valve-handle wheeze he couldn't keep from telling it. Harry's seven-year-old son had been hearing so much about "cleaning up the movies" he took it seriously. He read the newspapers and learned anew that pictures were to undergo a clean-up. Finally the youngster could resist no longer. Perfectly serious and with the best intent he bought a dustpan.

"Here, Pap, now you can clean up the pictures," said Master Vestal as he handed his censor-parent the pan.

Among the progressive feature film exchange men who have succeeded in Cleveland by an aggressive policy is S. N. Lichter, manager of the Liberty Film Renting Company, Columbia building. Among his recent releases distributed throughout Ohio, are "Should a Woman Tell?" and "The Devil's Eye."

Walter W. Culp, manager of the Cleveland exchange for the World Film Corporation, 320 Columbia building, received a message from New York headquarters to the effect that eight more stage stars had been secured for single reel productions. Contracts include those with Richard Carle, Jefferson De Angelis, Lew Fields, Thomas A. Wise, Lulu Glaser, Florence Tempest, Kathryn Osterman and Paula Edwardes. Mr. Culp has notified his clients that the first release of this list will be Richard Carle in "The Dancing Beetle" on March 8.

NEW PALACE THEATER.

Buffalo's New Picture House Attracts Large, Enthusiastic Crowd on Opening Night.

By Billy Bison, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World, 23 Victoria Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE Palace, Buffalo's newest moving picture house, located on Main Street, between North and South Division Streets, opened auspiciously Saturday, February 27. This house has one of the most expensive and central locations in Buffalo. If the opening crowds indicate those of the future at the Palace the marked success of the theater is assured. The Palace is owned by the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Co., which has a chain of live moving picture theaters. Many congratulations were received by Mr. Mark, Harold Edel, managing director, and Deshler Welch, manager. Mr. Edel is also managing director of the Strand theater, Buffalo. Several leading lights of the theatrical world were present at the opening.

Yellow, white and gold comprise the decorative scheme, which is simple in design. Rest rooms, located at the front of the house, are elaborately equipped in these colors. The lobby walls are constructed of highly polished, solid marble. Brand, the noted Chicago artist, supplied the rural paintings for the proscenium arch and walls. The Palace has all the latest safety devices and is absolutely fireproof. On each side of the theater is a large, outside court. The ventilating system supplies plenty of pure air and there is an indirect lighting system. Another pleasing feature is a series of long gradual approaches leading to the first and second balconies. Thos A. Edison's Super Kinetoscope furnishes perfect projection.

Ivan Shapiro, former first violinist of the St. Louis Symphony orchestra, is director of the Palace orchestra. His opening programme was delightful. The Paramount service is featured at the Palace. The opening production was "The Girl of the Golden West." Coming attractions are Gaby Deslys in "Her Triumph," William H. Crane in "David Harum," Mary Ryan and Harry Mestayer in "Stop Thief," and Elsie Janis in "The Caprices of Kitty."

TO MAKE LOCAL NEWS FILMS.

A. R. Sherry, manager of the Family theater, Buffalo, will manage, in conjunction with the theater, the Kinetic Films, Inc., recently organized in that city. According to Mr. Sherry the concern, for the present, will confine itself to taking pictures of important local events. He says a news service will be a feature of the pictures. A studio will be built at 619 Michigan Street, Buffalo. Oscar A. Simon is president of the company and L. J. Lesch, treasurer. Mr. Sherry announces that later the company will produce plays. He recently showed the audience at the Family theater how moving pictures are taken.

From a box an operator took pictures of an act given by "Earle's Six Diving Beauties." The pictures were shown at a later performance.

PLAN TO LICENSE BUFFALO PICTURE OPERATORS.

A plan to license moving picture show operators in Buffalo and appoint a board of three to pass on their qualifications was proposed at a recent aldermanic meeting in that city. A fee of $5 a year for each operator is also proposed. The ordinance provides that the operator must be 21 years old and have had an experience of six months. Among those who opposed the plan was Eugene L. Falk, Frederick Ullman, Frank Minor, J. F. Miller, Jacob Rosen, Charles H. Kertz, Charles Riehl, Joseph Welte and Charles C. Page. Several union operators were in favor of the ordinance.

BUFFALO BRIEFS.

Moving pictures intended to promote safety for persons crossing crowded streets were recently shown at the Rochester, N. Y., Chamber of Commerce.

A. B. Hilkert, of Geneva, N. Y., has leased the Sampson theater at Penn Yan, N. Y., and appointed L. E. Barger manager.

The New Colonial Theater Co., which conducts amusement enterprises, has been formed in Elmira, N. Y.

In Utica, N. Y., recently the Rev. John Lowe Forte said the money spent on moving pictures in the United States in 1913 was twenty-five times the amount given in this country for foreign missions.

District Attorney Culkin, of Oswego, N. Y., has ordered the arrest of any proprietor who would open his moving picture theater in that city on Sunday.

HAWAII NEWS ITEMS.

By Midwest Special Service.

THE local film, "Honolulu in Midwinter," made for Sam Blair of the Popular theater in Honolulu, did not turn out well, and the pictures were not shown because of the lack of clearness.

A. K. Nawhai, proprietor of the Waikea moving picture theater at Hilo, mourns the death of his wife, who died in giving birth to a baby son.

Sam Blair's Popular theater in Honolulu has added a Cabaret De Luxe to its moving picture program.

Edward C. Hayman, prominent because of his connection with the Kedzie and Kedzie Annex theaters on West Madison street in Chicago, and F. B. Malcolm, personal representative of Martin Beck, were recent visitors in Honolulu. Hayman has disposed of his Chicago interests and gave out a statement that Honolulu would have some good vaudeville and pictures, possibly becoming a part of the Beck circuit. Tentative plans called for two shows a night, with four acts and two reels of pictures at not more than fifty cents admission. The name of Sam Blair, proprietor of the Popular in Honolulu, was connected with the projects.

INDIANA SENATE COMMITTEE FAVORS SUNDAY OPENING

Senate Bill Legalizes Only Picture Shows—Lower House, Too, Has Bill.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

THE senate committee on public morals made a favorable report on the bill introduced by Senator Zearing, of Indianapolis, for legalizing moving picture shows on Sunday, and the report was concurred in. The bill is a modification of the one he introduced two years ago, and which would have legalized all kinds of theatrical performances on Sunday. The present bill applies only to moving picture shows and musical concerts.

Representative Friend has introduced a bill in the Indiana Legislature legalizing the operation of theaters on Sunday and providing for payment by each theatrical house so operating of ten per cent. of the gross receipts into the county road fund to be used for gravel road improvements.

POSTPONE JUDKINS BILL.

The Judkins bill, creating a state board of moving picture censors, which the picture exhibitors are opposed to and which was brought up in the Indiana Legislature, has been indefinitely postponed by that body, which means practically that it has been "killed."

INDIANA BRIEFS.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Tate have opened their new moving picture theater in North Vernon. Fred Haney has been secured as pianist and Oliver Simmonds will run the machine. Vernal Tate, son of the proprietors, will sing at every performance and Curtis Crimm, of Detroit, Mich., will dance and do other vaudeville stunts at special performances, which will be given once or twice a week. At the opening exhibition the lady patrons were presented with flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Tate formerly owned and conducted the Starr theater at Anderson.

With the idea of having all the unemployed in the city, as well as the poor, and those who seldom witness a show, forget their misfortune for the time being, David Maurice, manager of the Family theater, Lafayette, has had printed several thousand complimentary tickets, which will be distributed by the police and the charity organization of that city.

Returning home from a farewell lodge banquet given in his honor, Edward J. Addy, Indianapolis, was stricken with acute indigestion and died within a few hours. He had just sold a moving picture house he operated at Udell and Clifton streets and was preparing to removed to Kentucky.

HARVARD MAN WINS EDISON SCENARIO PRIZE

William Marsten's Picture Story of Undergraduate Life Wins First Prize in Edison Contest.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WILLIAM MOULTON MARSTON, a Harvard College senior, living in Saugus, Mass., has been awarded the first prize in a scenario contest of the Edison Motion Picture Company. The winning play is entitled "Jack Kennard, Coward," and depicts Harvard life, Harvard athletics and Harvard gambling. It is claimed that when this photoplay is released that it will give the famous Cambridge educational institution the largest amount of gossip matter that it has had for many years.

The author has worked his way through college by selling scenarios. He claims that the prize play deals directly with the adventures of star football players who are now in college. He also declares that the play has been written so that the students of the institution will recognize the men at whom the thrusts are directed.

ESLOW'S FRIENDS MAKE HIM A PRESENT.

Manager J. A. Eslow, of the New England Universal Film Exchange, was pleasantly surprised by a number of exhibitors at the weekly runoff, last week, when he was presented with an imported deerskin traveling bag in anticipation of his trip to Universal City. Mr. Eslow was seated in his office when a few of the exhibitors, who were in on the surprise, entered, ostensibly to complain of their service. While he was attempting to right matters Samuel Mosco, of the Eastern Theaters Company, entered and made the presentation speech. Mr. Eslow was so overcome that he was barely able to respond.

JOHN FORTIER HAS COOL HEAD.

Pianist Keeps Playing While Audience Files Out from Fire—Praised as Hero.

A PRACTICAL demonstration of how easily a burning moving picture theater can be emptied without loss of life when the management remains calm and collected was given at Quincy on Washington's Birthday, when fire was discovered on the floor underneath the Music Hall on Hancock Street, Quincy, Mass.

Smoke was pouring through the theater floor when Manager Bert Ashley appeared on the stage and asked an audience of 700 persons, most of whom were children, to leave the building to the tune of "Tipperary," which was played by Pianist John Fortier, who remained at his post until the hall was emptied and he was almost overcome by the dense volumes of smoke which were pouring around him.

Not one person in that audience was injured in the least. Mayor Chester I. Campbell of the city and Building Commissioner Patrick J. O'Hearn of Boston have stated that it was one of the most remarkable demonstrations of cool headedness that they had ever heard of.

BRIEF BOSTON NOTES.

General Manager John M. Carney of the Goldstein Bros. Amusement enterprises announces that on March 15th the foundation for the new Plaza theater, seating 1,000 persons, will be dug at Hampton Beach, N. H.

A rumor has been in circulation for the past week that Manager J. A. Eslow of the New England Universal Film Service is negotiating for the purchase of the property extending from Nos. 194 to 206 Pleasant Street, Boston. It is claimed that he will erect a new building of three stories on this site. This building will be used as a film exchange to include one entire floor of vaults and another entire floor for a theater to seat 600 persons.

Stanley Sumner, of the Eastern Theaters Company, reports that Salem is the hive of industry. He further states that as a consequence of this rebuilding of burned city the theatrical business, and business at the Plaza theater, of which he is the manager, is wonderfully good.

Manager Shea, of the Opera House at Turner's Falls, Mass., has made arrangements with Manager Edward J. Farrell, of the General Film Company, for the use of General Service.

MAINE EXCHANGES DENY BOOKING OBJECTIONABLE FILM

Universal and General Film Representatives Claim Aroostook Complaints Do Not Touch Them.

THE Bangor moving picture exchanges have been receiving letters during the week from an Aroostook county editor and club women regarding the quality of pictures shown in Caribou and other Aroostook county towns. The Bangor exchanges have promptly stated their side of the question.

Manager Charles M. Stern, of the New England Universal Film Exchange, and A. L. Ehrgott, of the General Film Company, both deny that any of the films supplied by their exchanges are the least bit objectionable. Mr. Stern said every picture released by the Universal Company is passed by the National Board of Censorship, and nothing is released that is objectionable.

Mr. Ehrgott said that at the time the complaint was made the General Film Company was not furnishing any reels in that town. He added that the Bangor branch has never had a complaint from any exhibitor in this section that General Film pictures did not meet with the approval of the most critical.

OTHER MAINE NOTES.

Manager Guy M. Farmer, of the Palace theater, of Bangor, who took on the Pathe Exchange service for a shore time, has again returned to Universal service.

Complaints were made to Mayor Utterback, of Bangor, by a Bangor woman recently that "The Beautiful Unknown," a three-reel feature shown at one of the Bangor theaters, was immodest, and asked him to have it removed from exhibition. Mayor Utterback sent Deputy Police Chief Mackie to the theater and he viewed the film, enjoyed it and said that there was nothing the matter with it as far as he could see.

Rev. A. Ross, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Ellsworth, is arranging with Manager Charles M. Stern, of the New England Universal Film Exchange, for the installation of a moving picture service at his church on Sunday evenings.

F. N. Sawyer has opened a show at Bryant's Hall, McKinley, Maine, and will use Universal service one night a week.

Paul Demmons, of Machias, was in Bangor during the week and states that he has opened up again in the town hall after having been closed for some time, and runs every Saturday night, Universal service.

Mrs. I. W. Pettengill was a visitor to Bangor during the present week and booked some big Universal features.

John Goodwin, general manager of the Acme Amusement Company, with theaters at Hallowell, Winthrop, Kennebunk, Vinal Haven and Gardiner, is the biggest moving picture man in the State of Maine in more than one sense of the word. Mr. Goodwin is of the President Taft type of man and is not worried over the fact that he is still gaining weight. Mr. Goodwin has friends in the moving picture business all over the state. He makes them easily and keeps them. He reports that his theaters are doing profitable business.

Mrs. G. W. Brown, proprietor of the New Pastime theater, at Wiscasset, which has been closed for the winter, has just reopened, running three nights a week, with Universal service.

The new Lewiston theater, at Lewiston, Maine, has started in Pathe Exchange service.

John McKinnon, son of Pope D. McKinnon, owner of the Palace theater at Bangor, was hurt in a street car accident this week and had his right arm amputated. Mr. McKinnon himself is confined to the hospital with illness and is receiving the sympathy of friends.

Lewiston is the only city in the state where Sunday moving pictures are being shown. European war pictures with descriptive talk were shown at the Empire theater in Lewiston last Sunday, 50 per cent. of the proceeds going to the Belgian Red Cross.

O. B. FERNANDEZ.

Among the most successful moving picture men in the state of Maine is O. B. Fernandez, of Old Town, manager of the New Central theater, and who is to become manager of another Old Town theater, that in Masonic Temple, to be completed some time during the coming summer.

O. B. Fernandez.

Mr. Fernandez came to Old Town twenty years ago and engaged in the printing and bill posting business, and is still in that line. He has also been prominently identified with local politics. He is popular among all classes of Old Town people, and it was only natural when he assumed the management of the New Central theater that he would make a success in that venture. Since taking it over he made many improvements and increased the attendance materially.

The new theater in the Masonic Temple will be constructed of stone and brick, the theater occupying the two lower floors, and will seat about 800. The estimated cost of the building is about $60,000. Mr. Fernandez is a patron of General Film service and will probably use that service in the new theater.

THE MASTER MUMMER (An adaptation of the novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim—Special—Three Parts—Mar. 15).—At the court of Waldenburg appears Feurgeres, an actor in "The Master Mummer," who gives a performance of Hamlet. He meets the Princess Isobel, a young widow with a small daughter, and falls deeply in love with her. His love is returned and they marry, the Princess abrogating her rights to the throne. Their married happiness is short lived, as after a few months the Princess dies, leaving Feurgeres desolate with the young child. It develops that, by the ancient law of Waldenburg, this child still retains her rights of succession to the throne, and as the Duchess of Britslau has a daughter of her own, who would otherwise succeed, she plots to have the young Isobel removed to a convent and lost to the world. This she does under the plea to Feurgeres that the child must be taken to court for her education.

When the child has grown to young womanhood, however, the Archduchess is fearful of discovery and engages the services of a notorious character, Major Delahaye, to take Isobel away from the convent and place her in domestic service, or otherwise dispose of her. Feurgeres, however, has kept track of her, through the years, and frustrates the plot by disguising himself and shooting Delahaye in a London restaurant, using a silencer so that his deed is not discovered. He does not dare to take Isobel himself and manages so that she is thrown on the kindness of three young men occupying a studio together in Trilby fashion. They, with their big-hearted housekeeper, give the girl every comfort. Each in turn falls in love with her, but knowing her helpless position refrains from declaring himself. Attempts, ranging from trickery to violence, are made by the scheming Duchess to get her away, but each fails until finally she is tricked by a false note and spirited away. Pursuit follows immediately, Feurgeres being in the party. Isobel is rescued, but Feurgeres is mortally wounded in the fight. On his deathbed, he writes the old King of Waldenburg, apprising him of the fact that his granddaughter is living and of the schemes against her. The conspirators are punished and Isobel restored to her proper place in court—but not for long. The leader of the studio trio, Greatson, an author, has captured her affections, so she gives up the throne, as her mother did, and returns to him in London.

HER COUNTRY COUSIN (March 16).—Waddy Wise's wife has been living with him in their fine urban home for some time, but for some reason or other, she had not imbibed the "civilized" atmosphere and was still the awkward, gasping rustic she was when Waddy rescued her from an almost certain social death in the little country place, called Tanktown. It was one of those delightfully quiet places, where grandfathers rock their great-grandfathers to sleep every night, the sidewalks are hauled in at eight o'clock each evening and the beautiful Jersey cow comes up to the back door each morning, knocks, and holds its hand out for its breakfast. The geese hold converse with the farmer and the horses feed the chickens. In short, it was one big family, and Mrs. Wise was a member of that family. Her cousin, Artie, one of those over bright and intelligent products of the farm who sleep on their face all night and in the morning wonder how they got wrinkled overnight, writes her a letter, a precursor of his visit to the city. He says "a feller can't lead no fast life way up here anyway, cuz there's a cop on duty all the time."

When he lands in the city, Mrs. Wise tells him to imitate her husband so that Artie will make no breaks, which might betray him. Consequently, whatever Waddy does, Artie follows suit. Waddy is enraged, and wonders whether he is sober or Artie foolish. Artie follows him all over the house, doing exactly as he does. The situations are extremely ludicrous. Waddy is somewhat of an exercise enthusiast and his home contains a fully equipped gymnasium. Both men enter and the contortions that Artie goes through are very amusing. Waddy, by this time, is thoroughly disgusted with the visitor. He decides to put on the boxing-gloves with Artie, and after the bout has progressed a bit, sends across a dream producer. They start and hardly has the match started, when Artie lands a full swing on Waddy's jaw. Waddy is knocked out of the room. When he sees what he has done, Artie punches himself, and he is also knocked from the room. They both roll downstairs together. After that, Waddy respects the farmer and tells his wife he is the best pal he ever had.

SEEN THROUGH THE MAKEUP (March 17).—Jane is a young and fastcinating widow whose face is her fortune. It's some months since she has had a soul-mate and it is with a half-lonesome and half-forlorn look that she notices a unique advertisement in a newspaper asking for a very homely widow. The advertisement is signed by Jay Brown, a wealthy widower. She immediately answers it with the information that she is often mistaken for an escaped circus exhibit because of the unattractive contour of her face. Brown falls and hastens to her home, where he is ushered into Jane's presence. She has had an actor paint her face and otherwise disguise her so that she looks like a cross between the missing link and a lachrymose billiken. Jay asks her whether she can cook, and she tells him her name was Cook before she was married. That settles it. He leaves to get an engagement ring. While he is gone, Jane is sorry that she cannot be both pretty and rich, and decides to approach Brown as a beauty, first devising an idea whereby the path will be made clear. She places her photograph in view on the table, and sure enough, Jay sees it and is anxious to see the person it represents. At the proper moment, Jane walks through the room dressed elaborately. She gives him an encouraging smile and he kisses her. She flees to leave him alone adoring the photograph. Hastily donning her wig and painting her face again, she returns and chides him for kissing her "sister."

Jay is all apologies and is about to give her the ring when Jane takes off her wig. He is charmed, to say the least, and a minister is sent for. Instead, an undertaken comes in with some embalming fluid. The actor and the maid in Jane's house also become attached to each other, making another romance in the house.

THE ANIMATED GROUCH CHASER (On same reel as foregoing—March 17).—Dyspeptic Daniel is seated in a restaurant where he proceeds to make it uncomfortable and disagreeable for the rest of the diners. Magazines and papers which are handed him as temper emollients, are thrown aside by the irascible Daniel. Finally a copy of "The Animated Grouch Chaser" is placed before him. One glance at the cover serves to supplant clouds with sunshine and Daniel begins to delve into the book.

The first cartoon series which meets his gaze is "Jones' Hair Tonic will Grow Hair Instantaneously." We are at once made acquainted with a congenial bald-headed man, who, in his youth, had never been warned against patent-medicines, hair restorers, and bust reducers, and our new friend rubs his shining pate generously with the restorer. The result is prodigious. Hair immediately crops out, and following a second application, the hair grows out and down over the victim's face. He resembles the wild man from Borneo under a circus tent when his wife sees him. She shears the hair off with difficulty.

By this time Dyspeptic Daniel is convulsed with laughter. He turns a page and finds another series, "A Duckling's Repast." A curious duckling, knowing that it was a cat and not a duckling that was at one time killed by curiosity, swims around a cake of soap which has been left on a stone in the lake. Little Ducky eats the concentrated bubbles and the agony she goes through is cleverly depicted on the screen. Finally, the duckling starts to blow out soap bubbles. Mother Duck is alarmed and to prevent her charge from getting into more trouble, makes a meal of her. Of course, this is only a cartoon and the little duckling will be regenerated soon and entertain us some more. At the conclusion, Dyspeptic Daniel is so elated that he eats everything in sight.

IN THE SHADOW OF DEATH (Adapted from "Fate and Pomegranate" by Mary Imlay Taylor Special—Two Parts—March 19).—In answer to a query by a priest who is browsing about his curiosity shop, Monsieur Felix explains that the large clock in his place is not for sale, but that he will give its history. Thereupon, he launches upon his story, the scene of which is in the home of the beautiful Lizette, in Paris. Lizette is alone with her grandfather, who gives her a handsome brooch set with pearls for her birthday. Louis Spencer, a young Englishman, in love with Lizette, comes to the house, and is persuaded by her to ask her grandfather, who is her guardian, for Lizette's hand in marriage. When the grandfather learns that Louis' income is small, he refuses and a sharp verbal battle ensues. The housekeeper, eavesdropping, hears the argument.

Jacques, the Rat, enters the house soon after, and after a scuffle with Lizette's grandfather, kills him and steals, among other things, a pearl which had dropped from the brooch. Louis had, the same day, taken the brooch to Monsieur Felix to have the catch repaired. Louis, Lizette and the housekeeper rush into the room at the sound of the scuffle, the housekeeper arriving upon the scene just in time to see Louis hold up the bloody knife with which the old man has been murdered. When the gendarmes arrive, summoned at her call, she accuses Louis of murdering her master, and after Louis has been taken away, tells the officers that the brooch has been stolen, ignorant herself of the fact that her employer had given the brooch to Lizette the night before.

The following day Lizette goes to Felix's to get the brooch. She hides and when Felix closes up the place, she breaks a case and withdraws the brooch, intending to keep it, as Felix would tell the police that her sweetheart left it there, and he would be branded as the thief and murderer. Felix is aroused by the sound of the case breaking, and comes downstairs. He sees nothing out of the ordinary, as Lizette had taken refuge in the large clock. The next morning gendarmes come to see whether the brooch has been left there, and they find Lizette in the clock. She is arrested for theft and she and Louis are convicted of their respective crimes in the police court. Jacques goes to Felix's to get his watch repaired and leaves a small chamois case, containing a pearl, in the place by mistake. Felix recognizes it as one missing from the brooch. Jacques is traced to his abode, where he is found dead, having committed suicide. Louis and Lizette are released. The picture fades into the men in Felix's shop, showing him completing the story.

FOR THE MAN SHE LOVED (March 20).—Although she loved him with an undying, intrinsic love, Emma Gray, a bookkeeper, would not evince her feeling toward Joseph Ridpath, her employer, a clean, prepossessing young man, who was paying assiduous attention to her despite her comparative frigidity and indifference. She accepts his tokens of regard and respect, as if they were given to her by a lukewarm acquaintance. She maintains this attitude toward him because she fears she will be thought a fortune hunter.

Mr. Ridpath has been expecting a large remittance from Joseph Thompson, a business man, who is usually dilatory in his payments. Emma looks over each mail carefully, but a letter from the debtor is not forthcoming. Mr. Ridpath decides to see Mr. Thompson and collect the money in person if he can. Before he goes, he calls Emma's attention to the new fire alarm which has been installed in the office. While he is gone, Jim Furston, the foreman, asks Emma out to dinner, and when she refuses him, he forgets himself with the result that she rebukes him and strikes him in the face. He swears revenge. Mr. Thompson subsequently calls at the Ridpath office and pays the money to Emma, who gives him a receipt. She hurries to bank but is too late, and returning to the office, puts it into the safe. She turns away to get something and Furston slips in and hides behind the safe. The door is open and he sees his chance. Emma, in trying to reach some files on a high shelf in the next room, pulls several down upon her head and she is rendered unconscious. Furston goes out, leaving the safe door open, intending to return later with a disguise and a satchel. The night watchman, in making his rounds, finds the safe open and calls Mr. Ridpath's house on the telephone. As the watchman is about to leave Furston enters and there is a hand to hand struggle. Furston overcomes the watchman, and as he is about to make his get away, Emma enters from the next room with a revolver she has taken from her employer's desk. Furston seizes her hand and the shot goes wild, breaking the glass in the fire alarm. The two are struggling when Ridpath rushes in, and after a fierce hand to hand struggle, Furston is overpowered.

In the meantime the fire department has been aroused by the alarm in the office and the firemen pour into the office looking for the fire. Emma is forced to show her hand and the barrier of indifference which has been separating them is broken.

BIOGRAPH.

THE BEAUTIFUL LADY (March 8).—She was Mrs. De Puyster, wife of a wealthy young business man; but to Pedro she was always "the beautiful lady." She first noticed him when he saved her friend's child from drowning. The young pottery painter had fine eyes and such an air. His admiration amused her. She did not know that Maddalena, who loved Pedro, was eating out her heart. Then one evening the De Puyster car was held up by robbers, and it was Pedro who came to the rescue. He had overheard his stepfather plotting the crime, and had tried to stop him. All this he told in gasps before he drew out the beautiful lady's handkerchief and kissed it for the last time. For the bullet from his stepfather's pistol had entered Pedro's breast. He had given his life for the beautiful lady.

HIS OWN REWARD (March 11).—The boob, a picture patron, arrives at the theater before it is opened. Informed that the show will start in thirty minutes, he sits down near by and falls asleep. In his dreams he is the hero of an adventure which is a jumble of all the exciting pictures he has ever seen. He rescues a beautiful girl from the bandits and is himself captured. Just as the desperados are about to hurl him over a cliff, he awakes to find the showman and a policeman shaking him vigorously.

MUD AND MATRIMONY (March 11).—The wedding is to be a quiet affair—just the bride and groom with one attendant for each, and no guests. They start out in an automobile and find the roads in very bad condition owing to recent heavy rains. The skidding car knocks down a cyclist, who in his turn has run over two pedestrians. The crowd gives chase. At first the car outdistances them, but eventually it is stuck in a deep pool of water which has collected at the bottom of a hill, and resists all efforts to extricate it. Men and girls are wringing wet when they reach the parsonage, after getting rid of the crowd, which has caught up with them again.

WHERE ENMITY DIES (March 12).—On the desert, where all trails are lost—that is where enmity dies. It was there that Tom King suddenly discovered himself alone with his enemy. Believing the victim of the explosion to be his pal, Bill Thorpe, he had volunteered to take him to the hospital across the desert. Only when the man began to rave did Tom learn that Jess Benson was helpless and in his power. Meanwhile Bill Thorpe and the girl who loved Tom were following in fear.

THE BANDIT AND THE BABY (March 13). Fleeing from the posse, the bandit enters a house where a demented woman is laughing over a dead baby. He recognizes in her the girl who, some years before, spurned him and married his rival, now sheriff of the county. Unable to help her, he rides on and comes upon a scene of desolation. An emigrant family has been attacked by Indians and wiped out. A baby's cry arrests the bandit's attention; and between the pity for the helpless infant and love for the sheriff's wife, he reaches a conclusion. With the baby in his arms, he rides back to the house and effects a substitution which presently restores the woman's reason. He is still there, watching over her, when the posse rides up and the sheriff, entering, covers him with a gun. When the sheriff learns what has kept the bandit from reaching the border and safety, he permits him to go unscathed, happy in the thought that the woman he loves in vain has been spared through his intervention. She will never know that the child she loves so devotedly is not her own, but that of an unknown woman who gave her life for it.

AURORA FLOYD (Special—Two Parts—March 9).—James Conyers, a horse trainer, wins the heart of his employer's impulsive daughter, Aurora, and persuades her to elope with him. All too soon she learns his true nature, and returns to her father. Conyers follows and Matthew Floyd buys his promise to leave the country and never return. John Mellish, a wealthy squire, pays court to Aurora. She loves him but dares not encourage him. Suddenly she learns that her husband is dead in Australia. She marries Mellish, without disclosing the secret of her past. This is her father's advice. Conyers is not dead; he returns from Australia and proceeds to blackmail his wife. First he obtains a post as head of Mellish's stables. Aurora has incurred the enmity of a half-witted stable boy. Conyers sends this lad to the house with a note. Alone in the library, he steals an old muzzle-loading pistol. Aurora, still unnerved by Conyers' sudden reappearance, leaves the note on a table. The housekeeper finds it and takes it to her master. Aurora borrows money from her father and meets Conyers at the trysting place. The half-wit follows her with murder in his heart; but the sight of the money arouses his cupidity and he shoots Conyers instead. Aurora, hearing the shot, returns and finds Conyers dead. Mellish also hears the shot and discovers his wife kneeling beside the murdered man with the pistol in her hand. Nearby is the marriage certificate of James Conyers and Aurora Floyd. Believing Aurora guilty, Mellish is in despair. At the autopsy it is discovered that the bullet which killed Conyers is a button. Mellish rushes to find Aurora and learns that she is gone. Hunting for her, he enters the lodge and discovers the half-wit chuckling over the money and the waistcoat from which the fatal button was torn. The murderer grapples with him and draws a knife. Mellish is rapidly being overpowered by his antagonist when Aurora, who is in the grounds, hears his shouts and arrives in time to stay the murderer's hand. Explanations follow, and the ruin of Aurora's happiness is forever averted.

ESSANAY.

LOVE AND TROUBLE (March 15).—Sweedie holds a clandestine meeting with her beau in the kitchen of her employers, a young married couple. Her love affair influences her cooking and the bread she serves that evening is a little harder than granite. The young husband loses his temper and Sweedie loses her job. A flying bit of paper catches her attention and she picks it up. It is an invitation to a soiree in one of the most exclusive homes in town. Sweedie and her beau borrow her former employers' finery and appear at the reception. A suspicious butler is reassured by their card and they shake hands with the hostess and stop at the punch bowl. The punch has strength and it influences but two social climbers. They jump in a fountain and throw water on each other. The former mistress appears and calls the police. Sweedie and her sweetheart run for it, using bicycles and a rope attached to a speedy automobile. But finally they are caught and lodged in jail.

THE FABLE OF THE GALUMPTIOUS GIRL (March 17).—Madeline lived in an E flat town. It was not dead but sleeping. Every time she sized up the local group of town cut-ups, she put the soubrette's curse on Home Sweet Home. She accepted an invitation to visit her city cousin and she didn't break up and cry when she left home. Her city cousin feared that the country cousin would be a kill-joy, but she discovered that Madeline was simply aching for excitement. She sent home for money every twenty minutes. The tango instructor said she was a bird. At a farewell party she made her city friends promise to come into the wilderness and give the village rummies a taste of high life. When the swells arrived there was much excitement. They put on a regular tango party at the town hall. It was some party. The refreshments included a large punch bowl. Enough said. Along about midnight the colored lemonade began to work. The members of the married woman's league held an indignation meeting. Madeline had to get her trained troupe out of town. She was disgraced forever. She has to live in the city as the wife of a dissolute millionaire.

THE WESTERN WAY (March 20).—The highwayman, watching through the window of the ramshackle express office, sees the messenger pass a large sum of money under the charge of the agent. A few minute later the messenger, an old man, is held up and robbed by the highwayman. His pursuing shots attract the attention of the sheriff and he starts in pursuit. The highwayman is wounded and drags himself to the barn of a rancher. The rancher saves him from his pursuers and earns his gratitude. A few days later the rancher learns that the police are on his trail for a crime he had committeed years before. He confides his troubles to the highwayman, and in his gratitude the highwayman takes his place and saves the wife and child of his benefactor from the disgrace of being the family of a criminal.

friends of her father. George Vandeveer, the son, falls in love with the dainty maid. They become engaged. Norman McPherson, a poet, is invited as guest of honor to a lawn party given by the Vandeveers. George introduces his friend to his fiancee and Meta feels the age-old song in her heart. Meta dances for the guests as a wood nymph. McPherson thrills to the rhythm of her dancing and knows that he loves her, but learns that she is engaged to Vandeveer. The three stroll down one of the garden walks. McPherson returns to the house for something he has forgotten, and while he is away Meta is attacked by a madman. George is overcome with fear and stands shaking. McPherson writes a novel in which he reveals his love for Meta. George finds the manuscript in the office of a stenographer and bribes her to destroy it. She consents, but does not keep her bargain. She sends McPherson the typed story and puts the original in her trunk. George steals the typed copy while McPherson is assisting an old woman who has fallen. She is the typist's mother. When Norman learns that his novel is lost, he is stricken with nervous prostration. The girl confesses to Meta and they confront George with his villainy. Meta and Norman then declare their love.

WHEN THE FATES SPIN (March 16).—Jim, in love with Marcia, sadly tells old Mr. Long that his granddaughter is going to marry another man. The old man, looking into the flames of the open fireplace, tells him to cheer up and that the fates will pick his mate for him. By way of illustration he tells his romance. He was a young Southerner almost affianced to Eleanor, a girl whom he had known all his life. Their marriage was almost inevitable But Pauline Marston, a northern girl, came on a visit and Long read his fate in her eyes. Financial reverses came upon him and he went north to work in an office. One day he learned that his employer's daughter was the girl of his dreams. They were married. As the old man completes his story, the granddaughter comes and tells her lover that she loves him.

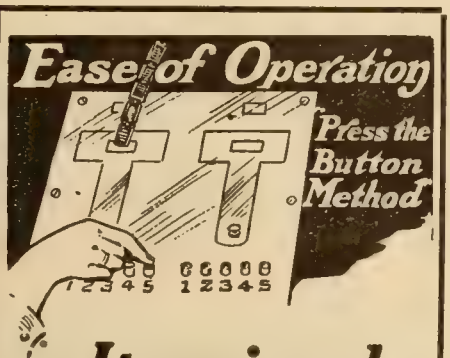
THE JARR FAMILY SERIES (No. 2—Mr. Jarr Brings Home a Turkey—Mar. 15).—Although hardly settled in Harlem, nor thoroughly conversant with the joys of living there, Mrs. Jarr sets the whole Jarr Family agog by starting house-cleaning. This is not a pleasant occupation, nor conducive to quiet and peace, as every one knows, but the Jarrs seem to be particularly unfortunate in having things go wrong. Mr. Jarr, pushing the grand piano around, slips on the newly-scrubbed floor and nearly breaks his neck, but as if their troubles were not enough, Mrs. Jarr's mother visits them from Brooklyn, to help them "get nicely settled!" She gets them nicely settled, with a vengeance! Mother-in-law is a brisk, vixenish woman. Trouble starts, and after a free-for-all wordy war, Jarr slams on his hat and goes out, while Mrs. Jarr weeps and mother comforts her by calling Mr. Jarr a wretch and a brute. Finding people in neighboring apartments enjoying the jars with the aid of opera glasses, she hangs up some of Mr. Jarr's nether garments to curtain the windows. Meanwhile, Jarr is inveigled by Rangle and some of his friends into participating in a turkey raffle at Gus's place on the corner. He wins the turkey, and Gus, greatly chagrined, plays a low-down trick on Jarr by substituting a "dummy" turkey in place of the real bird. Returning, as he thinks, with the prize, Jarr finds his militant mother-in-law has nailed up the front door, so he climbs the fire-escape. On the way he creates havoc among the scattered debris, is shot at for a burglar and has a general hard time getting into his domicile. Proudly exhibiting his "prize" as a peace-offering, Jarr is totally crushed when mother-in-law discloses the "mock turk," but Mrs. Jarr's sympathies are aroused, and her exhibition of tenderness so enrages mother that she packs up and goes home that evening.

FROM HEADQUARTERS (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Mar. 16).—Rose Peters, the daughter of a detective who believes there is no such thing as an excuse for crime, falls in love with her employer, William Brown. He devotes himself to her exclusively, despite the anger of her father. Matters change when Belle Waring is engaged to fill a position in his employ. Brown turns to the new beauty, ignoring the pleadings of his former charmer, who is becoming an object of derision to her fellow-workers. Things come to a crisis when Rose enters the private office unexpectedly and finds Belle Waring in Brown's embrace. A stormy scene follows. Rose, in a frenzy, impulsively grabs a paper-knife and stabs her employer. Thinking him dead, she makes her escape from the office, but is seen by Edward Temple, a client. Rose arrives home just as her father receives detailed information from the Police Sergeant in his district of the Brown assault case. Rose begs her father not to take up the case, pleading for the unknown girl who was so cruelly wronged. In her excitement, Rose goes through the motions enacted when she stabbed Brown. Her father's suspicions are aroused, and when he goes to Brown's office as an officer of the law, he becomes convinced that his own daughter committed the crime. He is about to do his duty and arrest her when word reaches him from headquarters to drop the case. Brown, repentent and finding his wound is not fatal, has halted further investigation. He sends for Peters, confesses all, and the father returns home to his daughter with a glad heart. Brown's old love for Rose returns and he makes her his wife.

POSTPONED (Mar. 17).—Although a little fellow, Jimmie is a professional "strong-arm" and in love with Lillian, whom he persuades to elope when her parents' objections prove insurmountable, although he has not been able to secure a theatrical engagement for over six months. On his assurance that he expects an engagement any minute, she consents and they get away to the minister's. That reverend gentleman, however, demands his fee in advance, so Jimmie hurries back to his room to borrow the necessary five-spot from his pal, Jack, who says he is broke, but hands Jimmy a telegram advising him of a high-salaried engagement awaiting him in Chicago. Asking Jack to explain to Lillian, he catches the next train for the West. Jack is not over-tactful in excusing his friend, so Lillian in a huff determines to marry Peter Hedge, a millionaire of seventy, whose matrimonial ad she had seen in the newspaper. A week later, Jimmie returns from Chicago with a fat bankroll and is horrified to learn of Lillian's plans. He is desperate until Jack comes to his assistance and helps him make up as a decrepit old man. Jack introduces himself to Lillian as the millionaire, when in strides a big six-footer who announces he is the millionaire from the West. She had imagined him to be an old fellow with one foot in the grave and nearly faints from surprise. When Jimmie speaks up to the big man, he lets loose. Jimmie and Lillian have to flee for their lives, and after a hair-raising chase, arrive at the home of the Justice of the Peace, where Angelica, the Judge's maiden-lady sister, recognizes in Hedge her sweetheart of years ago. A general "making-up" follows and the Justice earns a double marriage fee.

THE BATTLE OF FRENCHMAN'S RUN (Mar. 18).—After making a fortune in lumber, Brady determines to give his wife and daughter, Bella, a trip to New York. John, a friend of Brady's, in love with Bella, works in the woods with a broadaxe, with which he is an expert. While the girl in reality loves big, honest John, she teases him to the point of distraction, and finally tells him she will marry him only when he has shown his heroism in something. John is all broken up when Bella and her parents leave for the city, especially when she writes to him of Count Martini, a dapper little Frenchman, and describes how delightfully he kisses her hand. This stirs John to action, and hastily packing up, he starts for the city, determined to "wring that d—— Frenchman's neck!" When he finds the Count proposing to Bella, what he doesn't do to the Count's nose isn't worth doing. The Count challenges John to a duel, and when tried out by one of the young men he chooses as a second, John is advised to skip, as the Count being a crack swordsman as well as pistol shot will surely kill him. In despair, the young woodsman is about to take the advice, when he happens to think of a clever idea. He hurries back to his friend and announces he is going to fight just the same. On arrival at the duelling grounds, all are appalled to discover that as John has the choice of weapons, he intends to fight with American broadaxes! Protests are useless and the Count is made to stand up with an axe, almost too heavy for him to lift. When John makes a rush for him, the Frenchman's nerve deserts him and he runs like a deer. Bella sees them racing past her, the Count's breath coming in sobbing gasps, and she stops John, begging him to tell her what it all means. Just then he would rather keep on after the Frenchman, but she throws her arms about him and asks him to take her back to the Northwest with him.

THE CAPITULATION OF THE MAJOR (Mar. 19).—A gouty and retired military officer, Major Andrews, governs his household with strict military discipline and, being a widower, feels double responsibility for his vivacious daughter, Lillian. Every morning before breakfast he has the butler blow Reveille on the bugle, while the gardener fires a small cannon and hoists the American flag on the lawn. The Major has a strong aversion to young men. Jack is deeply in love with Lillian and she with him, but the Major has little use for him. The Major "entertains" the young man by explaining very earnestly to him by means of a large map the progress of the war in Europe. Finally, poor Jack



Itemized Total

At the end of each day the Theatre using an AUTOMATIC Ticket Selling Machine can obtain in a second, by unlocking the register of each ticket, the itemized total of tickets sold and amount of cash received.

All guess-work is avoided when you use the AUTOMATIC and a complete record of the various priced tickets can be had at any time by unlocking the register device of each ticket. It tells without inquiring of the cashier the exact amount in cash drawer and number of tickets sold at each price.

No confusion or counting errors, and a complete total, itemized, at the end of business without an elaborate bookkeeping system.

The AUTOMATIC is the only machine on the market that offers a separate register with each priced ticket.

Why not find out more about this leading Ticket Selling Machine of the World? Our booklet explains. Write for it. You will know all about "Selling Tickets by Electricity."

manages to escape and join Lillian, while the old fellow is hunting his misplaced glasses. They start to play golf, but when the Major discovers their absence, he starts out after them, wild with rage, and commands Lillian to march herself into the house. She is inclined to mutiny, but habit proves too strong, and saluting, military fashion, she ruefully obeys, while Jack makes himself scarce. He holds a small court-martial and announces that Lillian must never speak to Jack again without permission. She tries tears and temper to move the old fellow, but without avail. Suddenly, she thinks of his great fondness for smoking and a long, cool drink. The "medical corps" is pressed into service and unduly influenced by Lillian, the doctor tells the Major he is in very bad condition and must stop both habits. This method proves very effective, and when his rations go down to crackers and milk he soon cries "Nuff." Lillian and Jack remember his command and do not speak to each other, but when they bring in cigars and liquors the Major, although he blusters some at first, surrenders, giving Jack and Lillian his blessing. He then sits down to his war map and enjoys his first mint julep and cigar for many days, while Jack collects the "war indemnity" by stealing a kiss from Lillian.

THE MILLIONAIRE'S HUNDRED DOLLAR BILL (Special—Two parts—March 20).—To back up his contention that human nature in general is selfish and dishonest, Ralph Brewster, a millionaire clubman, cynically wagers a dinner with John Preston, the District Attorney and a fellow member, that he can prove it. Brewster encloses a $100 bill in an envelope with the inscription, "Will finder please put this bill to some good use." He and Preston then go to a public park where they drop the envelope on the ground. Strolling through the park and pondering upon the bitter fact that her father is unable to afford a new gown for her coming week-end visit, Helen Wynfort finds the envelope. Upon discovering its contents, she is delighted and hastens at once to the modiste's where she orders a new dress. Brewster and Preston, hidden nearby, follow her, and, with a sardonic laugh, the millionaire tells his friend, "You owe me a dinner!" During Helen's stay at the modiste's, Milly, a shop assistant faints, and on learning that hunger is the cause of the trouble, Helen takes the girl into a nearby tea room and orders a repast. She gives Milly a two-dollar bill. Brewster and Preston, happening into the tea room, see the incident and think it is the 100-dollar bill. Ralph pleasantly surprised, agrees that the District Attorney has won the bet. Afterwards, Helen feels she has been selfish with Milly, so early in the morning she goes to the girl's tenement home, just in time to proffer the big bill to the landlord and prevent eviction. The family's gratitude is almost overwhelming, but Helen leaves as soon as possible and rescinds the order for the gown. She attends the week-end party in her everyday clothes, and there meets Brewster. They are mutually attracted, and Helen tells him the story of the $100 bill, confessing that she did not at first give the $100 bill to Milly. Appreciating her splendid character, the millionaire proposes, and, upon her acceptance, he begs that she be married in the $100 gown she had unselfishly denied herself. She cannot deny his request.

A TITLED TRIO (March 25).—Wilful Nettie is bound to marry a count and, accordingly, turns up her nose at her mother's choice, Handsome Harry, and also snubs her father's entry, Educated Ed. But pater and mater were born before Nettie and they, of course, know a thing or two. Unknown to each other they proceed to carry out a well-conceived plan. Pa advises Ed to "become" a count and thus win the would-be countess; Ma convinces Harry that to wed Nettie he must first get countship. The boys like the idea and, separately, go their way to transformation and success. Nettie, however, is a chip of the old block, and she has some ideas of her own. She promptly gets in touch with the Royal Matrimonial Bureau and is promised the count she yearns for.

"Count" Ed is first to call on Nettie, who, believing him to be a real count, makes a dainty fuss over him. "Count" Harry comes next, and Ed is unceremoniously shelved. Harry's fervent wooing does not carry Nettie by storm, and when Count de Blink (of the matrimonial bureau) arrives, she eagerly shelves Harry. De Blink's polished manners make a big impression on Nettie, who rejoices over her good fortune. Harry and Ed fight it out in true count fashion and finish by removing each other's disguise. When the fracas is at its height, Pa and Ma take a hand, also the cook and her cop admirer. The earthquake outside of the drawing-room makes Count de Blink yearn for the peaceful interior of his barber shop; but he can't get away from Nettie. She must have her hour of triumph and forthwith announces her marriage to de Blink. The cop exposes the barber and Nettie is still unwed.

UNFAITHFUL TO THE TRUST (A Two-Act Feature of the Alice Joyce Series—March 15).—Unfaithful to his trust, Joynes, cashier of the Baldwin Bank, defrauds the institution of a large sum of money. When the crash comes, Joynes makes it appear that Burbank, the elderly president, had known the condition of affairs. The two men are indicted and placed on trial. Eugenia, Burbank's daughter, is engaged to Floyd, the prosecuting attorney. Although he knows it will cost him his sweetheart, Floyd performs his duty. As the trial progresses, it becomes apparent that Burbank has been used as a tool by the real scoundrel. He is released on suspended sentence, while Joynes receives ten years.

His fortune wiped out in the crash, Burbank and Eugenia leave for the South. They make their home in a lodge at the edge of a forest. His heart torn by the loss of his sweetheart, Floyd seeks forgetfulness in work. This brings about his breakdown. Floyd's physician orders him South for a rest. The doctor gives his patient the address of a hunting lodge. Ignorant of the fact that it is now occupied by Eugenia and her father, Floyd promises to board at that cottage. Eugenia learns of Floyd's coming. The girl contrives to keep the invalid from meeting either her father or herself.

As the days pass, Floyd is mystified at his inability to meet the girl who he knows lives in the same cottage. Later, while out hunting, Eugenia shoots at what she thinks is a deer—and finds that her bullet has hit Floyd. Her frantic cries bring assistance and the unconscious man is carried to the house. It is dircovered that the wound is superficial. When Floyd regains consciousness he finds that the bullet which laid him low, had also levelled the obstacles that prevented his marriage to Eugenia.

HAM AT THE GARBAGE GENTLEMEN'S BALL (March 16).—Poor Bud! in vain he strives to win a smile from Mary, the mascot of the Garbage Gentlemen's Association. Ham is the favored suitor. As mad as a hatter, Bud heaves bricks at the fickle dame and his rival. Mary presents Ham with a ticket for the ball which the Garbage Gentlemen are to give the following night. Bud, however, steals the ticket from the envelope in which Ham has put it, replacing it with a pawn ticket.

On the night of the ball, Bud hastens to the hall and is admitted. When Ham arrives, he presents the pawn ticket—only to be put out on his ear. He tries to sneak in by the back way, but is almost drowned when one of the waiters throws a bucket of dirty water out of the windows. Resorting to strategy, Ham induces the bouncer-in-chief to step outside for a moment. Calling the man's attention to something down the street, Ham hits him behind the ear and knocks the bouncer unconscious. Stealing the man's badge of office, Ham pins it to his own coat and thus gains admission.

The first thing that greets his eyes is the sight of Bud dancing with Mary. The next instant, Bud imagines a ton of bricks has hit hime over the head. In the meantime, the bouncer revives and tears into the hall on vengeance bent. Ham and Bud see him coming. A riot ensues and the two flee for their lives. Every man in the hall takes up the chase. This leads through a brick yard and for a while it rains bricks. Ham and Bud, armed with huge sledge hammers, finally take their places on both sides of a narrow alley formed by rows of bricks. As each of the pursuers passes through the alley, Ham and Bud knock him flat. Mary is the last to emerge. Bud hits her and she falls. Furious, Ham knocks Bud out with his sledge. Then, in his great grief, he brings the sledge down on his own head.

THE TRAP DOOR (Special—Two Parts—No. 8 of "The Girl Detective Series"—March 17).—As Mrs. Churchill, carrying her pet dog, emerges from Marsden's jewelry shop, Fourteen-Carat Tommy steals her handbag. Although the act was seen by Jean and her assistant, Warrington, Mrs. Churchill denies having being robbed. Mystified, the detectives shadow Tommy and Mrs. Churchill. They see Tommy meet the woman and get into her automobile.

Convinced that something is amiss, Jean and Warrington follow. Tommy alights when the auto reaches a house in the suburbs. While Jean endeavors to get into the building, Warrington follows Mrs. Churchill to her home. Tommy becomes aware of Jean's presence. Aided by Jones, a pal, he makes her a prisoner. Warrington enters Mrs. Churchill's home and confronts her. The man discovers that the dainty little coat worn by Mrs.

Churchill's dog, contains a large quantity of stolen jewelry and that the woman is a member of a gang of jewel thieves.

Warrington incautiously steps on a rug in the center of Mrs. Churchill's library. The next instant, the detective tumbles into a cell under the house. To his horror, he discovers that the cell is being flooded. Rats of tremendous size leave their holes to attack him. Warrington becomes crazed with fear.

Mrs. Churchill 'phones Tommy and Jones of how she has trapped the detective. The crooks jeeringly inform Jean of her assistant's fate. In desperation, the Girl Detective snatches a pistol from Jones' pocket and shoots, wounding both men. The shots bring officers to the scene. Jean's story causes them to hasten to Mrs. Churchill's home. The woman is placed under arrest. Warrington is saved just as he is about to die.

THE FIRST COMMANDMENT (Special—Three Parts—March 19).—A giant in the financial world, John Marshall imagines himself all-powerful. Although he contributes towards the church, he refuses to set foot within its doors. Marshall has two children, Walter, dissolute and worthless; Marguerite, sweet and wholesome. The girl realizes that Walter is wrecking his life. She pleads with her father, but the latter is too deeply engrossed in business to pay attention to his son's habits. Marshall remembers his daughter's plea when Walter later asks him for money. He informs the boy that it is up to him to earn his own living for awhile. Walter pours his troubles into the ears of Mazie, a show girl. This gives Mazie an idea. Cleverly worming a proposal out of him, she becomes his wife.

The news of his son's marriage comes as a staggering blow to Marshall. For the first time in his life his plans have met with failure. In anger, he disinherits Walter. As time passes, Marshall determines to have his son divorce Mazie. Poverty, however, has brought out the fine qualities in the woman and she grows to love her husband. In the meantime, Marguerite falls in love with Tom Pierson, son of an independent manufacturer. The financial giant has attempted to crush Pierson upon several occasions.

In his effort to separate Walter and his wife, Marshall concocts a scheme to cast a bad light upon Mazie. Not only does the unscrupulous man's plot fail, but Marguerite is innocently caught in the trap. This crushes Marshall. Taking advantage of his condition, the man's rival, Eddy, plans to ruin him. Only by a supreme effort, does Marshall out-general his foe. The man finds it advisable to conciliate Eddy. The latter consents to join forces with Marshall upon condition that Marguerite be compelled to marry his son, Franklyn, and that Marshall shall ruin Pierson. In the meantime, Walter has reformed and now occupies an important position in the Pierson factory. Walter has become a father.

Marguerite, refusing to marry Franklyn, elopes and becomes Tom's wife. Embittered and feeling as though the world is against him, Marshall forbids her ever to enter his home. Eddy learns of what has occurred. In rage, he demands that Marshall crush Tom's father immediately. His fortune hanging in the balance, Marshall agrees. The surest way to accomplish this would be to destroy the Pierson plant. But the man's attempt to bring this about is frustrated by his son. Sure of himself, Walter strips his father's soul and shows him what his worship of power and money have brought him to. Marshall sees a light. He returns home with Walter.

Although the following Sunday finds the father a ruined man, it also finds him really happy for the first time in years. As he sits beside his children in church, he realizes the significance of the sermon delivered by the preacher, who has taken for his text the First Commandment—"Thou shalt have no other gods before me!"

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS OF '62 (Episode No. 19 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—March 20).—Helen, the telegrapher at Lone Point, and Lockwood, the old one-armed crossing flagman, are great friends. While Helen is conversing with Lockwood, Harcourt, a young soldier approaches. The sight of the uniform causes the old flagman to tell of the manner in which he lost his arm. According to Lockwood, he took part in the Civil War. The general in command of the division of the Federal Army to which Lockwood was attached, decided upon a railroad raiding expedition within the Confederate lines. To Captain Andrews, an intrepid officer, was entrusted the honor of commanding the volunteers.

The little party evaded the enemy's patrol, swarm a river and arrived in the Confederate territory. At Big Shanty, the raiders captured an engine and flat car from a train crew. Running out upon the line, they tore up the track. The Confederates, however, were notified of what was taking place and another engine and car carrying a force of soldiers were sent in pursuit. The raiders made a wild race for life. Fuel gave out and the Federal soldiers were compelled to abandon their engine. The Confederates came up and a desperate battle ensued. Although outnumbered, the Union soldiers fought until overwhelmed. It was in this battle that Lockwood sustained the wound that cost him his arm. The few Union soldiers that that survived were taken to the prison at Atlanta. There several were executed while the rest were thrown into prison. Later, eight of the Andrews Raiders made their escape. Lockwood was one of the eight.

Mr. Wm. A. Lorence of the Aurora Amusement Co., New York City, writes:

"I must say that the STANDARD machine is absolutely fireproof, as I have experimented and found that in case the film caught fire, only that part of the film exposed to the arc light would burn, leaving even the sprocket holes with one-fourth inch film on each side, thus saving the trouble of splicing the film together in order to continue the show."

The STANDARD is Fireproof

The STANDARD was the first projection machine, with motor attached, to be approved by the New York City Board of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity.

The STANDARD was the first machine to use an automatic fire shutter positively controlled by a governor instead of unreliable friction.

The STANDARD projector is the motion picture machine for YOU. Be sure and send for particulars about the American Standard MASTER MODEL.

THE LADY OF THE CYCLAMEN (Special—Two Parts—March 8).—David Hoyt, a rich American patron of arts, is traveling in Europe with his daughter, Phyllis, and makes a tour of the Paris "Quartier" in search of a struggling artist. He encounters Curtis Barton, who answers all requirements, for he is living in poverty until he finishes his picture to enter at the great salon. The Hoyts visit Barton's studio, and a love spark kindles between Barton and Phyllis. Some days later while Barton and some fellow students are waiting for news of the salon awards, one of them bursts in, exclaiming that Barton's picture has been accepted, also "the portrait of Willard." Willard is not present. Williard's painting is known as "The Lady of the Cyclamen."

Barton takes Phyllis to see "The Lady of the Cyclamen," and he explains that the identity of the lady is a mystery. Phyllis is amazed to recognize the subject as an American girl. She begs Barton to take her to Ulrica, the subject, at once, only to hear that she is dead. Barton relates to her the story of the coming of Uldica amongst them; of her beautiful passing, and of the marvelous love-story which is yet the talk of the Quartier. In the picture, which he relates, one follows Ulrica and Willard through their studio life to where they ran away together into Normandy to make "wonderful sketches." Some months later the life of Ulrica went out as simply and naturally as the flickering taper. Willard, alone, had painted from memory the portrait of Ulrica.

Barton takes Phyllis to see Willard. She tells him she knew Ulrica at home and Willard begins to lean upon her friendship. David Hoyt takes Willard along as their guest to a summer home. Phyllis and Barton are now engaged to be married. Willard continues to decline in health, and Phyllis, through pity and strange fascination, falls in love with him. One evening, Hoyt, Phyllis, Barton and Willard observe a young woman coming toward them across the lawn. Hoyt, as host, rises to welcome the stranger, but what was a living woman, now in a flash is nothing. They turn to Willard and find he has passed away. His spirit went out to meet that of Ulrica, who called for him.

THE STAGE-COACH DRIVER AND THE GIRL (March 9).—Edythe, an eastern girl, receives an invitation from Alice, her school days' chum, to visit her in the west. Alice sends a photograph of her brother Tom, who is a stage-coach driver.

The gambler finds a letter lost by Tom, telling of the arrival of a shipment of money. With the aid of bandits he resolves to overtake the stage-coach on its return trip.

Tom meets Edythe at the station, and gets the express box, and they start on their homeward journey. In the wilderness a wheel is broken, and as Tom is fixing it, he spies the bandits on a distant hill. There is a wild drive, and the pursuing bandits shoot down a horse. The horse is taken from the harness and the journey is continued with three horses until the front wheel comes off and the stage-coach upsets throwing Edythe and Tom to the ground. Bullets are flying around Tom and Edythe and one strikes Tom in the arm.

However, the stage-coach guard gets the sheriff and posse in time capturing two of the bandits. The stage-coach driver is rewarded by the affections of his beautiful girl passenger.

THE EAGLE AND THE SPARROW (March 10).—The "eagle" lives amidst wealth and swoops down upon the unwary. The "sparrow" lives in poverty and cannot keep his wife and little one from want. The "eagle" moves in high society and steals the jewels and money from rich homes. The "sparrow" does not wish to steal, but is driven to desperation by hunger. He selects the home of the "eagle" for his first depredation, and while in the dwelling the "eagle" comes home with his prey in the shape of a valuable necklace.

The "eagle" discovers the "sparrow" and is about to hand him over to the authorities when the "sparrow's" plea touches his heart, and he gives him food and money for another start in life.

Later the "eagle" sees the happy results of his kindliness. Conscience-stricken, he throws away the implements of his nefarious profession and resolves to lead a better life.

Not Yet....

That is the answer we probably would receive from some exhibitors were we to ask them if they had included the TWO REEL BIOGRAPH in their weekly service. And that "not yet" is the one thing that keeps us hopeful of increasing the demand for this regular Tuesday release. As long as there are exhibitors who have not started using it, we know they are on the way; for sooner or later they are bound to notice the superior quality of the TWO REEL BIOGRAPH and give it a prominent position on their programs.

AND THEN IT HAPPENED (March 12).—Spiff Beekins owns a restaurant and the remuneration therefrom is very small. He is desirous of selling it and Lee and John are desirous of buying it. In order to clinch the bargain, Biff arranges with the workmen of a factory to crowd into the restaurant at the dinner hour, appear to pay for the food and give the place an air of prosperity. Lee and John are favorably impressed by the outfit, which includes a cuckoo clock and cash register. Lee and John know nothing about the restaurant business, and they have their troubles right from the start. In despair, one of the new proprietors starts to work the cash register. Beekins' cashier wanders into the restaurant, opens the cash register and sees by the figures that an enormous sum of money has ostensibly been received. She hustles out to tell the amazing news to Beekins.

In the meantime, the workmen think they are doing Beekins a favor, and commence to break up the furniture, and havoc is created. Lee and John flee the restaurant, are encountered by Beekins who buys it back, and when he gets there finds that little remains of the original establishment.

COME ROUND AND TAKE THAT ELEPHANT AWAY (March 13).—Sandstrom Smith, a western mine owner, buys one of three elephants, which were stranded in a neighboring town when a patent medicine vender went broke. He takes one home with him, and puts it in the barn. "Pills," the elephant, escapes.

Smith and Sammy Harbin, his pard, take a load of dynamite out to the mine. This mine has not been so very productive. Sammy places the basket of dynamite aside while performing an errand, and "Pills" takes possession of it and starts on his travels. He causes a stampede in many and divers places. "Pills," finding that the owner does not wish the dynamite returns it to the place where he found it. There is an explosion, and the elephant rises from the debris unscathed. Smith and Sammy rush into the scene and find that the dynamite has uncovered a rich vein of gold ore. It is cream puffs for "Pills" thereafter.

THE FORK IN THE ROAD (Special—Two Parts—March 15).—In the prophecy of a palm-reading hag that he will find his fate through his bravery, Rudolph, the inn-keeper's assistant, obtains encouragement for his fond fancy that he was born to a noble career. Elsa, the pretty daughter of the inn-keeper, refuses to elope with Rudolph, and he seeks his fortune in the great world. He reaches a fork in the road, and uncertain which path to follow, he sits down to rest, and, overcome by fatigue, falls asleep. In his dreams he arrives in a beautiful city. He joins an army and as a soldier, performs prodigies of valor, wins promotion and finally rides back in supreme command of the army. He is thanked by the King, who offers him the Princess' hand in marriage. Emerging from the cathedral in which he has been married, with the Princess on his arm, he sees Elsa and her father in the crowd of on-lookers. He stops and gives the inn-keeper a purse, leaving Elsa sobbing in her father's arms.

Rudolph's dream changes. He finds himself taking the other path of the fork. It is a gloomy desolate road, leading to a gloomy and desolate town. A dying citizen accuses Rudolph of having murdered him. He is condemned to execution. He repents now having left the love and comfort of the old inn, and the more when, mounting to the block, he sees Elsa and her father among those gathered to witness his fate. Awakening at the road-side, Rudolph finds himself unable to decide which path led to glory and fame and which to misery. With a returning thought of how Elsa and her father miss him, he determined on a safe plan of returning. His choice is a fortunate one for all concerned, for he arrives in time to save Elsa and her father from an attack by three thieves, who are sons of the old palm-reading hag. The prophecy of the old crone that Rudolph's fate would come through his bravery is realized when the inn-keeper gives his glad consent to Rudolph's marriage to Elsa.

SAGE BRUSH TOM (March 16).—Sage-Brush Tom admires a moving picture actress. He buys a postal card photograph and worships it. Her company is engaged to take some motion pictures on the ranch where Sage-Brush works. He runs into the leading lady, and falls more in love with her, but the heavy-man objects, and they have a spirited fight.

Tom wants to qualify as an actor, and is told that he must seize a bull by the horns and throw the animal like Ursus did in Quo Vadis Tom ties a stuffed figure to the horns of a powerful young bull, and then practices trying to throw the bull, in which effort he is unsuccessful. His friends peer through the corral fence and joke him about his failure to throw the bull.

Then Tom learns that the leading actress is already married; so he destroys her photograph and returns to cowpunching.

THE PUNY SOUL OF PETER RAND (March 17).—Peter Rand, a vaudeville actor playing on a "small time circuit" of the cheapest type writes bragging letters to his mother and only brother telling them how great he is and of his imaginary large salary. His mother, whom he has never assisted in any way, is suddenly stricken blind. Being a laborer, his brother is unable to help her much; so he finally writes Peter telling him of his mother's condition, and asking him to hurry home and spend some of his enormous savings in caring for her.

Peter's acting is so bad that he is told to vacate the stage at the theater, and when the letter from William arrives he is penniless. However, to make good his bragging declarations, he boards a freight train and finally arrives home. Unable to secure work as an actor, he finally secures employment in a restaurant kitchen. He sends his blind mother flowers and fruits and as she breathes her last she believes her favorite son is a wonderful and successful Thespian. After the funeral Peter again returns to the bright lights.

WHY BILLINGS WAS LATE (March 19).—James Billings is a man who always prides himself on being either on time or a trifle ahead of any appointment or train that he may be obliged to make. His wife has the exasperating habit of apparently taking her time and yet is always on hand at the appointed hour. She will always make a train by a hair, never seems to hurry, while Billings is in constant fever until he is at the designated place.

The Wesleys have bought a place in the country and the Billings are going to spend a week with them. The train leaves at 2 P. M. sharp. Billings warns his wife that she must be on time. He finishes dressing long before she does, and in order to kill time he resolves to take the little dog out for a run. He does so and the dog runs away. While Billings is chasing it, Mrs. Billings is calmly dressing, orders a taxi, arrives at the station, and Billings gets there just in time to see the train pull out with his wife gaily waiving her hand at him.

JACK'S PALS (March 20).—Jack Murphy is an animal keeper at the City Zoo. Bill Morgan, the head animal man, dislikes Murphy, and wishes to put another man in his place, but as

They're Tickled Pink

You're a Business Man

In your career you have had people come to you and tell you how good they thought the product you were selling was. You just wished that everybody who refused to buy from you could hear those people tell of how pleased they were.

You are not the only one in the world who has had that experience.

The Kriterion right now is being deluged with mail from exhibitors all over the country who have tried Kriterion Service. We are feeling the same as you did. We want every motion picture theatre owner in the world to know the great success those exhibitors are having who are using Kriterion Service.

We are not going to quote any sample letter here. You know what they are like. We do want to say, though, that each and every one of them claim Kriterion Service the best thing on the market today. And of all the mail we have received, of all the personal calls, there has not been one complaint. That is even bigger than the fact that we are receiving so much praise Imagine a film service that has not been complained about once. That is something you have never before experienced.

There are any number of disgusted exhibitors in this country who have been looking for some remedy, in fact they have investigated everything, hoping against hope that something good would turn up. They were just about becoming discouraged and reconciling themselves to what was available up to the time that Kriterion came in.

In a half-hearted way, they recognized Kriterion. Then the big thing happened. It was the service that they were looking for. Can you imagine the big surprise, after waiting and wishing for years then suddenly to have it happen. It is just like having a rich uncle die who you know is going to leave you a big wad of money.

the superintendent has no cause to discharge him, Morgan plots to have Murphy discharged. Enticing him into a saloon, he manages to induce Murphy to drink until he becomes intoxicated. The next morning Morgan informs the superintendent of Murphy's weakness, and Murphy is discharged. Through a friend Murphy obtains employment in the city fire department.

One night Morgan carelessly throws a lighted match into the hay-barn and a few moments later it becomes a mass of flames. Murphy's company gets the alarm and answers the call. The Zoo is in danger of complete destruction and the animal men have disappeared. The superintendent appeals to Murphy to save his animals, and Murphy thinking only of his pets, rushes through the flames and reaches his beloved pals. He saves the frightened animals, and later is made head animal man of the new City Zoo, while Morgan is dismissed.

PATSY BOLIVAR NO. 12, PATSY AMONG THE SMUGGLERS (March 15).—After his heroic rescue of Number 11, Patsy becomes a member of the force, but receives a reprimand for having permitted private matters to interfere with duty in the arrest of his old enemy Sykesy for insulting an officer. On the following day a Secret Service agent visits police headquarters and requests to have the biggest rube on the force assigned to him, for the purpose of using him in the apprehension of some opium smugglers who have been operating between ship and shore on the river. To this duty, Patsy is at once assigned, and sent to the smuggler's, but disguised as a tramp. In this guise he succeeds in ingratiating himself into the good graces of the smugglers, and is given lodging in their lair.

Dreamer that he is, his first sleep among the smugglers is visited by an awful nightmare. He is transported to the days of smuggling in the 16th Century, in which Grace becomes the Smuggler Chief, Sykesy his Lieutenant, and these capture the beloved women of the story and carry her off to their lair. Patsy and Jack bravely armed as swashbucklers fight fiercely to rescue the fair prisoners. Patsy awakens, just as Jack is made to walk the plank, and he is being hanged to the yard arm, only to find that in his dream the sheet has become wrapped about his neck and his outcries cause him to be thrown bodily out of the hut by his new smuggler friends. Here he encounters his Secret Service employer, who, with assistants, has been on the watch all night. While he is giving evidence to the Secret Service agent, the chief of the smugglers shoots him in the leg, and none of the glory of arresting the band comes to him. The next day we find him in the hospital surrounded by his father, mother, sister and the ever faithful Jane.

HERE COMES THE BRIDE (March 16).—Young Attorney Reed is a paragon of forgetfulness. His Uncle Judd has made him his heir, only upon condition that he is married, and when the story opens Uncle believes that he has had a wife for months. Reed receives a telegram that Uncle Judd is coming from Los Angeles to visit him and wife. There is only five days to commit the deed, and James, his butler, takes the situation in hand. He remonstrates with Reed, who replies all right, "I'll do it." James sees a photograph of an old country sweetheart and suggests that the young lady be sent for forthwith. On Thursday Reed, vaguely conscious that he has to be married quick, lays in a stock of engagement rings. While dictating a letter to his stenographer, May, he asks her if she will marry him and quickly places one of the rings on her finger. On Friday Reed attends a ball given by the Smythe's. Helen, the daughter, has him in her mind's eye and, cornering him in the conservatory, spoons him into proposing. On Saturday, the genial widow, Anna, who lives next door with her six children, visits him, and Reed, abstracted, remembering that he must be married by Monday, hastily proposes. Monday night, forgetting everything else but his law work, he goes to the club to do an hour's work. Remembering the wedding, he hastily corrals Lee, a wealthy friend, and rushes to his apartments. The several prospective brides arrive with their friends. Reed is paralyzed and resorts to the "enney-meeney-miney-mo" scheme, and selects May, really forgetting that he always loved her. The disappointed girls all swoon in the arms of the male guests and each find that he is satisfied to hold on for good and the composite ceremony starts.

A TRAGEDY OF THE HILLS (Special—Two Parts—March 17).—Although everyone thought Harry to be the son of Judge Marshall Tingley, he was really the child of Tom Drook, an unscrupulous outlaw, and leader of the clan of the Drooks, who had held sway in the mountains twenty years earlier. At that time, the Tingleys rose against the Drooks and all but Tom was shot. He attempted to escape by jumping from the top of the cliff into the water below, and was given up as drowned. The baby, Harry, was found by John Gray, the hermit of the hills, and was taken to Marshall Tingley, who consented to adopt him, but who kept his identity secret. At the age of twenty-two, Harry is the companion of his supposed sister, June, the daughter of Judge Tingley. She is greatly attached to him, and when Judge Tingley notes their attitude toward each other, he tells them of Harry's identity. June is embarrassed by the disclosure, and to hide her confusion, welcomes her dissolute cousin, Burr Tingley. When Harry objects and engages in a fight with Burr, the Judge interferes, and Harry, thinking the Judge is against him, because he is a Drook, leaves. Burr writes Harry a challenge to a pistol duel at a mountain plateau known as "Hell's Half-Acre." At first Harry refuses to accept the challenge, and tears the note in two, then, reconsidering, he writes an acceptance, naming John Gray, the old hermit, as his second.

In the mountain cabin, Gray, the hermit, finds a stranger hiding and in him he recognizes the long-missing Tom Drook, Harry's father. The shock of the recognition proves too much for the weak heart of the old hermit and he sinks to the floor. Tom Drook finds him dead, and, hard pressed by a western sheriff wanting him for murder, he disguises himself as the hermit. When Harry arrives to ask Gray to act as his second, Tom, thinking the boy the son of his enemy, agrees. Blake, the sheriff, who is following Tom, learns of a threat against the life of Judge Tingley, and secretly guards the house at night. He is seen by the Judge, who searches the lawn the next morning for signs of him. There he and June find the torn challenge, and hurry to the Half-Acre to prevent the duel. Tom Drook, planning a crafty vengeance, kills Burr Tingley, in a way to give the impression that Harry has shot him from ambush, and when June and her father reach the Half-Acre they find the boy in custody. That night the Tingleys, intent on vengeance for Burr's death, take Harry from the jail and plan a lynching at the plateau. In the cabin of the hermit Tom Drook sees his own son pass to his death, gloating in the thought that it is the son of his enemy. June and her father learn of the lynching and start out to save Harry. In the cabin Tom finds the diary of the old hermit and in it he reads proof that Harry is his own son. Horror-stricken by his act, he starts for the plateau to save him. The Tingleys place Harry against a rock, raise their guns and fire. When the smoke clears away they find the hermit, sinking to the ground, and Harry unhurt. It is Tom Drook, who has rushed in and taken the bullets intended for his son. June and her father reach the Half-Acre just as Tom breathes his last, and though Harry has lost a father, in June he has won a wife.

THE ONLY WAY OUT (Special—Three Parts—March 18).—Bertha Holt, a stenographer, is alone in New York. She becomes acquainted with John Rawls, who tricks her into going to a hotel with him telling her he will get a minister to marry them. Bertha, who believes in Rawls, agrees. Rawls returns without the minister and Bertha guesses his real purpose. She struggles with Rawls and escapes, leaving her pocketbook with her name card behind.

A year later Bertha is engaged as stenographer by Edward Gray and they are deeply in love. Gray proposes to her one day, her face clouding, as a vision of her escape from Rawls appears. Gray pleads with Bertha and she finally accepts him. Four years later Bertha, now happily married, has a little daughter, Clara. Rawls writes a note to Bertha, telling her if she will come to his apartments he will return her pocketbook. Bertha receives the note and decides to go. As Bertha enters, Rawls' landlady, who is working in the kitchen, hears a shot and runs to the door of the apartment. Not receiving an answer, she rushes to the street and tells the crowd. They break down the door and find Rawls dead. A policeman telephones and Reed and Green, two detectives are detailed. They arrive and investigate the case, everything points to suicide.

Reed, after all have gone, finds a lady's pocketbook, with Bertha's name in it. He decides that Bertha knows something about the case and he telephones to her that he will come to dinner. Reed arrives and sees that Bertha and Gray are nervous about something. After the meal is finished they go to the library where, in the absence of Gray he gets Bertha to confess that she killed Rawls. Gray, who has been listening behind the curtains, tells Reed that he killed him. Reed, who is a friend of Gray's is about to give him a chance to escape when a maid enters with a card announcing Green, the other detective, and Reed is forced to arrest Gray. At the trial Gray takes the stand and tells how Rawls tricked Bertha into going to a hotel; why he gave him a position of trust in his business; how Rawls tried to force himself on his wife; how he betrayed his business secrets and one day he found a note from Rawls to his wife and went to Rawls' den. In the struggle that followed, Rawls drew a revolver to kill Gray but he grabbed his wrist. The gun was discharged and Rawls was killed. How to save his wife's name he strengthened the evidence of suicide. The jury bring in a verdict of not guilty.

ONE LAW BREAKER (March 19).—Tom Jordan, one of the deserving army of the unemployed in a great city, and his five-year-old daughter, Allie, are thrown out of their dilapidated shack because the rent is not forthcoming. The little one's mother is dead. Deprived of a home, the man leaves the tired child in a park while he again seeks work in vain. Two sneak thieves snatch a suit from a clothing store; then finding they are pursued, the crooks, by a clever dodge, fasten the crime on the innocent Jordan. The latter is arrested and when taken before the young police judge, swears he is not guilty and begs to be allowed to get his baby from the park. The judge sends a policeman to the park with Jordan. The weeping, frightened Allie, however, had been picked up by a kind-hearted and wealthy young widow and when Jordan arrives at the park there is no trace of his baby. Crazed with grief, Jordan attempts to escape from the policeman, but is recaptured and given a limit sentence by the angry judge. Jordan swears vengeance against the judge. Allie only knows her father as "Daddy." The widow decides to keep the little one. Judge Ellers becomes interested in the widow and succumbs to the charms of Allie, ignorant of the fact that she is Jordan's child. Jordan is free at last. He buys a revolver, trails the judge to the widow's home and hides in the shrubbery, awaiting a chance to shoot down Ellers. An innocent game of hide and seek brings both Ellers and Allie near the ambush; but the child stumbles on her father first and saves him from the stain of murder.

ON THE ROAD TO RENO (March 20).—Jack and Amy are still young enough and newly married enough to take their little domestic spats seriously, and after a little tiff at the breakfast table, each decides that he and she can find happiness only if parted. Each sends the other a note stating that he and she, respectively, is on the road to Reno, but neither note is received. Unknowingly they catch the same train for the West. Amy has bought her Pullman ticket, and his berth No. 8 in car 1, but Jack, barely catching the train, is without a ticket, and when he applies to the conductor, is told that every berth is sold. A good-natured traveler tells him he may share his birth, No. 8 in car 2. The traveler goes to bed, but Jack decides to sit up a while in the club car.

When Jack decides to turn in, he makes a mistake in cars, going to car 1. He puts on his pajamas in the dressing room, then crawls into berth No. 8. Amy suddenly awakens, finds a man in the berth with her, and alarms the car with her cries. Passengers, in scanty attire, rush to her aid, and the bewildered and frightened Jack is seized upon and dragged to the rear platform of the train, the enraged passengers being intent upon pitching him off.

Amy recognizes Jack just in time, and throws her arms protectingly about him, declaring him to be her husband. The passengers furiously demand to know why, if he is her husband, there has been so much commotion and why they have had their rest disturbed. No satisfactory explanation being offered, they stop the train and bundle off the pair of them, leaving them, in pajamas and night gown, beside the track in a lonely land, a situation which does not impress itself upon them just yet as they are busily engaged in effecting a tender reconciliation.

A MATTER OF PARENTAGE (March 6).—Deyton Blair returns from college to his sweetheart. He asks her father, David Harrison, for permission to marry his daughter. Mr. Harrison is president of the Pine Dome Oil Company and offers young Blair a position as foreman of the company. When he makes good Claire is to be free to choose him. Blair takes up his work in the oil fields. He befriends a driller by the name of Myers who has been failing in health for some time. Myers finally dies leaving his baby girl, Blossom, to be cared for by the college boy foreman.

Claire Harrison accompanies her father on one of his trips to the oil fields. Blair has made the little one at home in his cabin, in fact he has adopted her as his own. He is absent from his shack when the president's daughter arrives. She finds no one within except the child. She asks the child to whom she belongs and the child smilingly points to a photograph of young Blair. Claire at once believes that her sweetheart has been false to her and falls weeping into her father's arms. She leaves the shack. Blair meets his sweetheart but is coldly ignored. Mr. Harrison is indignant when his daughter tells him that Blair has a child.

Returning to the shack, Blair asks the child what has happened. She explains to him how she told the strange lady he was her father. Later he is putting the little one to sleep, when Hopkins, another driller, approaches the shack. He hears Blair singing a lullaby and not wishing to enter, peeps in at the window. A pretty sight meets his eyes. Harrison and his daughter plan to bring their knowledge of Blair's deception to the supposed guilty man. As they approach the cabin they see Hopkins peering in at the window. Hopkins asks them to look in. Hopkins then explains how Blair adopted the little orphan and Claire and her father realize their mistake. They slip quietly into the cabin and find Blair asleep with the child in his lap. Clair kneels down beside him and kisses her sweetheart. He wakens and a happy reconciliation follows.

BIG "U."

WHEELS WITHIN WHEELS (March 2).—The story opens in the darkened library of Von Ludwig, the spy. A man with a bullseye lantern moves about the room, and Von Ludwig, seated in his den, hears the noise, takes his gun and starts down to investigate. The figure hears footsteps and, grasping a chair, crashes the window, and then secretes himself behind the curtain, just as Von Ludwig enters and switches on the light. The man hiding behind the curtains steps forward and accidentally, apparently, knocks over a pedestal. With an oath, Von Ludwig grasps his gun and leads the man out. The man, frightened, pleads for mercy. Von Ludwig catches sight of the time, one minute to twelve, and conceives the idea of forcing the man to rob Hartzburg of the papers. In return Von Ludwig offers him his freedom.

The man consents, finds Hartzburg, fights him and obtains the papers. He returns, and as Von Ludwig starts to take them, he pulls his gun and blows a whistle. Two men from outside enter. The "burglar" takes the papers and reveals himself as John Matthews, of the secret service. Then "Matthews," with an elaborate bow, picks up the papers and prepares to leave. Vere, amazed, asks Hartzburg who he is. He replies that "Matthews" is Ravall, the French spy. "Matthews" acknowledges it, and, smiling triumphantly, leaves with his booty.

HER ADOPTED MOTHER (March 9).—Edna Ellis, a lonely orphan, is employed by Charles Manville, a well-to-do business man. Mrs. Manville, the mother of Charles, is a widow who is neglected by her son and who has no other living relation. She lives in an old ladies' home. Edna is more than ordinarily attractive and appeals strongly to her employer. But his efforts at further acquaintance are continually rebuffed, the girl feeling intuitively that his intentions are not good. A type of woman who does not "mix" with others, she becomes exceedingly lonely and in a fit of despondency, pours out her heart-ache to her only close friend, Mrs. Wilson, a director of the old ladies' home.

After unfolding the secret of her loneliness, Mrs. Wilson recalls a little old lady who is especially unhappy in the home. She proposes that Edna adopt the little old lady. Mrs. Manville demurs, but is finally persuaded to try the experiment. Mrs. Wilson brings her to Edna's apartment and places her in a big rocker with her knitting in her lap. As the hour for Edna's return draws near, Mrs. Wilson quietly leaves. A few minutes later the girl opens her door. Before her sits a little old lady, placidly knitting. It is like a vision of her mother long since passed away. With a stifled sob, she runs to the rocker and throwing her arms about the little woman, kneels at her side.

The experiment is a success. Mrs. Manville remains with Edna,, who is happier than she has been for months. Her changed manner even affects her employer, whose attitude toward her seems different, though he is more persistent than ever in his attentions. Finally, after pleading with her to be allowed to call, she consents. As he enters the apartment, he sees a little old lady. He moves closer. A cry of joy and Charles takes his mother into his arms. Explanations follow and the story fades out, leaving the possibility of a romance to the imagination.

THE FUNNY SIDE OF JEALOUSY (Two Part—March 18).—Mr. Jack Corona is an impulsive and nervous individual possessed of a beautiful wife of whom he is insanely jealous. Mrs. Corona has a brother whom she has not seen for years and one day receives a letter unexpectedly announcing his arrival. The letter is signed "Lovingly Ned." This leads the husband to infer when he finds the letter, that it is a clandestine meeting between some unknown lover and his wife. He immediately sets about to destroy this supposed lover. He disguises himself as an anarchist and secures a time clock bomb. Returning to the house, he discovers that his wife and her supposed lover have gone aboard a yacht lying at a dock not far distant. The infuriated husband trails them to the aforesaid yacht, where he meets a friendly steward. He bribes the latter to change places with him to enable him to serve refreshments to his supposed erring wife and her lover in the cabin of the yacht.

While serving them his efforts to conceal his identity and also his rage and jealousy bring about the most laughable situations imaginable. Everything seems to go wrong and at an opportune moment he places the bomb under the supposed lover's chair. After a few more complications, a fight ensues and in the mix up he loses his disguise and his identity is discovered by his wife. Due explanations follow and Mr. Corona meets his brother-in-law for the first time. He now realizes what a fool he has made of himself and flops unthinkingly into the chair under which is the bomb. An explosion follows, igniting Mr. Corona's clothes. He madly dashes about hither and thither trying to extinguish himself. There is nothing left to do but to jump overboard which he promptly does. After some difficulty he is rescued from a watery grave and in this bedraggled condition he promises never to be jealous again.

SAVED BY TELEPHONE (Two Parts—March 17).—Belle Stanley, a pretty, young school teacher, lives with her widowed mother, in a little cottage close by a sea-side resort. Harvey Randall, a loose living and reckless young fellow, is struck by Belle's beauty and takes her to the band concerts at the beach on Sundays. The girl is offered a position at the country school some miles inland and there meets Jim Young, a telephone lineman who has charge of the district wires. He falls in love with Belle and, knowing her fondness for music, installs a telephone in her room, through which she can hear the Sunday concerts at the beach, through a horn receiver placed in front of the band stand.

Randall follows the girl, and in a fight between the rivals, Harvey is worsted. Some time later, Randall and his gang plan to loot several freight cars and with the money therefrom plot to abduct the girl and carry her off on a yacht. Jim Young hears of the plan and rides to warn the school teacher. Randall shoots Young but the lineman climbs a telephone pole to tap the wire. In his wounded condition, he tangles the wires and the girl is awakened by the sound of her mother's voice in the room praying for her safety. She arouses the owner of the house and he repulses Randall and the gang. Afterward when Jim has recovered, Mrs. Stanley explains that she had left the 'phone receiver off the hook and knelt in prayer near the telephone. Jim had so crossed the wires that they connected with the wire from the beach in Belle's room and through this remarkable circumstance the girl had been saved from Randall and his gang.

THE UNHIDDEN TREASURE (Two parts—March 8).—Phylis Bacon, ward of an eccentric uncle, Thomas, is informed by the latter that she must marry Billie Ingle, the son of her uncle's best friend, whom Phylis has never seen. Phylis refuses and leaves the house to spend a few days with a girl friend. Meanwhile, Billie Ingle receives the same orders from his father that he must marry Phylis Bacon. Jefferson Ingle calls upon Thomas Bacon and the two arrange a clever plot. One week later, Phylis is called home by the news that her beloved uncle has been drowned. His body is not recovered. At the same time Billie is told of a similar happening and is wild with grief.

The lawyer calls on Phylis and shows her a strange codicil, which provides that she must search for the fortune left by Thomas Bacon which the latter had carefully hidden somewhere on the "Bacon Cables" homestead. At the same time, Billie Ingle, rummaging through his father's effects discovers a will almost identical with the one left behind by Bacon. Billie cannot find another thing to aid him, except a few old rusty keys in the same drawer which he pockets. They both set out for "Bacon Cables." Phylis arrives and finds the old house deserted save for an old grey-haired caretaker and wife. The girl sets forth on a tour of inspection and makes discoveries of strange mounds in the earth and a locked and barricaded summer kitchen, an old well and a dirty and grimy cellar with strange old trunks and boxes. Phylis returns to eat a hasty meal when she discovers that there is a stranger at hand, Billie Ingle, who calls himself Jack Brown. Phylis is not exactly pleased at his presence, and after the meal she offers a curt excuse and departs, while Billie, shown to an old-fashioned room on the upper floor, makes an immediate investigation of the walls and floors. Phylis confines her operations to the ground. She unearths a package wrapped and sealed with much care. In the package she finds a note which reads: "You have shown yourself to be interested. The treasure lies near at hand."

Phylis bursts into tears and Billie, hearing the sounds, asks if he can be of assistance. Phylis is angry and cuts him but afterward is sorry.

Billie makes the discovery that the house contains an attic, which is securely locked and nailed. He decides that the treasure must be hidden there. Noticing a wall piece, he looks behind it and finds a huge brass key. Remembering those he has in his pocket, Billie tries them on all the doors but without success. Meanwhile, Phylis awakens and discovers a large key and a note in her pillow, telling her not to give up as she is proceeding along right lines. She comes out of her room and sees Billie stealing alone and examining every nook. She is alarmed and thinks him an intruder, but determines to watch him until he finds the treasure, intending then to demand half. She watches his operations in the library, when from behind a tall painting he pulls a leather wallet and another tantalizing note which reads: "There is no need to smash things to get the treasure. It is accessible without much effort."

Billie's patience is exhausted and he is about to hurl a chair into the old master when Phylis appears and halts him, telling him that he has no right to destroy what is hers. They quarrel and neither will give in. That night Phylis retires tired but feeling that Billie is rather nice, while Billie retires feeling that Phylis is the one and only woman. Just after the hall clock has struck 1 a. m., sombre figures come down from the attic, and gliding along the halls let themselves into Phylis's room. Phylis is frozen with fear. She screams loudly for help and the intruders dance about the room. Billie hurries to Phylis's side to see the intruders vanish into the cedar chest. A thorough search fails to reveal them.

Phylis falls ill. Billie feels lonesome when she does not appear. Phylis for the first time examines her own room to find just a solitary slip of soiled paper which reads: "Two heads are always better than one." Phylis begins to realize that if they are to accomplish anything they best work together. That afternoon both set out togeher and find a quiet spot where Billie tells Phylis he loves her.

On their return to the house the two proceed to the library and sit before the fireplace. Suddenly Phylis looks inot a mirror and calls Billie's attention to the head and shoulders of a man whose face and features are covered by a hooded mask. Billlie would arise and attack him but Phylis bids him wait. Then another masked head appears and a gloved hand gives the first one a key. They unlock a wall cabinet, place something therein and then vanish. Billie makes a wild dash for the room only to find it vacant. Billie then explains to Phyllis his purpose at the "Bacon Cables."

Billie begs Phylis to run away with him and give up all of the treasure. Phylis is willing Again thinking of the cabinet, Billie rushes to it, finding this time something which he had overlooked, a key with a tag attached which reads: "You may search the world for treasure which oftimes is hidden within your own grasp." Hearing sounds within, Billie tears off the wall cabinet, disclosing a secret panel. The panel opens and to their terror, out of the interior walks two masked figures. While the lovers are quivering in terror, the two remove their strange make-up, revealing the laughing faces of Thomas Bacon and Jefferson Ingle. Explanations follow and the young couple care not for the mirth poked at them from the older men in their own complete happiness.

THE STORM (Two Parts—March 15).—John Marvin becomes engaged to Helen Cartwright. One evening as he is calling upon her, her brother, Frank, who has just returned from abroad, enters the room. Helen introduces her brother to Marvin, but Marvin refuses to acknowledge the introduction, as Frank Cartwright is the man who once desired his, John Marvin's, widowed mother. In his library that night John Marvin ponders over the course he shall pursue. He recalls the death of his mother and his own vow to kill at first sight the man responsible for her degradation.

He realizes what it will mean to him to perform this criminal act, but nevertheless, takes his revolver and going to the Cartwright home, asks for his victim. The two men come face to face. John Marvin is about to kill Cartwright when a sudden flash of lightning from the storm outside, strikes and kills the villain. Thus is Marvin saved from committing a murder.

BILL'S NEW PAL (March 3).—The cafe oven, the proprietor's watch, the cashier and the chef's irritable temper were among the things that made life unpleasant for the waiter. He and the chef were room mates, but the chef weighed 300 pounds and had a weakness for all the blankets on the bed, so the waiter usually found himself sleeping out where the breeze blew.

Both the chef and the waiter loved the cashier. Neither realized his heart affair would interfere with business, but it did to the annoyance of patrons and the displeasure of the proprietor. The climax came when the proprietor's watch wandered into the chef's pocket and the waiter tried to put his mitts into the cash register. On top of this the waiter tried to talk to the cashier when the chef wasn't looking. The latter saw this from among his choppers and saws and started throwing instruments about.

He did not realize these things cut until he thought he had killed a man and proceeded to put the body in a barrel. Proprietor, patrons and waiters all start chasing the chef. All of them fall down cellar except the waiter. He seeks safety in the oven, and is almost incinerated before he is rescued.

EASY MONEY (March 10).—Fresh from his home town was Reuben, and when the card experts laid eyes on him, they sent up a hymn of thanksgiving. Here was some really, truly "easy picking" and times were hard. Reuben, however, had ideas of his own regarding the national indoor game, and it was not until Gertie, the siren, was turned loose on him, that the gamblers felt at all easy about prying him loose from the old stocking. A dispute between Gertie and the gamblers over the spoils, however, was Reuben's salvation, as Gertie informed the police and they interrupted the game. This did not stop Reuben from getting hands on the jack-pot and exiting through the skylight. When the excitement had subsided, the farmer was the one who had the best of things. Even the gamblers acknowledged that he was a devil, both abroad and "in his own home town."

ROUGH BUT ROMANTIC (March 17).—Father was going to be married, but his bride-to-be was not exactly beautiful. Accordingly when his son's sweetheart came to attend the ceremony, father set eyes on her, and then and there forgot his own waiting bride and his parental duty. Son, however, saw this interest, and told the waiting bride's brother, who was six feet tall and had an ugly disposition.

This gentleman saw that father came back to his plain but indignant sister. Father was compelled to order son's sweetheart out of the house, but he did not neglect to observe where she lived. When his own mistreated fiancee came to plead with the pretty one to leave her man alone, father was also lurking about the house waiting for an opportunity to carry off the girl who had so infatuated him.

Unfortunately his henchmen mistook his own sweetheart for the son's, and carried her off in a sack. Father did not discover his mistake until too late, when a runaway auto, some police and a cliff, made him realize it. Meantime son got the pretty one.

RAINDROP AND GIRLS (March 18).—Snoopy and his wife go shopping. They enter a shoe store where a young lady is purchasing a pair of shoes. Mrs. Snoopy wants a pair but the clerk sells them to the young girl. Mrs. Snoopy is angered and cleans out the store. The Snoopys then start home but are caught in a shower and Mrs. Snoopy waits while Snoopy goes for an umbrella.

He finds one in a nearby saloon, and getting away with it starts back for his wife. He comes upon the young lady of the shoe store adventure, however, and gallantly carries her across a water puddle, which act is seen by his wife. He is made to perform a like gallantry for her. He drops her in the puddle, however, and both get soaked while Mrs. Snoopy loses her hat. Snoopy, thinking to "square" it, takes her to a hat store and while making her selection, they come upon the lady of the shoes again. Snoopy starts a flirtation while his wife watches him with one eye. She soon gets "on" and in the battle that follows the store is completely wrecked and the Snoopy family knocked out.

THE MIX-UP AT MAXIM'S (March 16).—Gason is only a waiter at Maxim's but he is a peer among those of his class. He is the most popular waiter in the establishment, which causes the head waiter to become jealous. Everyone is strong for Gason, even the cashier and the dishwasher. When wealthy patrons visit the restaurant, they demand that they shall be waited upon by the peerless Gason. In vain the head waiter tries to work off some of his other men. The head waiter, himself, sees much to admire in the pretty cashier, but, alas, he stands no chance with Gason, the favorite. Vainly the head waiter tries to give Gason his orders. Gason takes his time and garners the largest tips. In vain the head waiter tries to have him split the profits.

A fight finally ensues over the pretty cashier. The head waiter tries to have Gason discharged but the proprietor will not hear of it. Another quarrel follows over Gason's inability to take orders from the head waiter, which results in the head waiter being discharged and Gason put in his place. Gason reigns supreme while the displaced former head waiter plans his revenge. With three bad men he plots to put an end to his former rival. They prepare a bomb and take a table in the restaurant. They toss the bomb where it will do the most good but the wily Gason frustrates their plans. Gason becomes the hero of the hour. The conspirators are much damaged in the explosion. The cashier telephones for the police and after an exciting chase the old head waiter and his companions are arrested and sent to the lock up. Thereafter the course of Gason's love for the pretty cashier flows on uninterrupted.

DOWN ON THE FARM (March 19).—The farmer boy is madly in love with his sweetheart and they decide on a speedy marriage, but, as in days of old, her father demands that she marry a wealthy squire. Of course she refuses. Whereupon father tries to force her into the match. The farmer boy, however, interferes. Several laughable complications ensue, resulting in a mad chase, which ends in the marriage ceremony being performed by the parson as the couple are being pursued by the girl's irate father.

LAEMMLE.

HIS LAST SERENADE (March 7).—In a fine residence on the avenue, lives a wealthy man and his wife. They have a little daughter who is an invalid.

The doctor on leaving, sees the Italian lingering outside the house and asks him his business, whereupon Beppo shows his violin and tells the doctor of his little friend and the happy times they spent together. The doctor tells him his little friend is sinking fast and seems to miss something. Beppo looks at his violin and brightens. He begins to play. The child hears and the mother and father are startled.

The child's face brightens at once with joy. She calls for Beppo and sends her father to bring him in. Beppo plays again and again the tunes which have been the child's delight. The doctor notes a change in the child's condition and tells the distressed parents that their daughter will recover.

AN ARRANGEMENT WITH FATE (March 21).—George Carr is a wealthy young artist of romantic tendencies. His elder sister, Gretchen, refuses to marry the man who loves her, Frank Conway, until the artist really falls in love with some suitable girl and settles down. Frank immediately lays his plans. The arrival of his pretty niece from the East for a visit comes opportunely.

The next day he tells Carr that he has found a gypsy camp near town which might offer good material for the jaded imagination of the artist. Together they auto to the camp, where Carr immediately becomes infatuated with the daughter of the gypsy chief. Her father allows her to pose for the artist upon the payment of a goodly sum. Several sittings are necessary before the picture is finished, but Carr is prevented from any lovemaking by the constant presence of the old hag, "mother" of the girl. The finished canvas is much admired, but Carr is not satisfied. He suddenly realizes that he truly loves the girl. Frank appears with a paper relating that the gypsies have been arrested for thieving, and are to be thrown into jail as they cannot pay their fine. George decides to pay the fine himself and to ask the girl to marry him. His sister enters a fierce, but pretended, protest, but it serves only to strengthen his determination.

He goes with Frank to the police court and pays the fine. Then, turning to speak to the gypsy girl, he encounters the old chief, his hag of a wife, and a strange ugly girl whom they call their daughter. He asks in vain for information of the girl who posed for him. The chief pretends he cannot understand. Carr is disturbed. Later he goes to the camping place to find nothing but ashes left. Back at home he mopes before the picture which smiles mockingly at him. That night Frank arrives with his niece. Carr is in the studio and Frank goes to call on him, inviting him to meet his niece. Reluctant to leave his dreams of the gypsy maid, the artist accompanies Frank to Gretchen's sitting room to find that Frank's niece is the gypsy girl herself. Carr is puzzled for a moment, but forgives the little "Arrangement with Fate" because of the delightful results. Frank receives his reward and everyone is happy.

BISON.

THE MOTHER INSTINCT (Three Parts—March 20).—Marion Summers, in love with Curlew, comes to the notice of Gordon Barnes, who is much impressed with her. Curlew is intimate with Mamie We Voux, a demimondaine. When he informs her of his engagement to Marion, Mamie is very angry at being thus cast aside, and determines to make trouble. She, accordingly, brings Curlew's true character to the knowledge of Marion, who orders him out of the house. Marion, to get away from it all, accepts a friend's invitation to join a party on a yachting cruise. Barnes happens also to be one of the party. Marion thinks continually of Curlew and for that reason has no more than a passing interest in the gentlemanly Barnes. A storm arises and the yacht is wrecked. The only survivors are Marion and Barnes. They are cast upon a desert island and Barnes constitutes himself a guardian of Marion in the barren wilderness. He constructs a rude shelter, which they occupy, and both daily scan the horizon for a ship to take them back to civilization.

Curlew hears of the loss of the yacht with all on board and is much affected by the news, for he really loves Marion Summers. The lonely pair remain upon the island for two months without a sign of an approaching sail. Barnes learns to love Marion, but she will have nothing to do with him. Finally one evening, being unable to control his passion for his beautiful companion, Barnes seizes Marion and covers her face with feverish kisses, against which she is unable to defend herself. When he again approaches her she seizes his knife and threatens to do him injury if he repeats his actions. Marion from that time on develops an intense hatred for Barnes.

Months roll by and finally Marion informs Barnes of a life that is to come. Marion's hate continues to grow after the child is born. Barnes begs to be allowed to hold and fondle the baby, but Marion repulses his every advance with scorn. Curlew, meanwhile, leaves on an exploring expedition and by chance they land on the island of which Marion, Barnes and the baby are the only inhabitants. Marion is planning to kill Barnes, but at the last moment realizes she will be afraid to be alone, and controls her hatred. Curlew discovers Marion and tries to question her, but she is silent. She makes an appointment to meet him that night, however, and leaves him mystified.

Curlew keeps the appointment, but Marion does not come. At last she sees Barnes holding their baby in his arms and is torn with conflicting emotion; whether to flee with the man she believes she loves, and to tell him of the child, or to turn to the man who has forcibly made her his wife. Marion keeps her appointment later and Curlew finally begs her to come with him. She tells him that if her camp fire is left burning it shall be the sign to him that she will leave the island with him. Curlew accepts the ultimatum and watches for the appointed signal. Marion, returning to their little camp, has a struggle with herself. After waiting for some time, Curlew seeks her out and tries to force her to come with him. Barnes appears and the two have a hand-to-hand struggle. Curlew's companions join in the fight and Marion, desperate and realizing that, after all, it is Barnes she loves for the man that he is, runs into the hut and returns with their baby. Curlew, at sight of it, leaves abashed. Later, Curlew sends Marion a note, promising to care for her and the child if she will keep the appointed signal and leave with him. She hands it to Barnes. He expects that she will accept, but she only smiles, then deliberately picks up the loose earth and smothers the camp fire. Then, turning to him she gives herself into his arms.

Marvelous Mysteries of Nature

THE MOST VALUABLE, THE MOST ENTERTAINING AND THE MOST COMPLETE FILM RECORDS OF AMERICAN WILD LIFE

There was variety in abundance; romance, adventure, deeds of daring, glimpses of the mysterious ways of Nature and her animal tribes, flashes of humor, pathos, wonder!"

W. STEPHEN BUSH, "Moving Picture World"

(See pages 1462-1463, issue March 6th)

Three Years Were Spent

Western America was traveled from Alaska to the Mexican border; and over 250,000 feet of film were consumed in securing these thrilling reflections of Nature's wonders. The subject has been condensed to seven reels.

In assembling this series of pictures Mr. Salisbury has chosen only those portions that have occurred to him as having an appeal to all. No phase of wild life has been neglected in the making of this astonishing series of films. From the thrilling episodes showing the capturing alive of great mountain lions, bear, lynx, and many other animals, to the visits to the breeding ground of our migratory fowl and the catching of record weight trout with a light rod, no phase of active sport has been overlooked.

THE WATER CURE (March 1).—Shultz and his wife go to the beach to spend the week-end with the Steins. The two men witness the distress of a fair damsel. She has cut her foot on a shell. While the men are aiding her they are seen by their horrified wives. Now Mrs. Shultz has been studying the art of making up, hoping to become a picture actress. She schemes with Mrs. Stein to avenge themselves on their hubbys. They make up their scrawny features to appear like blushing beauties. Then, in the niftiest of bathing suits, they sally forth.

The beach Johnnies spot them. They become annoyed and stick like glue. The hubbys spot the supposed damsels in distress and rush to the rescue, teaching the Johnnies a good lesson. The men are enchanted with the fair creatures and invite them clam digging on the sand spit. It is low tide. The wives now see a chance to secure revenge and, revealing themselves to their hubbys, row away, leaving the men stranded. The tide has started to come in. The wives only intended to scare them and did not reckon on the police who are out under orders to arrest all persons wearing abbreviated bathing suits.

The wives are now caught in the police net and thrown into jail. And the tide is fast coming in. The wives in jail fully realize the dreadful position of their hubbys. Their pleadings are useless. But they finally manage to escape. Then comes a wild chase. The wives row like mad to save their hubbys from the wild waves, with which they are now struggling, hotly pursued by the police launch. The imperiled hubbys are rescued in the nick of time.

THE REFUGEES (March 15).—"Dusty Mike" and his pal, "Overland Pete," are bemoaning the lack of charity usually accorded them in their wanderings, and, of course, they blame it on the war. Mike finally develops a brilliant idea and without making known his plans to Pete, sets out to work the village. As luck is with him, he happens to visit Aunt Sis Thompson's back door while this good lady is the hostess of a party engaged in knitting socks for the soldiers in Europe. Mike makes it known that he is a Belgian refugee, and soon becomes the hero of the hour. He relates a sad story and Aunt Sis promises to take him in and give him a home.

An hour later Mike sees Pete and explains how easy he worked the villagers and Pete sets out to try the same game. Neither of the two tramps have reckoned with young Jimmie Hicks, editor of the town's weekly paper. Jimmy is in love with Aunt Sis's niece, Nellie, and feeling sure that there is something wrong about these supposed Belgians, watches every move they make. Pete is heartily welcomed by Mrs. Jones, who is one of Aunt Sis's social rivals, he having explained that, he also, is a Belgian refugee. That night Mrs. Jones gives a "refugee party." Hicks, the young editor, nearly spoils everything by denouncing the two supposed Belgians as rank impostors and hoodlums. For his pains he in turn is denounced by his sweetheart and the engagement between them is broken. Determined to watch the impostors, Jimmy keeps a late vigil near the Thompson home. His patience is rewarded when he finds the two tramps together and sees them slink off through an alley to meet one of the town's outcasts who sells them a jug of whiskey.

Jimmy watches them return to the Thompson home and enter upon a wild debauch. Then he hastens to his office and gets out an extra. The next morning the villagers are shocked to read the scandalous news, but believe it is only a scheme on the part of the jilted Hicks to get even with his sweetheart. A crowd of them set off for the editor's office, fully determined to lynch the young man for his libelous attacks against the "refugees," but after some argument and partly with the aid of a ferocious six-shooter, young Hicks convinces them that he is telling the truth and leads them back to the Thompson house, where he promises to prove his assertions. The delegation finds the two tramps quite dead to the world from their previous night's celebration. The two of them are arrested by the town constable and the young editor makes it up with his sweetheart.

THE REJUVENATION OF LIZA JANE (March 20).—For many years shy Hezekiah had courted 'Liza Jane. And many were the subtle schemes Jane tried, without success, to induce Hezekiah to propose marriage. At the crucial moment, however, something always happened to upset her schemes. Love did not seem to have a part in Hezekiah. He always talked of crops or of the weather. At last, at the Squire's dance, Hezekiah woke up. But not with love. It was the new dances, the tango, the hugs, and the trots, that did the work. He learned to perform these gymnastic stunts, and nothing could stop him. Besides, he was taught by a charmingly pretty girl. Poor Jane was left in the lurch. The dances were simply horrid to her. Moreover, no one would take the trouble to teach her, anyway. So she was left to go home alone. And her heart was nearly broken.

But who should come then, but sister Kate! And sister Kate was city bred and up-to-date. To her Jane pours out her woeful tale. Kate sizes things up in no time. She advises Jane to "unkink" her spine and learn the dances. Jane gives in and allows sister Kate to rejuvenate her. She learns how to tango until Kate declares she has no equal. At the next ball Jane's tango steps and jaunty carriage amaze the elite of Corn Center! The rest of the belles are left in the cold as the men crowd about Jane! And Hezekiah! Well, Hezekiah insisted on getting married the same night.

SUCH IS LIFE (March 4).—Polly, maid of all work at Mrs. Jennings', forms a romantic attachment for Will Deming, popular actor, for he is the only one who has bestowed even a kindly look on Polly. In her spare moments she dreams of herself as a great lady loved by Deming. Olive Trent, a young girl seeking a theatrical career, takes lodgings at Mrs. Jennings'. Her attempts to get an engagement meet with failure. Will sees her one day in an agency and is filled with admiration for her fresh young beauty. He sympathizes with her in her distress. She repulses him, mistaking his motive. Will little dreams that they live in the same house.

Tod Wilkes, a burlesque performer living at Mrs. Jennings', has seen Olive come and go. At last he manages to meet her and, thinking her a find, offers her an engagement in the burlesque company of which he is a member. It is an offer so far below Olive's aspirations that she refuses. The last of Olive's money goes to satisfy her landlady and she is desperate. She decides to accept Tod's offer, and goes to tell him so. He invites her to his room to run over her part.

Tod's rehearsal with Olive is over, but he still detains her. Before she is aware of his intentions he has seized her in his arms and kisses her fervently. Olive fights herself free. Enraged as well as humiliated, she goes to her room, too overcome with the shock of her experience to observe Will and Polly. Will recognizes her and offers her work in his company, a position which fulfils her highest ambitions. They leave the next day for Syracuse with never a good-bye or a glance at poor little Polly, who was the humble instrument in bringing them together. Polly shakes her head sadly and murmurs, "Such is Life."

"Dead Theatres"

20,245 changes occurred in 17,000 theatres during the past year, due to the adding of new theatres (5,064); eliminating of dismantled theatres (3,120), and changes in name (4,060), and ownership (8,001).

Because of these numerous changes it is very difficult to maintain an accurate and complete mailing list.

From the results of analyses we have made of other mailing list methods and the lists themselves, it is fair to assume that in the average lists covering the United States, fully one-third of the names represent theatres no longer in existence, and many thousand active theatres are not listed.

We have the only organization and system that is sufficiently flexible and efficient to properly secure, handle and record these changes. Returns of undelivered mail cannot be relied upon to clear the list of "dead" theatres, because mail addressed to a theatre no longer in existence is usually delivered to the former exhibitor or proprietor if he still resides in the same locality, irrespective of his present vocation.

ALL FOR PEGGY (March 18).—James Brandon owns the famous racing horse, Ladybird. He backs her heavily for the last race of the season. His son, Will, is in love with Peggy Baldwin, the daughter of his father's head groom. The Brandon family opposes the marriage on account of Peggy's low origin. One night, however, Will, finding his father in good spirits over the prospective winning of the race on the morrow, gives him a detailed account of Peggy's virtues. The story is interrupted by the entrance of a servant with a telegram for the father. "Ladybird in fine form—looks sure winner." Brandon is so elated that he asks his son to make a wager staking his happiness on the outcome of the race. In the event of Ladybird's winning Will consents to give up the girl. Will finally consents to this, believing his chances are as good as his father's. Later, however, he overhears Brandon tell his wife of the wager, and of the telegram, which makes his bet a sure one. Will becomes very angry at being tricked, and decides to turn the tables on the old folks.

Will persuades Ted Baldwin, Ladybird's jockey, to feign intoxication, knowing that with any other rider, Ladybird's chances are slim. He explains to Ted that his sister Peggy's happiness depends on Ladybird's losing, and as Ted idolizes his sister, he yields. It is within an hour of the race and Ladybird's owner is anxiously awaiting the coming of his jockey. Peggy has tried in vain to rouse Ted, and the situation is desperate. Peggy looks at Ted's new jockey suit, and decides to take his place. She has often ridden Ladybird and understands her. There is no time to lose, so Peggy hastily dresses, and gallops off to the race-track. She arrives just in time to weigh in, mount Ladybird and ride up to the starting post.

After an exciting race, Ladybird wins by a length, and the crowd gathers around the winner and her jockey, but Peggy hastily dismounts and slips away. When out of sight, she sinks on a bench overcome by exhaustion. It is here that Brandon and his son, Will, find her. Brandon comes to congratulate the jockey and Will to demand an explanation of Ted's apparent betrayal. They are surprised to discover that Peggy was the rider. Explanations follow and the father is so tickled at his son's defeat in trying to foil him, and at Peggy's gameness in entering the race, that he consents to their marriage.

THE RIDER OF SILHOUETTE (Two Parts—March 21).—Tex Davis, a bad man of the Northwest, is caught unaware one day by the sheriff. A gun fight ensues, during which the sheriff is hit hart and pitched down the mountain side to land at the feet of a ranchman. Davis, coming down the mountain side, is discovered by the ranchman and before he can reach his horse, he is forced to flee, with the ranchman pursuing him. The rancher runs into a deputy and orders him to take charge of the sheriff. The deputy does so and takes the sheriff to the trading post, where the kindly owner takes him in.

Deep in the great Canadian forest, in the center of a clearing, lives the sheriff's wife and their four-year-old baby girl. The little girl, one day while playing in front of the cabin, sees a rabbit run across the clearing. She follows it into the forest. The mother discovers the absence of the child and searches for it for hours, but returns to the cabin, brokenhearted and in despair, after a fruitless search. In the meantime Davis, pursued by the rancher, takes to the forest. He eludes his pursuer for the time and, weak and exhausted, plunges on into the thicket. Night falls and he builds himself a fire, when suddenly his operations are interrupted by the sound of someone crying. He discovers the sheriff's baby almost dead from exposure and crying bitterly. Davis' heart is touched, and he cares for the babe.

Later, Davis, weakened from the long strain, staggers into the clearing in front of the home the babe in his arms. The door of the cabin is opened and the overjoyed mother rushes out, takes the babe from Davis and leads them both into the house. Thus it happens that Davis takes refuge and finds succor in the house and from the wife of the man whom he thinks he has killed, though he does not know it is his wife. Davis, looking through the window, catches sight of the rancher riding toward the house. In alarm, he turns to the woman and tells her that he has killed a man and for her to hide him. She conceals him and tells the rancher, who does not know her, that she has seen no one pass that way. The rancher thanks her and rides on. The woman returns to the interior of the cabin and is thanked by the grateful Davis. She gives him food and traps, the better to enable him to live while in hiding. Davis leaves and enters the great forest. The sheriff, in the meantime, has recovered slightly and a messenger is despatched for his wife. The messenger arrives several days later. The wife sends the baby with him to a neighbor, while she rides to town alone.

Davis, in the meantime, has taken to the woods and trapping. One day while making the rounds of his traps, he is surprised to see a woman riding in the distance. The horse slips and falls. The woman is thrown heavily to the ground, where she lies inert. Davis finds her there and discovers it to be the woman who befriended him. He bathes her face and brings her to. It is discovered that the woman's ankle is broken and that she must get to town as soon as possible. The horse is a hopeless cripple. The only thing remaining for Davis is to carry her to the town, many miles away. Then he discovers that she is going to her husband, the sheriff, who lies at death's door in the town. Davis determines to tell the woman of the shooting and then his intentions to carry her to town. She pleads with him not to, knowing that it will mean prison to him. But he shakes his head and against her wishes takes her into his arms and starts on the long march to the post. He arrives in town at night and is almost dead as he staggers to the door of the post.

The sheriff, who has recovered, is seated with the owner at the fireside when they hear the noise on the stoop. The owner opens the door and admits Davis and the wife. The sheriff is startled, then angered. He seizes a gun and is about to kill Davis, when his wife saves Davis by telling him of Davis' sacrifice and bravery. The sheriff is at first obdurate, but then the better side of him shows itself and he extends the hand of a man to Davis. Davis grips it and vows to turn over a new leaf. Then the sheriff returns his horse to him. Davis takes his leave and the sheriff and his wife from the window of the little trading post see him swing to the crest of the neighboring hill, stand silhouetted against the night sky for a moment and then ride off toward the forest.

PRESSING HIS SUIT (March 11).—King and Flo are in love with each other. She asks him to take her to a ball. He promises, but does not know how he will raise the money to do so, as he is broke. While meditating on this in his room, a bright idea strikes him. He decides to pawn his two extra suits, which he immediately does. He buys the ball tickets and a bunch of roses. After reaching his room, he notices how wrinkled his trousers are and decides to have them pressed. He calls a boy from the street, gives him the box of flowers with a note to his sweetheart and a box with the trousers in, with a note to the tailor. The boy gets the packages and notes mixed up, so that the tailor get the roses with instructions to press and return them immediately.

Flo gets the trousers with the request to wear them that night, and King, after waiting in vain for the return of his aforesaid pants, rushes over to the tailor's in his pajamas, only to find him busy pressing the roses. Snatching a pair of pants from the rack and unheeding the fact that they are five sizes too big for him, he makes his way to his sweetheart's home to offer his apologies. Flo is highly indignant and throws the trousers in King's face. She then orders him from the house. He goes out on the front stoop and meditates on the frailties of human nature in general, until Flo's friend, Fanny, patches up their little differences. Flo makes amends by pressing the trousers—and the scene fades out just as the iron, left to its own devices, burns a hole in them.

THE BLACK PEARL (Two Parts—March 19).—Among the curios brought from India by Colonel Marsden is a black pearl. Margaret, his daughter, fancies the jewel and asks for it, but father replies that it is an occult jewel and can only be possessed by one showing supreme faith. Phil, the colonel's nephew, is heavily in debt to Benson, a gambler. Benson renews his importunities for his money and finally forces Phil to introduce him into Colonel Marsden's family as a friend. Benson inveigles Phil into more gambling games. Phil finally agrees to Benson's proposal that they rob his father's safe and put the blame on someone else.

In the meantime, Jack North, who is friendly with Margaret, fears he will lose her because of the fascinations of Benson. To humor her he again asked the Colonel for the black pearl for Margaret, but the Colonel refuses. Returning home North writes to Margaret telling her of his failure to get the pearl, but adding that he "will get it yet." Benson and Phil steal the keys from the Colonel and rifle the safe. North is decoyed to the house by a note with Margaret's signature forged. He is assaulted by Benson and Phil and is carried, bound and gagged, into an unused room in the house. The unmailed letter to Margaret is found in North's pocket and this with the keys are placed in front of the safe.

The robbery is discovered. The police fail to find North, who, of course, is suspected. In the attic above, his muscles bound, North crawls to the washstand. He bursts the faucet with his feet and with his heel blocks the drain hole. Rapidly the water rises, flooding the floor. A maid, in the room below sees the ceiling dampen and then the rush of water falling in cascades about her. She notifies the police who are in conference with Colonel Marsden at whose side sits Margaret, stoutly defending her absent lover and declaring her implicit faith in his innocence.

In the library, Benson and Phil, realizing by the commotion above, that North has been found, stand indecisively. Benson makes a break for the balcony with Phil close behind him. But Benson's revolver stares at Phil sinisterly. Determined that Benson shall take the medicine with him, Phil grapples with him. The police, breaking in upon North, find him nearly submerged in the rising flood. Asked to explain, North says that the Colonel's nephew can best do that. A shot from Benson's revolver aimed at Phil, but diverted by the latter's quickness, attracts them below. The struggle is still on with Benson gradually wearing down his opponent when the police pull him off. Phil confesses. Not long after the Colonel approaches North and Margaret and hands to Margaret the black pearl.

THE BLOOD OF THE CHILDREN (Two Parts—March 16).—The story opens with Senator Woodward speaking on the night before the Child Labor Bill is passed. He pleads earnestly to abolish child labor. His opponents, mill owners, Hewitt, Davis and others, sitting in the audience, are alarmed at the enthusiasm of the crowd. Woodward returns home and bids his wife Alice to retire, as he must work late. Meanwhile, Hewitt, Davis and the others, knowing that the bill comes up in the morning, determine to bribe Woodward. They leave for his home. Woodward is alone in the library when the men are announced. Hewitt offers him $100,000 to be absent from the house the following morning. Woodward, in a fury, starts to turn them out, then thinks better and asks them to listen to him while he tells them what the bill means to him. Grumbingly they consent. Woodward starts to talk.

The story goes back twenty years. He tells how he, Woodward, was a worker in the mills and his sweetheart, Alice, and his little sister were employed there also. His sister had consumption, a disease prevalent among the workers, caused by the lint entering their lungs. The foreman, who also loves Alice, begs her to marry him, promising to take her out of the mills. Alice's sister dies, and the doctor advises Alice, too, to leave the mills at once. Woodward hears the doctor's verdict and realizes he cannot help her. With a cry of horror Alice rushes away and promises the foreman she will marry him. Woodward takes to drinking after Alice marries.

Ten years later he owns one of the biggest mills in the South and employs, for the most part, child labor. One day as he sits in his office, they bring in a little boy, who has been caught in the machinery and Woodward orders them to take the child away, merely commenting on the carelessness of children.

Later he overturns a red ink bottle and imagines the ink is blood. A factory child is brought home dying to her mother, who was Alice. Alice's husband has died, leaving her destitute. When she sees her child is dying she is crazed by grief and rushes to the mills. There, for the first time, she meets Woodward. She turns on him and calls him a murderer, saying he has killed her child and a hundred more.

Woodward follows her home in time to see her child die with her eyes fixed accusingly on him. Stupefied, he walks away, always trying to remove the imaginary blood stains from his fingers. He wanders into a swamp and sinks down exhausted. Suddenly the faces of hundreds of sickly, mutilated children appeared to him and pointed accusingly at him. The swamp turns to blood and he sinks lower and lower into it, until Alice's child, glorified and radiant, rushes up and leads him away. Again he stumbles, and as he reaches for her she vanishes, but in her place appears the accusing children. Again Alice's child leads him forth, and this time he stands on the edge of a wood, where the children all glorified and happy, run about and play. The child leaves him and joins the others, but as he starts to follow an angel with a flaming sword appears and holds him back, saying he has murdered the children's bodies on earth, and, therefore, he should not be permitted to touch their souls. With a groan he sinks to the ground where they find him, hours later, a babbling idiot. They take him to Alice's home. She nurses him back to health. Then he sells his mills and gives himself up to the task of abolishing child labor.

Woodward finishes his recital. Davis asks to be allowed to give the $100,000 "bribe fund" to "help the kids."

THE LAWBREAKERS (March 1).—Jerry Miles, leader of a gang in the tenement district, is influenced to reform by Ruth Parker, who visits Jerry's lame sister, Kate. Later, Ruth's father, the Judge, runs for mayor. His political opponent, Black, by threats compels Jerry to steal for him certain incriminating papers from the Judge's library. Ruth catches him in the act. The gangster cannot explain himself without revealing to Ruth her father's crookedness, so he is silent. He is captured by the Judge's campaign leader, who leads him away out of Ruth's life forever.

THE GREEN IDOL (Two parts—March 6).—Dorothy Blake disgusts her father and Ted Bowden, her fiancee, by becoming fascinated with Ahmed Akbar, the propounder of a new cult. She buys from him for a very large sum an idol, and afterwards, discovering it to be a fake, is greatly humiliated at the easy fashion in which she has been buncoed. She goes to the Hindoo's rooms and demands that he return her money. Meanwhile the police are on the track of the impostor. Akbar, greatly alarmed, puts Dorothy under the influence of an Indian narcotic, giving a note to the driver of Dorothy's car, saying that he need not wait. The man drives home, where Bowden chances to call, recognizes the note as not being in Dorothy's handwriting, and drives immediately back to the Hindoo's quarters. He confronts the rogue, just as he and his servants are on the point of leaving with the unconscious girl. Bowden is overpowered and bound. The police squad, however, arrive and the Orientals are forced to make a hasty exit. A doctor, who is called in to resuscitate Dorothy, tells Bowden that only a Hindoo will know the antidote for the narcotic. He joins the police hunt. The Hindoo's automobile is plunged down a steep embankment, killing the two servants and mortally injuring Akbar. Bowden rushes him back barely in time to produce the antidote before he dies.

THE HEN'S DUCKLING (March 8).—Vivienne, the little daughter of Philip Charleroi, the district attorney, is neglected by her busy father and her mother, a society leader. She makes a friend and confidante of Marcelle, her mother's maid. Marcelle tells Vivienne how her uncle Bonfil is out of work and his wife lying sick in bed. Knowing that she cannot expect her mother to interest herself in the affairs of the servants, the little girl helps herself to a large sum of money in Mrs. Charleroi's desk and slips it under the door of Bonfil's house. The loss is discovered, and detectives are employer. They become suspicious of Marcelle and follow her to her uncle's house, where both of them are arrested. The money is found on Bontil. When Vivienne hears that her beloved Marcelle is in danger of being sent to prison, she throws herself on her father's mercy and confesses to the theft. To her great surprise, her father is very gentle with her and forgives her, telling her that in the future she shall be his pet and comrade. Mrs. Charleroi also appreciates what has happened through her neglect of her child. And the family are drawn together in a new bond of love.

THE BALANCE (March 17).—Mr. Merwin, a rich manufacturer, is a pillar of the church. Fearing that his end is near and wishing to atone for his lack of charity in the past and being very much impressed by a sermon delivered by Rev. Smug, he decides to donate a large amount of money for the benefit of the heathens. Rev. Smug is very successful in his appeal to his congregation on behalf of foreign missions. Red Mike and Curly, two crooks, read in the papers of the money that is pouring in for the benefit of the foreign missions. Believing that they could possibly use some of the money and recognizing the fact that they are heathens, they decide to rob the house of Rev. Smug. But Red Mike's woman, Madge, gets jealous of Mike's attentions to another woman. In her jealous rage, she informs the police of the intended robbery. The police lay a trap for the two crooks. Madge, truly loving her man and repenting of her action, follows Mike to the scene of the robbery. The crooks fall into the trap laid by the police. Madge helps Red Mike to escape. Mike makes his getaway all right and would have been perfectly safe, but his tender heart is touched by the appeal of a little flower girl who has been unsuccessful in selling her flowers. She tells him that her stepmother will not allow her to return home until she has at least a dollar. This good action on Mike's part, allows the police who have been pursuing to catch up with him.

There is a battle. Mike is mortally wounded and dies in Madge's arms. Merwin, the rich man, also dies. The recording angel weighs in the balance the various acts of the two dead men. Red Mike's sins have been varied and many. Merwin's sins have also been many, but always committed under the cloak of respectability. The recording angel weighs in the balance the last act in their lives. He puts the check for $50,000 donated by Mr. Merwin, in the hope of saving his soul in one scale, then counter-balances it with the crumpled dollar bill that Red Mike, the thief, gave the little girl. Knowing God's ways, he is not at all surprised to discover that the crumpled dollar bill, that Red Mike gave, outbalances by far the check for $50,000 so nobly donated by Mr. Merwin.

CHECKED THROUGH (March 6).—Kitty, an actress, is stranded in a small town, when she receives a telegram urging her to come home for her sister's wedding. She gets into her trunk and bribes the porter to take it to the station. The bridegroom is leaving from the same station and has a trunk like Kitty's. So she changes the check from his baggage to hers and is put on the train. Thus she reaches home. The ceremony takes place, and Kitty from her hiding place, plays innumerable pranks on the unhappy couple, almost alienating their affections—until she is discovered.

BILL GIVES A SMOKER ("Bill," No. 18 March 7).—Bill is addicted to cigarettes. When Mr. Hadley has been given a present of a large box of monogramed cigarettes, Bill helps himself. Later in the day, Mr. Hadley leaves his gold watch on his desk and Bill accidentally knocks it off onto the floor. He hastily takes it to the jewelers to be repaired.

Mr. Hadley misses the watch and supposes it to have been stolen. He also misses some of the monogramed cigarettes and inquires of Ethel if she knows anything about it. Bill overhears Ethel being quizzed and slyly slips his remaining cigarettes into Ethel's purse. Later he takes some more for himself and is afraid to tell of the broken watch. The police are notified and told to look for someone smoking or having in his possession the missing monogramed cigarettes.

Bill, smoking in the alley, is relieved of his cigarette by a sneak thief who is promptly arrested when seen smoking it. Ethel meets a young man and in taking out her handkerchief the hidden cigarettes fall to the ground and are appropriated by the young man who is also arrested with Ethel as an accomplice. At the office, Mr. Hadley finds Bill giving a smoker to his boy friends and the mystery of the broken watch is satisfactorily explained.

THANHOUSER.

THE MISHAPS OF MARCELINE (March 7).—Marceline is a professional window washer. He goes from store to store with his mop and pail. First he gets a job cleaning a jeweler's plate glass front, where he works havoc among the priceless valuables on display. Next he applies at a grocery, where he deluges the goods with soapy water. At last he winds up in a saloon and is set to washing the mirrors in the back bar. His ladder slips, and a hundred dollars' worth of glasses goes crashing to its ruin. Marceline is arrested and arraigned in court, where he has many other laughable adventures.

THE FINAL RECKONING (Two parts—March 9).—Florence Granger's father, Judge Granger, incurs the enmity of Pietro, an Italian, and when the Judge is found mysteriously murdered, Captain Ross of the Aqueduct police arrests the foreigner on suspicion. Unable to prove anything against him, however, Ross is obliged to release Pietro. Florence, who some time before had promised to marry the young police captain, is so chagrined at his failure to discover the slayer of her father, that she breaks her engagement to him. Disguised as an Italian girl, and aided by her perfect knowledge of the language, she contrives to hide herself in the meeting place of Pietro and his band, where she overhears him describe in detail how he murdered Judge Granger. The shock causes her to faint. This leads to her discovery and bound hand and foot, she is left by the men in care of a woman confederate. During the woman's absence from the shanty the place gets afire, and Florence barely is rescued by Captain Ross. The following day, Ross traps the Italian in dramatic fashion at the top of the aqueduct, where a fight ensues in which the captain risks his life. It is Pietro, however, who makes the mis-step, which sends him to his death at the bottom of the dam one hundred and seventy-five feet below. Florence forgives her lover.

PRINCESS.

AND HE NEVER KNEW (March 5).—Beresford, president of the National City Bank, has Rene and Kenneth for daughter and son. Rene is in love with her father's financial clerk and he with her. His lack of means, however, he feels bars him from a wealthy man's daughter. Her brother, meanwhile, brings a fortune-hunting count to the house but Rene finds him out and has him ejected. When the uncle of Boyd, the clerk, dies suddenly, Rene sees her chance. She goes to a lawyer and puts up $50,000. The lawyer then writes Boyd that his uncle has left him this sum, and he promptly proposes to Rene. The two are married. Boyd takes his wife to this same lawyer after the ceremony and says that he wants to settle his $50,000 on her. When the lawyer is about to protest, Rene gives him the wink and thus she gets man and money both.

THE EMERALD BROOCH (March 16). Hayden, diamond merchant in Denton's, the fashionable jeweler's, grabs a man for stealing a diamond ring and hauls him to the office. To his surprise the thief is set free by the proprietor who tells him that the rule of Denton's is that it is better to let a thousand thieves get away than have the public dream that such a thing as a theft is possible in Denton's establishment. He warns Hayden on this point.

A few days later a woman with a forged letter of introduction from a society women calls and wants to buy an emerald brooch. Hayden shows her one worth $15,000, and while she is looking at others, slips it into her bag. He is about to raise an alarm, but remembers his employer's reproof. So he lets her go, follows her, bound to get that brooch back somehow. On the street a pickpocket tries to steal his watch and he grabs the man. He makes him go after Mrs. Delavan and pick her bag of the brooch. Then Hayden seizes it from him, and gets it back to the store, whence he telephones Mrs. Delavan, and gloats over what he has done to her chagrin.

THE DERELICT (March 3).—Louise Wilke remarks in the hearing of Leo Holmes, her fiance, and Bruce Morgan, Leo's friend, that never could she marry a man who was a drunkard. Morgan, who is secretly Holmes's rival, at the next club dinner gets his friend under the influence of wine, and then has him receive an urgent message to go at once to Louise's home. When she sees Holmes intoxicated, Louise breaks the engagement. Morgan presses his suit. With her thoughts divided between the two young men, Louise is visited by a dream in which is shown to her a life of misery with Morgan. In her dream she sees him turn out to be a worse drunkard than Holmes, and selfish and brutal in addition. In trying to defend herself from him she kills him with a pair of shears. Holmes, a poor derelict, poking about in the refuse barrels below, hears her scream. He rushes to her rescue, taking upon himself her guilt. Louise awakes. She sends for Holmes and they are reconciled.

THE TRUTH OF FICTION (Two parts—March 8).—Following a big roundup, Rancher Burton gives the cowboys a holiday. They entertain Margaret Terry, a writer of fiction, who is in search of local color for a story with daring feats of horsemanship. During the entertainment May, the rancher's daughter, becomes jealous of the attention paid Miss Terry by Charles, and in a moment of pique, agrees to elope with Jack, the ranch foreman, to spite her lover. The authoress, returning to the ranchhouse, is in time to intercept the impulsive May.

In the meantime the sheriff arrives with papers for the arrest of Jack on a charge of wife abandonment and cattle stealing in another state. Jack escapes. Returning to her studio, Miss Terry uses her observations at the ranch as the theme for a novel using Charles as the hero and May and the foreman as two characters, calling the story "A Game of Three." Copies of the first edition arrive at the ranch and both Charles and May in reading them find visualized in the pages of the story their own love affair, and they are brought together.

THE ECHO (March 10).—To regain her health, Violet, the young daughter of a rich man, is sent to the country where she forms a childish attraction for John, the eleven-year-old son of the farmer at whose house she is left. While exploring the surrounding country her curiosity is aroused by hearing an echo which John explains is the voice of an illusive woman who lives over the ferry. They plan a trip in search of this mysterious woman which proves to be one long remembered, although its purpose is not accomplished, for John with the simplicity of youth on this day tells her he loves her. On their return to the farmhouse they find the father waiting to take Violet back to the city. A proceeding which nearly breaks both their hearts.

A few days later John is happy in the possession of his first love letter written in the childish hand of Violet in which she states that when she grows up she will return and marry him. As the years go by John becomes the village schoolmaster and Violet a reigning society belle with many suitors. Among the latter is an elderly nobleman who, on account of misfortune and title, has been selected by her father as a future husband. While walking along a rocky shore the nobleman proposes and is rejected. Angered and disgusted he calls for the chauffeur of the car from which they have alighted. The girl hearing the echo becomes conscious of the only happy period of her life and not daring to tell her father she pens a note, packs her things and flees to the country, where she again meets her childhood lover and finds happiness although her father disinherits her.

THE TWO SENTENCES (Two parts—March 15).—By winning a lawsuit against the Traction Company, Jim Rodgers, a country lawyer, attracts the attention of Ford, a city attorney defending the suit, who persuades Jim to turn to a city practice assuring him he will become famous. Jim's sweetheart, Helen Wade, promises to wait for him, but during his absence another young man, Tom Carter, wins her love not knowing she was betrothed, and when Jim returns he arrives just as the happy pair are leaving the church as man and wife. Jim's whole life is ruined so far as love and women are concerned.

Devoting all his efforts to his practice, Jim quickly mounts the ladder of success, becoming a judge of the Criminal Court and is called on to try Tom Carter on a charge of assault to kill. Tom is found guilty and Helen, knowing that Jim can sentence her husband to from one to twenty years, calls on the judge asking that he have pity and make the sentence only one year. Jim asks her why he should do so when she had not hesitated to give Jim a life sentence. He sends her away telling her she will hear his decision the next day in court. Tom is sentenced to twenty years but no sooner has the sentence been pronounced than Jim repents. His decision preys on his mind and the vision of Tom in prison is always before him, until he prays for a way to undo what he has done.

Two years later he becomes a candidate for governor with his whole heart set on winning, thereby securing the power to pardon Tom. Helen, thinking that Jim is striving for the governorship only, vows that he shall not be elected, even if she has to disgrace herself by circulating reports that will not only kill his chances but ruin his reputation as well. Election day when the other candidates seem certain of winning, Helen informs Jim that she is the one who has worked for his defeat. As-

COMPETITION (March 17).—Farmer Stubbs does not approve of his daughter at all when she returns from school dressed in the latest fashion. When the most prosperous farmer in Pike County proposes and is rejected he approves much less of her and decides to put her to work.

Jim Daley, a city sweetheart, is on his way to propose to her. He hopes the parents will approve as his raising has made him utterly against elopement. He arrives at an inopportune time and is refused with more dispatch than courtesy. The old man asserts that his daughter will marry a farmer or no one. Things are despondent when a bright idea strikes Jim. He decides to lease the adjacent farm, disguise himself as a farmer and by competition bring not only Dad but Josh to his terms.

After a month or two Jos and Dad offer to buy him out to get rid of him, such inroads has he made into their dairy business. He brings them to his terms and then adds that the consent of the old man to the marriage of Myra will be thrown in. This does not displease the old man so much as he thinks he is giving her to a prosperous farmer. He is bowled over when his son-in-law discloses his identity, but he has to accept the situation.

THE DOCTOR'S STRATEGY (March 9).—Objecting to Jack Bedford's attentions to his daughter, Lucy, Mr. Jones drives the would-be son-in-law from his estate, in the presence of young Dr. Glow, Jack's friend, and prepares a will disinheriting Lucy if she ever marries him. Dr. Glow offers a plan to break the father's power of resistance by the use of mental suggestion. To do this a conspiracy is formed involving Lucy, her mother, and the father's work-day associates, even the janitor. Next morning, Lucy's reference to her father's sickly appearance spoils the old breakfast. On his way to the office, other conspirators are concerned about his "looking badly," but when his office help and the janitor advise seeing a doctor, he becomes convinced that his case is deplorable. Fortunately he picks out Dr. Glow who diagnoses his malady as "slopecia," an incurable disease and orders him to bed at once. Still Jack's condolences are rejected, whereupon he prepares and delivers letters from undertakers and florists soliciting business. These letters have the desired effect and when the doctor confides that Jack has a secret cure for the dread malady, he is sent for, the will is changed in Lucy's favor and a father's consent to the marriage is received. After the marriage and when Jack and Lucy are on their honeymoon the father discovers that "slopecia" the supposed incurable disease is nothing more than "dandruff." Unable to control his anger at being "stung" he vows vengeance on the head of the conspirators and we leave him waiting at the doctor's office gun in hand.

IN THE MANSION OF LONELINESS (Mar. 16).—Although surrounded by every luxury, Mrs. Lane longs for the companionship of little children, but being childless and on account of her husband's dislike for the annoying "brats," she can only watch the neighborhood children. One day she notes that the children have been driven away by her own butler, and seeking the cause, is told by her husband that he does not intend to be annoyed by noisy children.

Soon after Lane is called out of town by the illness of a dear friend. In his absence his wife sees the opportunity to satisfy her love for children and arranges a party for them each day until her husband's return. Reaching the bedside of his friend, Lane finds him dying. As a last request the sick man asks that Jim accept the guardianship of his six-year-old daughter and raise her as his own. Astounded, Lane is about to assert his abhorrence for children, when the little girl climbs upon his knee and, putting her arms around his neck, endorses her father's approval by a kiss. The child's affection strikes a tender chord in Lane's character. Without notifying his wife he brings his future ward to his home, and unexpectedly discovers his wife in the midst of a merry throng of children, who she is entertaining in her boudoir. The startled wife, expecting an outburst of rage, is surprised when her husband, leading her to his study, presents his little companion and explains the situation.

KAY-BEE.

THE GIRL WHO MIGHT HAVE BEEN (Two Parts—March 12).—Daisy Wellington, a dance-hall girl, becomes broken in health, having contracted a slight affection of the lungs, and is dismissed by the proprietor as being of no more use to him. Daisy is heart-broken, as the dance hall has been her home and sole means of support for almost as long as she can remember, and she has no place to go to.

As she stands in the street crying bitterly, George Fowler, a prospector, comes along and on learning of her plight, offers her a home with him in his cabin in the mountains. Daisy gratefully accepts this offer and returns to the mountains with George, where the mountain air and wholesome life restore her shattered health. Daisy learns to love George, but he is wholly absorbed getting enough "dust" to enable him to send for his wife. At last this is done but the stage on which his gold goes out is robbed. George has gone on a short prospecting trip and Daisy is informed of the loss. She determines to repay the debt she feels she owes him and returns to the dance hall, where she succeeds in gathering enough spoils to replace the money lost by George. This she sends to George's wife. On the day of his wife's arrival, George goes happily forth to meet her. He tells Daisy that he wants her to stay and live with them as one of the family, but she, realizing this would not be possible or right, leaves during his absence.

THE WELLS OF PARADISE (Two Parts—March 10).—Widow Dolan and her son, Tom, fall for the scheme of a real estate dealer and trade the old homestead for 1,000 acres of barren country in Paradise, Cal. Upon arrival they find they have been swindled, but being very poor, they determine to make the best of it. They strike oil on the premises and become wealthy. Marley has the section adjoining. The widow Dolan dams up the creek to seek revenge on Marley and his cattle die. A battle ensues between the ranchers of Marley and the widow's men, in which the latter are repulsed and Tom Dolan is wounded. The dam is released and the cattle are saved. Meanwhile Alice Madley returns to Paradise from boarding school. She picks up the wounded Tom. A love affair ensues and they are married in spite of the opposition of their parents.

Years elapse. The couple have a child. The old people, grieving for their children, return to the cottage where they live and a reunion takes place between them.

DOMINO.

SATAN McALLISTER'S HEIR (Two Parts—March 11).—Satan McAllister, a wealthy ranchman, generally feared and hated for his cruelty and bullying ways, objects to Bob Ellis taking up a claim adjoining his ranch. He visits Ellis and tells him to get out or take the consequences—death. Ellis refuses to leave and when McAllister again visits his home and finds him there, he is wild with rage. While he is threatening Ellis and his wife, Dolly, their little daughter overhears him. She takes an instant dislike to him and when he kicks her pet puppy, Rags, she hits him in the eye with a stone. She is so absolutely unafraid of him and so bitter against him that McAllister's admiration is aroused. For her sake he does not insist that Ellis leave, but the two men remain bitter enemies.

A dry spell falls over the section and Ellis' cattle, crazed by thirst, wander afar. The efforts of both Ellis and his wife are required to trace them and Dolly is left alone in the cabin. Her dog, Rags, runs away and in following him she is lost. Ellis, in his sorrow, appeals to McAllister to help find her, and because of his love for the little girl, McAllister consents. He strays away from the rest of the searching party and with the dawn finds Dolly and her dog, exhausted and fast asleep. The meeting results in her forgiving him.

On his way back with the little girl, McAllister is ambushed by a small band of drunken Indians. He realizes he cannot make the settlement and sacrifices his chances that the girl may live. Binding her and the dog to a horse he sends them down the ravine while he holds the Indians at bay. His ammunition exhausted he hides in a cave but is found and mortally wounded. Dolly reaches the settlement in safety and when the rescuing party arrive at the cave they find McAllister dead with the body of the Indian who shot him, lying close by. On the wall, traced in rough characters on the stone, is his last will in which he leaves everything he owns to Dolly Ellis, his friend.

THE BLACK BOX (Two parts)—Episode No. 1—The Apartment House Case—March 8).—Installment number one introduces Lord John Ashleigh of Hamblin House, Dorset, England. In compliance with the advice of her teacher, Lord and Lady Ashleigh have decided to send their only child, Ella, to New York, for the season. The girl's one ambition in life is to study music. Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Raleigh have agreed to chaperon the girl in the American metropolis. As a final gift Lord Ashleigh presents his daughter with the famous Ashleigh diamond necklace. As Lord and Lady Ashleigh cannot leave England at the present time, they send Lenora, Ella's personal attendant, and the maid's husband, Ian MacDougal, butler at Hamblin House, to accompany the girl to New York. Six months pass delightfully for the young Englishwoman. At last she is having her fill of music. Next morning the hotel at which they are staying is aroused by Leonora's wild shrieks of alarm. The hallmen, rushing in, find Ella's body upon the floor and the famous diamonds missing. The maid is hysterical. Inspector French, of the police detectives, is called but can make nothing of the affair. He calls in the services of Sanford Quest. The criminologist traps the maid into an expression of terror and informs her that she must go to his office. She tries to communicate with MacDougal, but Quest interferes.

By means of hypnotism Quest draws from the girl a confession that the crime was committed by MacDougal, that he took the jewels and that she was to meet him, and escape with him to South America. Satisfied by her story and manner that she is merely a tool of the stronger-minded MacDougal, Quest turns the girl loose, after commanding her to return to his study with the jewels at 7 p. m.

She joins MacDougal in their rendezvous. Quest has tracked her and, by means of a trap, is thrown by MacDougal into the cellar. Then the villain turns on a poisonous gas to stifle the criminologist. The power of Quest's suggestion comes over the receptive mind of Lenora. She mechanically obeys his order, takes up the jewels and leaves the rendezvous, going straight to his study. MacDougal has discovered her absence and that of the jewels. He suspects that he has been double-crossed and swears he will get her yet, since Quest is done for. But Quest is not done for. He has a little instrument in his hand attached by wires to capsules of Anishidyte. Anishidyte's most valuable quality is that it exerts a tremendous force only in the direction towards which it is pointed. By the aid of this explosive Quest escapes and returns to his office to find Lenora already there. Seeing she is an excellent subject, he ventures another experiment: that of electro-thought transference.

Before a highly sensitized mirror he seats the girl and gently puts her in a state of hypnosis. A paper-thin steel band is fitted around her temples. This band is connected through a series of coils with the mirror by a fine wire, through which runs a high charge of electricity. The hypnosis induces perfect mental concentration. The criminologist then commands the girl to observe by means of telepathy what MacDougal is doing. Anxiously, Quest watches the mirror. For a moment nothing happens. Then its surface seems ruffled and slowly there emerges from the grayness a scene showing the interior of a low groggery.

MacDougal enters, confers with the proprietor and is directed to a room where, for a little while, he can be safe from the police. In the little attic MacDougal throws down his hat and swears by all the gods he knows to get even with Lenora. The experiment is finished. Quest quickly brings the girl back to full consciousness and turns her over to his assistant, Laura.

A week passes. MacDougal threatens Lenora in a note and Quest decides to draw him at once into the trap. Hypnotizing the girl he bids her lay her head upon her arms on his table. From the window he has seen MacDougal approach stealthily. Quest and his men apparently leave the house. MacDougal creeps in. He sees the bowed figure in the half-light bringing a heavy blackjack down upon the head of the figure. The next instant the lights flash up. MacDougal is handcuffed and Lenora, frightened and trembling, is led in from another room.

MacDougal stares at her, his throat contracting. Then he looks toward the table. A detective is picking up the dummy figure. The black wig drops to the floor. A steel rod shows above the dummy hand. MacDougal, the clever criminal, has been caught by a trick.

Lord Ashleigh arrives to find his daughter's slayer in the law's hands. He demands also the arrest of Lenora as an accomplice of MacDougal, but Quest, knowing well the American law, that a wife cannot testify against her husband, and wishing to keep the girl as an assistant, persuades Lord Ashleigh that she was only a tool of the real criminal.

And down in South America Prof. Edgar Ashleigh, anthropologist, a twin brother of Lord John, is caring for his fever-stricken servant, John Craig. Their researches, through the dense jungles have led them into dangerous climates and Craig has succumbed. Ashleigh decides that the man will not die and leaves him alone for a moment. The fever-crazed brain has but one thought, apparently. Cunningly waiting till the scientist has gone from the tent, the servant feels under his pillow and brings out a small black box. With glazed eyes staring, he fondles the box and then hides it once more.

THE BLACK BOX (Installment No. 2—March 15—"The Hidden Hands"—Two Parts).—The weeks have passed. Ian MacDougal's trial for the slaying of Ella Ashleigh has not occupied the court for long. The hour is set for sentence. Lord Ashleigh and his twin brother, Edgar, are leaving the latter's home in Yonkers, for the anthropologist hastened back to the United States when he heard of his niece's cruel death. Alike in every respect physically, save that Edgar is clean-shaven, the two brothers have been close friends since boyhood. Lord Ashleigh is higher strung, more warm-blooded; Edgar, the typical scientist and explorer, keen in every way, while in the open, slightly stooped, thoughtful, and studious.

Edgar's body servant, John Craig, has come, through long service and close companionship, to be more of an intimate than is accorded to most English servants. The man has a secretive, almost furtive air which might alarm anyone less suspicious than the simple, sincere scholar. After the brothers leave, Craig comes to the library with the small black box in his hand. MacDougal is sentenced to life imprisonment and taken away to prison. Quest meets Prof. Ashleigh with warm expressions of friendliness, for the two had known each other in years gone by.

Upon returning to his home, Edgar Ashleigh finds a message from the manager of the American Museum. The message says that the skeleton of an anthropoid ape which Ashleigh had sent to the museum for safe keeping has been stolen. Ashleigh is greatly agitated and calls in Quest's services. Lenora finds on the window sill a small bone which Ashleigh pronounces the minor digit of the ape's right hand. Not long after this Ashleigh is invited to attend a reception at the home of Mrs. Bruce Reinholdt, whose son was a former pupil of the anthropologist. A storm blows up and Craig comes to the house with Ashleigh's raincoat. A footman invites the servant to have a bit of supper in the pantry and later sends him out through the conservatory and garden gate, saving quite a distance.

Five minutes later Mrs. Reinholdt, who has been alone in the reception room, hysterically shrieks that two hands have floated out of midair and wrenched from her throat a wonderful necklace which all of the guests had been freely admiring. No trace of the robber is found and Quest is summoned at Ashleigh's suggestion. Outside the garden gate Craig crouches listening to the hubbub inside. Then a look of white fear appears on his face and he rushes away. Quest can make nothing from the hysterical woman's words, as she maintains that the hands which stole her necklace had no body.

Meanwhile, in a strange little hut, a weird character is being drawn in by the weaving tentacles of the black box. Heavily built, his great limbs hang loosely together. He is hairy, and with his jaw primitively undershot the man is a wild, uncouth figure. Gibberingly, he talks to the chained leopard and tiny monkeys who are his companions, waiting until his cue shall be called. And while he waits a mysterious hand serves him with food. Lenora is no longer safe from her wrathful husband, for Ian MacDougal bested his guard on the way to the penitentiary and escaped from the rapidly moving train. Craig, some terrible fear urging him on, wanders about the city until at last he drifts into a Salvation Army hall where a pretty lassie is pleading with the sinners to confess. But as he drops to his knees some awful force seems to grasp him by the throat.

KRITERION SERVICE.

(The following are synopses of the pictures to be released on the Kriterion Program during the week of Monday, March 8, to Saturday, March 13, inclusive).

HOTEL DE HOBO (C K).—Percy de Gink decides to give the Hotel de Hobo a trial. He registers and is shown to his room by the head bellboy. Well satisfied with the interior of his future domain, he looks out of the window to observe his outside surroundings. He is soon absorbed in watching an old maid across the way relieving herself of several interesting articles of her wearing apparel, but she catches him spying and hurls a pitcher at him. He is just about to get back at her when somebody above drops a bottle on de Gink's projecting head and he quickly withdraws to safety. Percy then desires a bath but when he reaches the bathroom he finds Harold de Hobo has beat him to it, and has fallen asleep in the tub. He throws a wet sponge in his face, but Harold resents such harsh treatment and chases Percy. They run into a scrubwoman who throws her pail of water at them.

After this excitement, Percy returns to his room, and looks out of the window to get some air. Three bottles of beer standing in a row on the windowsill below catch his eye. He gets an idea. Tying one end of the sheet to the bed post and the other to his left foot, he lowers himself out of the window, head first, reaches out for the beer and soon empties the bottles. But he doesn't know how to get back to his room, and there he hangs in midair all night. Next morning, Harold sees him there and saws the sheet from the bed post, whereupon Percy drops into the snow on top of a sleeping policeman. The cop chases him, but has a hard time catching Percy. De Gink stops to call up the fire department, and merrily continues on his way, but at last the cop catches him and treats him to a good walloping.

BILLY'S SCOOP (Santa Barbara).—Billy is employed in the office of the "Daily Howler." He is entrusted with a special assignment but fails to turn in his "copy" on time, the lapse from duty being caused by a charming girl, the daughter of a mighty local magnate, whom Billy has wooed and won, and through whom he forgets the care of the office. The following day Billy loses his job. He learns that his former boss is making strenuous efforts to obtain "copy" from the millionaire father of his sweetheart. The millionaire has stood off the beseiging pressmen with the aid of a stalwart gardener. The latter, armed with a hose, has deluged the reporters with great liberality and Billy, happening on the scene on one of these occasions, is apprised of the fact that a big "scoop" is to be had from the father of his girl. Knowing that the old man will not stand for an interview, and not desiring to share the fate of his fellow-reporters, Billy obtains a complete fireman's outfit, which he dons and thus fortified, he storms the citadel. Billy wrestles with the gardener and takes the offending hose away from him. He turns the water on the reporters, the gardener and finally holds the millionaire up at the nozzle of the hose until he obtains from him the items which go to make one of the biggest scoops of the season. Billy proudly turns his "copy" in to his former boss and is immediately re-engaged.

The millionaire learns from his daughter that the daring young pressman who so cleverly held him up and succeeded where so many others had failed, is her lover. After a momentary fit of anger, Billy is sent for. He and the victim of the ruse meet. The millionaire looks from the glowing face of his daughter to the expectant Billy, and finally extends his arms to both.

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY (Punchinello).—Mrs. Spreckles makes a huckleberry pie and decides that she will take it to the city and give it to her daughter whom she intends visiting. When she gets there she finds her daughter is not at home, so, leaving directions and the pie with her daughter's maid, she goes out on a shopping tour.

It happens that Mr. Crum, Mrs. Spreckles' son-in-law, after somewhat of a tiff with his wife, has sought solace to such an extent that he arrives home somewhat unsteady on his legs. He rummages about the apartment and involves himself to such a degree with the pie that he breaks it all to pieces and covers himself with the juice. Then he goes to sleep.

Mrs. Crum arrives home and finds her husband supposedly blood-covered, and naturally assumes it is suicide. The maid hears her lamentations, sees her also daubed with the pie juice and, waving a paper knife, and concludes that she has committed the murder. The police are summoned, but before they take Mrs. Crum off to jail, Mrs. Spreckles arrives. She examines the "corpse" and discovers that the blood is only huckleberry juice, whereupon Mrs. Crum is cleared of the murder.

SYD'S BUSY DAY (Alhambra).—Dan gets a letter advising him of the arrival of Lizzie, who is to marry him in order to inherit some money left them. He leaves the letter on the table and goes to meet her.

A wire from Lizzie arrives which says she will leave earlier and come direct to the house. The butler gets the telegram, opens it, sees the letter which tells of a fortune and decides to impersonate Dan and cop the girl, who has never seen Dan. He does so and serious complications follow, in which Mag, the butler's self-appointed affinity, takes a heavy hand. Things fairly hum till Dan returns and finally the two conspirators, as well as the love-sick Mag, land in a convenient fountain.

THE SKEIN OF LIFE (Paragon—Two Parts).—George Crews, struggling young architect, and Fred Stevens, a poor lawyer, have been friends since boyhood. Stevens and Grace Martin, an orphan, have been engaged for several years, but are unable to marry on account of their poverty. Grace has since ceased caring for Stevens and prefers George, but, although he is deeply in love with the girl, George conceals his feelings out of friendship for Stevens. Stevens is unexpectedly left heir to $10 000 and rushes to tell his friends of his good fortune. Arriving at the Crews cottage, he finds Grace in Crew's arms. In a rage, he leaves them and on his return home, suffers a severe stroke. A doctor who is summoned gives him but a few days to live. Thereupon, Stevens conceives of a diabolic plot. In a final effort he dresses and writes a note which he places in the box where he has his money and buries it in a vacant lot. He suffers a second stroke on his return and George is sent for. He gives George a chart and tells him of the buried money, and soon after dies.

On his return home, George meets Ryder, a wealthy builder, who gives him his first commission for work. George eagerly throws off his coat and enters into a discussion of the plans. His grandmother, who is knitting nearby, picks up the folded chart and uses it as a foundation to roll a ball of yarn over. Later, George searches in vain for the chart and finally gives up looking for the money. Work is commenced on the new building and a laborer, while digging, discovers the box. He opens it just as George and Ryder come over to superintend the work and an explosion occurs, wherein the laborer is killed, thus meeting the fate intended for George. A letter found among the fragments leaves Stevens' money to Grace, but it is not so necessary now, as Ryder has given George large orders and he is now in a position to marry Grace.

THE BROKEN GLASS (Santa Barbara—Two Parts).—The murderer of Craig MacDonald, a wealthy bachelor, is discovered by Jack Wright, a sculptor, some months after the police have arrested and the State has sentenced to death his chum, Malcolm, Craig's nephew.

Circumstantial evidence pointed strongly to Malcolm. He was known to have been in urgent need of money and to have quarreled with his uncle about his debts the night of the murder, and to have used threatening language; to have been much disturbed by the announcement the same evening at a house party given by Craig, of the latter's engagement to Geraldine, a society girl, since the marriage would mean not only a new interest for his uncle but the legal invalidating of the latter's will which made Malcolm his heir, and lastly, because he was found beside his dead uncle's body with the knife in his hand.

Geraldine is in reality an adventuress in league with St .Clair. The pair are in imminent danger of arrest unless they can raise a large sum of money immediately to cover a "phony" check ,they have passed. Geraldine has seen a large package of bills in Craig's safe and has taken advantage of her stay in his house during the party to attempt to steal the money, and, being discovered, she accidentally kills Craig while trying to escape without recognition. Inadvertently she left a thumb print behind her and Wright ingeniously trapped her into making another one with her subsequent confession. Malcolm is brought from the shadow of death into the sunlight and to his waiting sweetheart.

LOVE'S VENDETTA (Two Parts—Monty).—Richard Cameron, a wealthy broker, idolizes his daughter, Muriel, granting her every whim. One day while out in her car, she accidentally meets Jim Bannister, a young gambler, and love at first sight results. Her father suddenly meets with financial difficulties and through the aid of his valet, gets admission into a fashionable gambling club, of which young Bannister is the head. He loses steadily. Muriel, who is giving a party, is worried over the non-appearance of her father, and confides her anxiety to her maid. The maid prevails on the valet to go for Cameron, but when he arrives at the gambling resort, the broker has just about lost everything.

Cameron, now desperate and heartbroken at not being able to supply his daughter with the luxuries she has been accustomed to, reaches out for a gun which he sees in Bannister's hip pocket and attempts to shoot himself, but Bannister sees the act and tries to prevent the tragedy with the result that, in the scuffle Cameron succeeds in accomplishing his purpose and drops to the floor dead. Shortly after the house is raided and the valet, Bannister and the gamblers make their escape. Just then Muriel and her maid arrive and Bannister, recognizing her as the girl he saw in the park, resolves to change his mode of life, and goes West to seek his fortune along better lines. Muriel swears she will never let up until she has found the slayer of her father.

Two years elapse and Muriel is obliged to support herself by selling books. One day she calls at the offices of Bannister, who has now returned from the West and is a successful business man. He recognizes her as the girl whom he met and has never forgotten. Due to the beard he has grown, she does not know who he is, but gradually she falls in love with him. One day while calling on her, he avows his love. She tells him that although she loves him, too, she cannot marry him until she has found and avenged her father's death. He tells her he will help her clear the mystery. In the meantime, the valet who has fallen down to the dregs of life, turns up and annoys his old sweetheart, the maid, who has stayed with Muriel ever since. Muriel tells Bannister about it. This gives him a clew. He hunts up and finds the valet, persuades him to come and tell the true facts to the police regarding the accidental shooting. Bannister tells Muriel that he will turn over the man who owned the gun to her on the morrow. He gets himself arrested as a suspect and before being taken to jail, phones her to come to the trial. When she sees her lover on the dock accused of killing her father, Muriel is heartbroken, but the testimony of the valet soon clears up everything and proves her lover entirely innocent.

KIDNAPPED (Two Parts—Trump).—While a son is born to Joseph Conway, he is overjoyed. Not so his cousin, Dr. Brennan, who, by the advent of the child, has been kept out of a fortune which would ultimately have come to him. The doctor talks over his ill luck with his housekeeper, a hard, grim woman, who suggests getting the child out of the way. Being in financial difficulties, the doctor calls on Conway to borrow some money which his cousin gladly consents to do, and accompanies him to a bank so he can get the cash immediately. Before they reach the bank, however, Conway is run down by an auto and taken to the doctor's house. Here the housekeeper gets hold of him and before Dr. Brennan realizes what has happened, poisons him. The housekeeper then calmly suggests to the shocked doctor that the baby now alone remains between him and the fortune.

Dr. Brennan, apparently, in all sympathy for the bereaved Mrs. Conway, suggests her going to a hotel in the suburbs with her baby to get over her grief and tells her he will accompany her. The hotel has been annoyed by sneak thieves and a woman detective, Miss Kate Graham, has been employed. The coast being clear, one evening, the doctor kidnaps the baby and hides it in a dog bag which he carries away the next morning and delivers over to the housekeeper. Her suspicions being aroused, Kate gets on the job and traces a tag which came from the bag to the doctor. She succeeds in rescuing the child after several thrilling experiences, one of which culminates in the accidental death of the housekeeper and brings the baby to Mrs. Conway, who is being comforted by her false relative. Kate confronts him with his guilt and he is not strong enough to deny it. The mother and child are reunited and Kate is showered with thanks.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A SNEEZE (Pyramid).—At the Hotel Unrest there have been numerous thefts made by a man masquerading in women's attire and a reward of $25 for his capture is posted in the lobby. Sniffins, one of the bellboys, makes up his mind to win it. Among the arrivals on the 4.26 train are an old maid and her cat and a young married couple. Through a porter's stupidity, their suit cases get mixed, but the mistake is not discovered until the young husband has a violent sneezing fit in his room. Wifey opens one of the suitcases, and finds it contains woman's apparel. She insists her husband put on the flannel wrapper which he does and then their telephone rings and she is told a friend of hers is waiting to see her downstairs. Giving hubby a bottle of medicine, which he agrees to take, she goes down to see her friend. Not finding a spoon in the room, hubby phones for one and Sniffins brings it up. The husband, realizing his costume is a peculiar one, hides in the closet and tells the boy to come in. Sniffins sees the woman's apparel in the suit case and catches a glimpse of hubby in the flannel wrapper. That is enough! He tells the clerk that he has discovered the burglar. Then the pursuit starts. They go from room to room, collecting the occupants, even the old maid and her cat. Finally, hubby is caught and about to get a "beating up" when wifey appears and the tangle is unraveled.

PRINTING U. S. STAMPS.—On the same reel as the foregoing is an educational picture depicting how Uncle Sam prints his stamps.

THE BOND OF FRIENDSHIP (Two Parts—Alhambra).—Jack Benton, superintendent of the Knowlton Construction Company, and his chum, Dick Aves, go to meet the president of the company and his daughter, Jean, who have called on a visit of inspection. While viewing the scenery from a high bluff, the girl loses her balance and falls over the edge. Jack and Dick secure a rope and go to her rescue, but the weight of the two men threatens to split the rope, so to save his friends, Jack cuts it just above him and drops to the ground below, where Jean lies.

Following the accident, Jack proposes to Jean and is accepted. Dick, who has just learned from the president that he is to supersede Jack, who is to be sent East, rushes into the room just in time to hear Jean's acceptance of Jack's proposal. Although he loves Jean himself, he hides his bitterness and makes the best of things for the sake of friendship. Jack and Jean are married and go East to live.

Five years elapse. Jack is so engrossed in business matters that he thoughtlessly neglects his wife. Jean feels this keenly but says nothing. A letter from Dick arrives, saying that at last he will have a vacation and is coming East to visit them. Dick arrives and soon takes in the situation. He and Jean are left in each other's company a great deal and gradually an intimacy grows between them, and Jean confides in him of her husband's neglect. One evening Dick suggests they go to a theater, but Jack declines to go along, telling them to go without him. Something about their attitude, as Dick helps Jean on with her wrap, causes Jack a momentary twinge of jealousy, but he returns to his den and is soon wrapped up in his books. Finally he falls asleep and dreams that he receives warning from a friend to the effect that Dick and Jean are planning to elope. Jack rushes to the place his friend said the two were to be found and a tragedy results. Later, Jack awakens, but the vivid memory of the dream clings to him. Dick and Jean return from the theater and Jack, realizing the possible ending of his continued neglect, goes to Jean with the promise of a different life.

COUSIN FLUFFY (Thistle).—Frank and Billy pull a big party while their wives are in the mountains on a vacation. The wives, however, tire of the lonesome resort and decide to return home and surprise their husbands. Meanwhile Frank and Billy have met Rena, a well-known actress, and are giving the dinner of their lives, when their wives walk in. Frank's wife, however, recognizes in Rena a long-lost cousin, which saves the situation for the boys.

THE SORORITY SISTER (Kriterion—Two Parts).—Every girl in a fashionable finishing school belongs to one of two rival sororities. The membership is equal in numbers until a new girl arrives, and she is snapped up by the Eta Betas. Marian Whiteman, an heiress and president of the Nu Pi, is informed of this and seeks a way to add another member to her own bunch to even things up. She has an idea when she sees Judy, the Swedish maid, cleaning her room. She slips Judy some money and tells her to go to the city, buy some clothes and come back and enter the seminary as a pupil. This appeals to Judy and she does so, not even telling Fritz, the janitor, of her intention.

When Judy returns she is not recognized by anyone. Marian takes her in charge, pledges her to Nu Pi, and fearing her Swedish dialect will give her away, orders her not to speak to a soul until she is initiated. Judy obeys. The Eta Betas are consequently much jealous of the new Nu Pi and keep a close eye on the Nu Pi girls to seek a chance to gum their initiation ceremonies. Fritz, the janitor, is called in to aid the Nu Pi bunch the night of their initiation and banquet. He smuggles in the eats for them. One of the Eta Betas sees him enter Marian's room and meeting Marian's sweetheart, later tells him for a joke that there is a man calling on Marian. Jack becomes jealous and climbs the fire escape to investigate. Fritz and the girls hear him coming, think he is the principal and all hide. When Jack enters the room, all he finds is Fritz's hat which lends color to his suspicions. He, in turn, hides under the bed to await developments.

The girls believe the intruder has left and go on with the initiation and banquet, forgetting Fritz cooped up in the wardrobe. All goes well until Fritz sees Judy eat, recognizes a familiar mannerism in the way she wields her knife and comes forth to greet her. Jack sees Fritz and thinks he has found his rival. He emerges from beneath the bed and the fight is on. The Eta Betas gather in the hall to enjoy the mixup. It finally winds up in the bathroom with Fritz in the tub and the water running and then Marian explains to Jack while Judy rescues Fritz. Meanwhile, the principal has heard the row and comes to investigate. The four of them, Jack, Marian, Judy and Fritz, have barely time to climb out and down the fire escape, when the principal enters. While she surveys the wrecked suite, the two couples seek a minister, where a double ceremony is quickly performed.

WAS HE A COWARD? (Multiple Reels).—Mr. Crawford, tired of meeting the ever-increasing bills contracted by his spendthrift son, Barney, orders him from his home. He embarks on a tempestuous career and is ultimately enmeshed in the clutches of the law for pocket-picking, and confined in jail. Barney makes a spectacular escape and returns to his old haunts. While in a Chinatown resort, he prevents the robbery of Lois Jordan, who, with a party of friends, is sightseeing. She is the pampered daughter of a millionaire mining man. In the fray that follows, Barney is shot. Mr. Jordan, the girl's father, takes him to a hospital, and while there during his confinement, Lois frequently visits him.

Barney determines to turn over a new leaf and lead an honorable life, and, on his recovery, departs, leaving no clue as to his whereabouts. Despondent at his futile effort to find work, he meanders along Marble Hill Bridge, when he sees a woman fall overboard. He plunges into the stream and brings her safely to shore. Among the spectators are Lois and her father, who greet him cordially and invite him home with them. Jordan gives him a position in his office. The friendship between Lois and Barney ripens into love. Storms, a clerk in the same office and an inveterate gambler, has been systematically tapping the safe. When Jordan discovers his losses, Storms lays the blame on Barney, who vehemently denies his guilt. A detective is sent for, and Barney, recognizing him as the one who arrested him before, jumps from the window, followed by the detective. Barney is captured and taken to the Jordan home. In the meantime, Storms, in the shadow of impending death, confesses his guilt. Jordan gleefully informs the detective of this, to free Barney, as he is innocent.

The officer refuses, explaining that Barney is an escaped convict and must serve his term. Through the entire ordeal, Lois steadfastly remains true. Barney is remanded to prison, and Lois is ordered to forget him. During his incarceration Barney's father and mother visit him and forgive him. Barney is pardoned. Upon regaining his liberty the first thing he does is to visit Lois. They are in one another's arms when Jordan enters and bids Barney to leave his house. Barney departs sadly, and in reflection he realizes the selfish motives which prompt him in asking Lois to sacrifice her home to become the wife of a discredited outcast and a social pariah. Meditating as to what course to pursue, his moral sense convinces him of the gross iniquity to urge her to leave her present surroundings. A note arrives from Lois, asking him to come to her immediately, protesting her love and desire to go with him. Finding her waiting and ready to leave, his inner conscience rises and asserts itself, professing himself to be unworthy of her, and, against her pleadings, he departs, while Lois is sobbing bitterly. Was this the act of a coward?

THE HIGH HAND (Favorite Players—Six Parts).—Up through the din and murk of the steel works, up by brawn and brain until he took his place behind the superintendent's desk came Jim Warren, but his heart was still with the strugglers in the glare of the furnaces. Here he had time to think and here he conceived the "big idea." The "big idea" required an established political position and he started out to get it.

Francques, the henchman of Lewis, the political boss, saw in the young reformer a tool through which he could treacherously ruin his superior. Warren was running for the legislature as well as Lewis, and fortified with incriminating evidence against his opponent supplied by Francques, Warren entered the field as an independent candidate and was elected. Lewis took his defeat calmly and made friendly overtures to the newly elected member. Through the influence of Lewis, Warren was invited to visit the speaker of the House, Mr. Tillinghast.

E. R. ANDERSON made the Original Gold Fibre Screen.

GOLD FIBRE SCREENS have been in use in motion picture theatres for the last five years and so notable has been their success that the finest theatres of the kind the world over now use this projection surface.

THE STRAND THEATRE, admittedly the most wonderful motion picture theatre in the World, spent $1,000,000 to give New York City a perfect motion picture house. The Strand has a Gold Fibre Screen.

THE MINUSA GOLD FIBRE SCREEN the result of years of research in chemistry and the properties of the projected light ray on the part of Mr. Anderson, is even an improvement on the screen with which The Strand is so well satisfied.

SCREENS get dirty. Wash MINUSA with soap and water as you would your hands.

PROJECTION SURFACE figures in the "juice" bills. MINUSA cuts the "juice" bills from twenty-five to thirty-three per cent.

SEAMS in a screen show up. MINUSA is all one piece.

EMPTY front seats cost money. MINUSA in your house means that the front seat is as desirable as the one in the middle of the house. With MINUSA there is no eyestrain.

MONEY and MINUSA are analogous—to the exhibitor.

No. 300 North Broadway Saint Louis, Mo.

Here he was introduced to the girl of his life; the girl he had first seen, as a curious child visitor at the steel works. Several other times fate brought them together. It had been a secret love and he was astounded when he learned from her own lips that she was engaged to marry Lewis.

Lewis' wedding to Edna was to occur as soon as Tillinghast was elected governor of the state. Edna admired Lewis and thought she loved him until one day after a talk with Jim Warren she realized the sordid contrast to which she, her father, and Lewis were parties. She told her father that she would not marry Lewis and remained firm in her decision against every argument that her ambitious parent offered. From that moment Warren battled for two loves—the love of a woman and the love of truth.

Lewis, behind a smiling face, plotted Warren's undoing. Bribes came from every source. Marked bills, stocks and bonds were lavished by the clique upon the supposed unsuspecting assemblyman. At last they thought the trap ready to spring. He was arested. He trembled not but unafraid played the last card of his high hand. He calmly led his captors to the vaults of the National Bank and there neatly docketed each in its separate envelope under seal of the bank were the bribes untouched together with the names of the givers and evidence that sent many of them to prison cells. The newspapers went wild. Jim Warren played the game and he was the man of the hour.

Weeks later when the state convention had just gone wild over the nomination of Warren for governor, he and Edna were talking. "I think," said Edna, "that as long as I can't be the daughter of the governor, that I will be far happier as the governor's wife."

APEX.

THE LAST ROUND.—Captain Jack Fordyce, a young army officer and a fine fighter, wins the army middleweight championship. In his dressing room he receives a letter from his sweetheart, Mary Mollet, asking him to dine with her that evening. Colonel Mollet, Mary's father, is in the grip of Ralph Morton, a money lender, and receives a letter from him advising him that a bill for $10,000 is due that day, and that he is coming down to talk the matter over. Just as dinner is announced, Morton is ushered in. The Colonel invites him to dinner, and during the meal, Morton takes no pain to disguise the admiration he feels for Mary, and Jack has a hard struggle to keep his temper. After the meal, the Colonel begs to be left alone with Morton to talk over a little business, and Morton tells him that the bill must be met, or he will foreclose, thus ruining his old victim. The Colonel pleads for a little more time in which to find the money. Morton thinks for a while, then drawing the Colonel to the window, points to where, in the garden, Jack and Mary are walking, and tells him that if he will persuade his daughter to marry him, he will drop the bill; if not, he will foreclose immediately.

Next day, the Colonel, preferring death rather than to force his daughter into a marriage with Morton, is about to shoot himself, when Mary bursts into the room. She hears her father's story with horror. In her bedroom, after a mental struggle with herself, she resolves to marry Morton. She writes a pitiful note to Jack telling him that circumstances have arisen which make it impossible for her to marry him. On the third day, Morton arrives for his answer, and Mary informs him that she will marry him to save her father's name. That afternoon Mary meets Jack and tells him that $10,000 alone can save her from the embraces of Morton.

A few days later Jack receives a letter from his trainer to the effect that he has discovered a good middleweight. Jack goes down to the trainer's quarters, and meets Jim Connor, who is indeed a discovery. That night at the club, Morton, who is also interested in boxing, boasts that he has found a man whom he will back for any amount to beat all comers. Jack is taunted into finding a man, and also makes a bet, which, if he wins, will clear off the Colonel's debt, and save Mary from Morton. Jim Connor is engaged by Jack to fight against Morton's man, and enters into training. A few days before the event, Morton hears of Jack's discovery, and fearing for his man, determines to see how things stand. He goes to where Jim Connor is training, and finds that his worst fears are realized—his man is the inferior of the two. He tries to bribe him, but is roughly handled, then he resorts to treachery, and by that means disables him. On the morning of the fight, Jack receives a wire telling him of Jim's disablement. For a moment he is stunned, then he resolves to enter the ring himself.

At the club all is excitement. Morton's man is in the ring, but neither Jack nor his man have yet arrived. At last Jack enters in fighting kit. He explains to the astonished members that as he did not name his man, he himself is at liberty to defend the bet. With that, he springs into the ring, and the fight commences. Jack is in the ring fighting for all his worth, for the man against him is no mean opponent. Finally, in the tenth round, Morton's man is knocked out. Then follows the discomfiture of Morton; he is accused of murderous assault by Jim. The clearing of the Colonel's debt closes the picture with Mary clasped in the arms of Captain Jack.

PARAMOUNT.

THE CAPRICES OF KITTY (Bosworth).—Katherine Bradley, known as "Kit," is an orphan and heiress. At an early age she is placed in a fashionable and select seminary for young women. Kit, by means of her fascinating daring, her unlimited cash, and her lovable personality, enlists the cooperation of all the girls in any affair which she undertakes. She so impresses the principal of the school with her open-heartedness that she is given permission to drive her car from four to five o'clock each day. The story opens on the day of the annual play given by the young women of Miss Smythe's Select Seminary. The question passes from mouth to mouth, "Where's Kit Brauley? She's our leading man." A search is instituted which results in finding a note in Kit's room saying that she has taken her car out for a drive. The principal is horrified that her charge should be out without a chaperon, and determines that such an action shall not be repeated.

In the meantime, Kit, speeding along the country roads far from home, has an accident. A tire is blown. Kit is perplexed! Then a handsome young man comes along and offers assistance. She accepts it, and promises to meet him on the next afternoon. This arrangement is not carried out quite as Kit planned. Arriving at school very late in the evening, she finds it necessary to enter through an open window. Quickly slipping into a kimono to cover her street clothes and getting into bed, Kit faces an indignant principal who enters her room, with a story of a nerve-racking toothache which keeps her awake. The next afternoon when Kit would take her usual spin, Miss Smythe reminds her that she must take a chaperon. Kit takes her, but makes the ride so hazardous that the chaperon, when told that the car is not the kind that can go slowly, is glad to be left by the wayside, while "Kit" takes a spin and returns for her.

Kit keeps her tryst. Among the trees she and Cameron enjoy a picnic luncheon, but while this meal is in progress a passing tramp sees Kit's classy new roadster, likes it, and takes it. Cameron takes her in his car and on the wayside they pick up the outraged chaperon, who believes not a word of the little story and hurries the culprit to Kit's guardian. To save herself, Kit announces that she is engaged to the artist, and this is confirmed by Cameron. Brought before the guardian, he recognizes in Cameron an old time friend, gives his consent, and after reciting a passage from the will of Kit's father that her fiance must not see her for six months after the engagement, disappears in time for Kit and Cameron to become really and truly engaged.

The idea of not seeing her newly found fiancee for six months, is not to Kit's liking; besides, she is just a bit jealous—for he is an artist. So Kit persuades her guardian to take her to a performance of Elsie Janis in "The Fair Co-Ed." From the production she obtains an inspiration that determines her future course of action. Kit changes clothes with a servant and enters Cameron's studio as a slavey. Toddling back and forth in the performance of her menial duties of serving and dusting, she keeps an eye on Cameron and notes those who are constantly coming and going. They are stylish; they are beautiful; they are cultured. Then, too, there is in the studio a fascinating blonde model. Kit must change her tactics and be some or all of these things. She will be beautiful. For surely he, with his artistic temperament and taste, will most appreciate that quality! She, too, will be a model! As Carlotta, the Queen of Italian beauties, she agrees to pose for Cameron. And then—just for the sheer joy of it, and because in Miss Smythe's select school she had learned the art as "leading man," Kit arrayed herself in all the paraphernalia of an up-to-the-minute "chap." She visits the studio and by flashing unlimited coin and even boasting about the large sums she has "on" her, Kit proceeds to win the affections of the beautiful blonde who has been flirting with Cameron. Cameron has seen through the little disguises all the while, but now that he is confronted by a "man," he feels licensed to treat him as a man. He smokes a vicious cigar, blows smoke in Kit's face, and presses her to drink with him. This is too much! She will reveal her identity at once, will or no will.

"Guardy," passing Cameron's studio, recognizes Kit's car standing outside, and without ceremony enters and stands behind the young couple as Kit commences to reveal to Cameron her real identity. He sees the lay of the land and makes to them an unexpected and startling disclosure. There probably never was such a wedding! What an assembling of rarely beautiful girls and brave courtly men; a canopy of unflecked blue, mountains standing black against the sky and extending off into misty nothingness and great stretches of green and flowers. Kitty was at last married to Cameron.

DAVID HARUM (Famous Players).—David Harum, country banker, horse trader, and philosopher, lives comfortably, if not extravagantly, with his sister Polly, familiarly known as "Aunt Polly" to her host of admirers, in a little rural village of central New York. On account of his oddities and gruffness, he enjoys the reputation of a grouchy miser, but is in reality a philanthropist, who will not have his charities known. He is being systematically robbed, cheated and insulted by his bookkeeper, Chet Timson, so David writes his friend, General Wolsey, in the city, to send him an honest young man, who can stand his odd ways, to clerk for him, and keep books in Chief Timson's place. The general replies that he is sending him a young man who has recently lost his father and fortune, John Lennox, who should come up to David's demands, and David gives Chet notice to leave. Chet is furious, and when John arrives, posts him before hand, as to David's rough and unbearable nature, his "sharp" practices in horse trading, and his stinginess in money matters. But John takes the railings of the surly ex-clerk with a grain of salt, and he and the eccentric David become great friends, John eventually being persuaded to come from the dilapidated hotel to David's home, where Aunt Polly hovers over him and mothers him to her heart's content. Some weeks before coming to the little village, John had met, and fallen in love with a pretty young heiress, Mary Blake, but, feeling that he is not her equal in wealth, John does not dare follow up his little romance. Mary determines to win independence and make her own living, and asks the General to help her get a position. The General speaks to David Harum with the result that Mary becomes the new "school-marm" in his home town, and John and Mary meet again, to David's delight, when he finds they are old friends. Their romance ripens into an engagement, when the envious Chief Timson, who has been meddling with counterfeit bills, plots to ruin John, and nearly does so. The crime of counterfeiting is thrown upon John, to whom all circumstantial evidence points as the criminal, when David happens to overhear the real crooks plotting, and steps in to take a hand in the affair. Just as a vengeful crowd of citizens are surrounding the jail in which John is imprisoned, David comes up with Chet, from whom he compels a confession, and John is freed, regaining at once his liberty and love. David celebrates his success as detective and match-maker by giving a poor widow back her mortgage on the home she supposes forfeited, and treating his favorite horse to an extra currying and a fine dinner of oats.

THE FAIRY AND THE WAIF (Frohman Amusement Corp.—Five Parts).—Viola Drayton wants to be a real fairy for she is a pretty girl and the fairy's dress makes her look even prettier. Her father, Colonel Drayton, is suddenly called to the European war, and he entrusts his daughter to the care of friends, Mr. and Mrs. Nevinson, placing with them a check for $30,000 to be invested for the benefit of the girl.

At this time Nevinson is commercially embarrassed. Shortly after Colonel Drayton's arrival in Europe, news comes that he has been killed in battle. Nevinson appropriates Viola Drayton's money, but this does not prevent him from failing in business and his wife is obliged to take in boarders to pay expenses. The girl's position in the household becomes intolerable and she runs away and gets a position in a theater, where she finds that her job as a fairy is a hard one. In her despair she leaves the theater and meets a waif who takes her for a real fairy, as she is still wearing her stage dress. Meanwhile, news comes that her father has not been killed. He returns to New York and a reward is offered for the recovery of his lost daughter. A policeman sees this offer and, recognizing the girl from the published description, restores her to her father.

SALAMBO (Salambo Corp.—Six Parts).—The story relates how Salambo, daughter of Amilcar, ruler of Carthage, and Priestess of Tanit, is the keeper of the Sacred Veil "on which human eyes must not gaze." She falls in love with Matho, a slave, who becomes the leader of a band of mercenaries, fighting for Carthage against Rome. Matho steals the sacred veil and Salambo is ordered by the priests to reclaim it. The lovers meet in Matho's tent and Salambo recovers the sacred veil. Matho is made a prisoner by the Carthaginians through the treachery of Narr Havas, who is rewarded by Amilcar for his treachery by the hand of his daughter, Salambo. Matho escapes from prison and death, and the Oracle of Tanit is made to declare, by the instrumentality of Spendius, Matho's faithful slave, that Matho is acceptable to the God and one day shall govern Carthage. Salambo, who has protested against her marriage to Narr Havas, whom she does not love, is thereupon given by Amilcar, her father, to Matho and the marriage ceremony is celebrated with much pomp.

PAGES FROM LIFE (Four Parts).—Fanny, an orphan, drifted with the flotsam and jetsam upon the highways and by-ways of the world. Hers was an affectionate nature. When she grew old enough to love she wasted the riches of her heart on Tony, a worthless scoundrel. He forced her into the underworld. Though she mingled with vile and wretched creatures she remained pure in heart. One day the police raided a den to which her husband had dragged her. She was arrested and cast into prison. At the moment when her degradation seemed to be accomplished a ray of sunshine broke through the bars of her prison. The sentinel who stood on guard in the front of the prison had seen her and had been attracted by her look of sweet patience and suffering. When she regained her liberty, she quickly found employment and a strong love for the sentinel, whom she had met after her release, grew up in her heart. The feeling was deeply reciprocated. Fanny resisted the impulse of this love. She remembered that she was married, although her husband was a worthless scoundrel. One day as she was bringing the work she had done at home to the shop of her employer, she was seen by her husband. He followed her to her room and then asserted his legal rights. He compelled her to live with him, and a child was born to her.

She did not know of the plans of her husband, and soon she learned she was to be a spy and that some military men had paid her husband to obtain plans of certain fortifications. She was forced to go in an automobile with her husband and his friends and obtain the plans. Imagine her surprise and horror when she found that the officer commanding the fort was none other than the soldier whom she had loved. What joy and sorrow mingled in their hearts when they recognized each other, after so many years. Outside the fort was the automobile in which her husband, his confederates and her child were waiting. For a moment the officer left the room. Fanny felt conflicting emotions. As she gazed down the road she saw her child. They threatened to take the child away from her if she failed to get the plans. The mother's fear and love conquered. She stole the plans, but before she could conceal them the officer returned and discovered what he must have considered an act of shameless perfidy. She was tried and condemned. On her deathbed she handed a last message to the sister in charge. From this last message the story of this picture has been taken.

RUNAWAY JUNE (Episode 8—Two Reels—March 3).—The taxi, in which June and Mrs. Villard were escaping kept steadily ahead of Cunningham's car. Suddenly the conspirators saw it plunge across a sidewalk and down a steep embankment. They speeded to overtake the demolished machine. Blye and Cunningham went to the rescue of June. Edwards and Tommy Thomas helped Mrs. Villard. Both women were unconscious and were carried to a sanitarium, where a Dr. Remert took them in charge. When June recovered she found a confidante in Mary, the head nurse. Finding that she was suffering mainly from shock, her spirits revived, began to talk with the nurse about the possibility of her entering Mary's vocation. Dr. Remert approved and promised to speak to the chief about June. It developed that "the chief" was none other than Gilbert Blye. June refused to have anything to do with the hospital and was persuaded to return home with Mrs. Villard, as her companion.

Meanwhile, Ned's detective, Burton, had been putting in some good work. He had traced Blye to his club; seen him in conference with Mr. Villard, who suddenly returned to New York, and the result was that on the evening the Villard party was motoring home Ned Warner lay in wait near the estate. Just as he would have intercepted the automobile in which rode Blye, June, Mrs. Villard and the others, two pairs of strong arms reached out and seized him. The motor rushed past.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode 12—Two Parts—"The Blood Crystals").—Wong Sin, a Chinese adventurer, decides to recoup his fortune by playing on the credulity of Elaine Dodge, the daughter and only heiress of the late Taylor Dodge, slain by the Clutching Hand. He gets in touch with Mary Carson, a social outcast, and together they hatch a plan for blackmailing Elaine. Through Mary, Elaine becomes interested in the Belgian Relief Committee, and accepts an invitation from a society leader to become one of the helpers. Elaine and Mary arrive at Wong Sin's apartment, and Mary discovers (after all the doors are locked) that they are not in Mrs. Belmont's rooms. Mary simulates as much dread as Elaine, whose fear is inspired by the strange Orientalism of the place. Wong Sin approaches Mary, who faints with fear and is carried out. Elaine, cornered, and with worse than death as the price of her life, snatches up a dagger close at hand and plunges it into the heart of the heathen. His secretary, far from holding the girls for the murder, urges them to escape, and they do so.

As soon as they go, Wong Sin, a crafty smile on his usually inscrutable face, rises, flicks the dust from his clothes, and looks pleased with the plausible effect of his trick dagger and bag of dog's blood. He is interrupted by the entrance of the Clutching Hand, who informs him that any trespassing on his rights to hound Elaine Dodge will meet his disfavor. Wong Sin, cowed by his sinister visitor, discloses his plans to the master criminal who, for a share in the profits, promises his co-operation. Elaine is again visited by Mary Carson, who explains that for $10,000 cash the secretary will agree to do away with the evidence. A scientific analysis of the blood crystals on Elaine's handkerchief shows Kennedy that the blood was not that of a human. He advises Elaine to go to the designated hotel with the indemnity. She does so, Kennedy and Jameson following. A desperate and intense battle of wits follows, when Wong Sin discovers the presence of the detectives in the hotel. With the aid of the detecta-scope, enabling him to see through the wall of his room into the one in which Elaine is transferring the money to Mary Carson, and with the further aid of the telautograph, enabling him to intercept the Carson woman on her way out of the hotel, the scientific detective manages to defeat the well-laid plans of the conspirators, and to regain Elaine's favor.

OF THE BEST ADVERTISED PICTURE IN AMERICA

A PLAY FULL OF THRILLS AND DARING ESCAPADES

See Special Review, Page 842, Moving Picture World, Issue of Feb. 6th

This picture has been advertised directly to every moving picture theatre in the United States. We have over a thousand letters from theatres asking us where and of whom this feature can be rented. 4,600 newspapers have carried news stories on the thrilling feats portrayed in this remarkable production.

Extract from NEW YORK SUNDAY AMERICAN, Jan. 24th, 1915:

"* * * pursued by detectives, he climbs a telegraph pole and makes his way, hand over hand, along the wires until he reaches a 'tell-tale,' then hangs on the swinging 'tell-tale' and drops onto a fast moving express train."

Extract from NEW YORK SUN, Jan. 6th, 1915:

"To escape the detective, Dare-Devil McPhee makes a jump for life from a cliff 100 feet high into the Harlem River."

REMBUSCH SCREEN TALKS

By F. J.

My business, my hobby, my ambition, is making the best Motion Picture Projection Screens. I am called the greatest expert on screens in the world.

Ten years of my life have been continually devoted to the screen problem. Experiments by the thousands on glass, wood, leather, cloth, gold, silver, aluminum, copper, brass, on the wall and in the air, have been made by me in my endeavor to improve my screens.

My factory is the only one on earth devoted to making all kinds of Projection Screens. I make the world-famous Rembusch Glass Mirror Screen which patent is the only one that the Courts in the United States have ever sustained. I make cloth screens of every variety, including every screen made, besides all are made under my personal supervision.

The screen should fit the house. Send for my literature. No matter what screen trouble you have had I can remedy it.

Look straight ahead from your lamphouse. 90% of the poor pictures is screen trouble. Leave your troubles to me and they will end there.

SCREEN SPECIALTIES

GLASS MIRROR SCREEN (The Screen De Luxe). GOLDFIBRE. SILVERFIBRE. In seamless cloth. (Perfectly even, no clouds, can be washed with soap and water, can be put out of doors, wear like steel) Cheap cloth screen MIRROR-CLOTH, WHITE OPAQUE Framed, Rollers or Stretchers.

GLASS REAR PROJECTION SCREENS. DAYLIGHT OUT-OF-DOORS OUTFITS.

Address, MIRROR SCREEN COMPANY, F. J. REMBUSCH, President SHELBYVILLE, INDIANA

By the way, if you need any nice plate glass mirrors for your lobby I want a chance to give you prices. I can make you a Mirror as big as the side of your house. I make the biggest mirrors in the world. I can do this because my Glass Mirror Screen is the largest Glass Plate in the world.

A FAIR WARNING

ALL MANUFACTURERS, DEALERS, EXHIBITORS—NOTE!

Patent No. 890,101 issued June 9th, 1908, to A. L. Simpson; Patent No. 1,128,867 issued Feb. 10th, 1915, to J. H. Genter, are conceded basic patents on metalized screens.
The law governing patent infringers is well known. A dealer or exhibitor is just as liable as a manufacturer. Infringers will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

THE WONDERFUL RESULTS AND SUCCESS OF

have caused many unreliable persons to manufacture imitations of this world's famous screen under misleading names. They got the exhibitor's money, stung him good. You as an exhibitor and reader of the different trade periodicals have read their alluring ads during the past six years.

How many are still manufacturing screens under their original names? Note—is it not a fact that every few weeks a new screen (?) is advertised?

Now, to protect all exhibitors against imitations as well as ourselves, we will begin proceedings against infringers.

Mirroroide is manufactured under the above patents, is made in the largest factory of its kind in the world, by a corporation with ample capital and resources. Under the original name and by the same firm since 1909. Every screen is sold under a positive 5-year guarantee.

Get our large free samples in pale gold, silver white and silver flesh. Test against any screen on earth. Get in line with the 8,492 satisfied Mirroroide users.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

Speed Controller Company, Inc.,
257 William Street,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:-

In accordance with your suggestion we give you herewith a statement taken from our report No.19346 giving the results of a test which was conducted at these Laboratories on two arc lamps, having identical houses known as "Powers 6-A" houses, and using cored carbon rods, 3/4 inch for the positives and 5/8 inch for the negatives. The two lamps were identical in all respects except that one was arranged to be fed by hand and the other by your automatic Arc Controller.

The two machines were run for six hours, the automatic machine taking care of its own feed while the other machine was hand-fed by an experienced operator. At the end of the run our instruments showed that the automatically fed arc had consumed 34.8 kilowatt hours of electrical energy while the hand-fed machine had consumed 37.3 kilowatt hours of electrical energy. In other words, the hand-fed machine used 2.5 kilowatt hours more electricity in a six-hour run than the machine-fed arc. This represents a saving in favor of the machine-fed arc of slightly more than 7 per cent.

The complete record and data of this test is given in our report No.19346.

Yours very truly,

Engineer in Charge,
Electrical Laboratory.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

A Personal Message to Motion Picture Exhibitors

By Edwin Thanhouser

I am back where you knew me for years—at the head of the Thanhouser Film Corporation of New Rochelle, New York, which I founded in 1908.

After three years of travel and study abroad, the men who bought out my interest in the studio I started persuaded me to return.

Naturally, it will be some little time before the pictures bearing my personal indorsement will be released.

In the meantime, I request that my friends recall the reputation which the Thanhouser productions enjoyed during the period from 1908 until 1912, when I was personally in charge.

I am a showman and know your needs; I am a producer and will meet your needs; I am a guarantee against unrest among your patrons.

I never cheated a negative, I put into a picture every dollar necessary to make it a great picture.

I am an exponent of the natural length film. I thus give you strength of story, strength of production.

I promise you the best motion pictures that can be produced—quality in every particular.

I will announce later when these pictures bearing my name will be released.

Next week I will tell you of some specific changes that will make for better quality, better satisfaction, and better relationship between yourselves and the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 8

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

The Woman's Home Companion, with a circulation second only to the Ladies' Home Journal, started a movement for better films in their March issue.

The first article is a strong appeal to mothers, teachers, etc., advising them and their children to attend the theatres that show the better grade of photoplays AND MENTIONING A LIST OF 40 FEATURE PHOTOPLAYS WHICH THEY RECOMMEND AS THE BEST TYPE OF PHOTOPLAY.

Four of this list, or 10%, are WORLD FILM FEATURES. Our nearest schedule competitor has only three films recommended.

Here is proof, from an absolutely unbiased source, that what we say is true—THAT WORLD FILM FEATURES GIVE YOU THE LARGEST PERCENTAGE OF DESIRABLE, AND SUCCESSFUL PLAYS.

The way to build up your clientele for good photoplays is to run and advertise a brand of features which will give your theatre a reputation and an identity in your locality as THE theatre that runs the best features made.

Here is a letter from Chattanooga, Tenn., that will give you further proof of the character of World Film Features.

World Film Corporation,
130 West 46th Street, New York City.

Gentlemen:—

On December 11th we ran "LOLA," which, with the possible exception of "THE PIT," is the most beautiful film we have had the pleasure of showing. Some days ago we secured a return booking for this wonderful feature, and yesterday was the day—a comfortable house the first time and an uncomfortably jammed one yesterday.

We take this opportunity also to recommend most highly the services we are securing through your Exchange.

Wishing you every success and assuring you of our earnest efforts to this end in appreciation for the favors you have extended, we are,

Courteously yours,
ALCAZAR THEATRE,
(Signed) F. H. DOWLER, Jr.,
Acting Manager.

Oh yes-

It took some PERSUADING to get America's Highest Salaried Musical Comedy Star

JEFF DE ANGELIS

Into the Movies

Of Course a MOVING UNIVERSAL PICTURES Triumph!

Wake Up, Split-Program Exhibitors! Here's Jeff De Angelis, Broadway's highest salaried musical comedy star, in a screaming two-reel comedy that is released on the regular Universal Weekly Program without extra charge. Why don't you get wise to the fact that the only one, perfect, varied, interesting program in the world is the Universal Program? It includes more big features, more high-class photoplays featuring the most popular stars, than you could ever afford to book (even if you could get them), from anywhere as separate features. Investigate and you will find that this is the truth.

Jeff De Angelis is known throughout the United States as one of the greatest of all musical comedy stars. He can't help being funny. He has made millions of people laugh till they cried. His name is known from coast to coast. If you are not booked for the Universal Program, get a taste of its quality by booking this record-breaking feature for a try-out. You'll find, as 70 per cent. of all Exhibitors have found, that you can always crowd your house with the Universal Program. Outside features that cost you a barrel of money because the producers need the money are unnecessary. The Universal Program gives you a complete, well-balanced show of comedy, comedy-drama, human interest drama, melodrama, stirring Western thrillers, superb scenic spectacles, and the greatest of them all—The Animated Weekly. Get in line. Wire or write your Exchange now. Get busy and begin to pack your house at every performance and then collect the profits that belong to you.

All Serial Booking Records

SMASHED

Shattered---Broken---Surpassed In the Avalanche of Bookings for

THE BLACK BOX

All Due to the Following Reasons:

The story of "THE BLACK BOX" was written by E. Phillips Oppenheim, the highest priced writer of mystery fiction in the entire world;—whose forty novels have been read and enjoyed by countless millions of people, whose name alone insures a supremely thrilling mystery story.

"THE BLACK BOX" serial photoplay was produced under the personal direction of the Dean of Moving Picture Directors—Otis Turner, who possesses a matchless record for the production of some of the world's greatest photoplay successes.

"THE BLACK BOX" serial was staged, filmed and produced at Universal City, Cal., an entire city devoted to nothing but the manufacture of Universal Moving Pictures—so huge, so vast and so enormous in its extent that all the other plants and studios of all other serial manufacturers or photoplay manufacturers in the business could be tucked away in one corner of Universal City and never be noticed.

"THE BLACK BOX" was conceived, brought into being and offered to Exhibitors as the Photoplay Serial Supreme by the greatest power in the moving picture world today—the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, of whom it is rightly said:

WHEN THE UNIVERSAL DOES IT—IT'S HUGE WHEN THE UNIVERSAL SAYS IT—IT'S TRUE

From Maine to California; from Oregon to Florida; from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, the bookings began to swiftly pour in as soon as the release date of this wonderful new serial, "THE BLACK BOX," was announced.

By telephone, by wire and by mail there came a steady stream of bookings; when the complete announcement was made the stream became a torrent, and then a resistless avalanche of orders, that kept the Universal's Exchanges and Booking Forces working like trojans—and this is merely the beginning.

If you, Mr. Exhibitor, have not profited by the Universal's former supreme successes in serial photoplays, here's your chance. Get in touch with your Exchange now, today, tomorrow may be too late. This is an opportunity that no wide-awake Exhibitor can afford to overlook. Wire your Exchange instantly for "THE BLACK BOX," the most fascinating serial photoplay to date.

"THE BLACK BOX" is backed by the Universal's Mighty Helping Hand—the Universal Advertising Service, that has the interest of every Exhibitor at heart, and which planned and executed the greatest Advertising and Publicity Campaign ever known in the history of the trade—all for the benefit of Universal Exhibitors.

It would require pages and pages in this Trade Paper to even show a fractional part of all the bookings for "THE BLACK BOX," in just the United States, alone, but to give you an idea how swiftly this great photoplay has already achieved its success in Greater New York alone, "THE BLACK BOX" was booked weeks in advance of the first episode by all the William Fox Theaters, by the United Booking offices, by Proctor's, by the B. S. Moss Circuit, by Keith's, and a tremendously large list of other wide awake progressive theaters, who understand all of the advantages in a Universal Serial.

Wire your Exchange within the hour.

SELECT FILM BOOKING AGENCY, Inc.

begs to announce a new and progressive policy in the distribution of feature photoplays of unusual magnitude, which, by its scope and individuality, will virtually create a new era in the exploitation of stupendous film attractions.

A systematic campaign has been inaugurated to align the most important theatres of large seating capacity throughout the United States and Canada, equipped to present the most mammoth film productions on an elaborate scale, and for indefinite engagements.

In Brief——

a policy of booking gigantic feature subjects on their individual merits in theatres selected according to their relative importance in their territories.

The first time in the history of motion pictures that a complete organization has been perfected to conduct a national booking system ready to be placed at the instant service of producers of features sufficiently distinctive to warrant extraordinary exploitation.

A TEMPERANCE LESSON (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, March 9. A comedy, featuring Spottiswoode Aitken, showing how a man and his wife came to realize the value of total abstinence in their household.

HER BURIED PAST (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, March 14. A strong dramatic story, not produced quite up to Majestic standard, but holding interest throughout. A girl reporter discovers through a tragedy the secret in a wealthy woman's life and later suppresses the story.

CAUGHT BY THE HANDLE (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, March 14. Fay Tincher in a brand new characterization as the awkward slavey who finally discovers the smuggled diamonds.

THE EMERALD BROOCH (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, March 16. A detective drama with one unusual twist; quite well put on.

THE FORGED TESTAMENT (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, March 21. A society drama, in which the forgery of a will is exposed by the clever discovery of a girl reporter. A fairly good picture.

ETHEL'S DOG GONE LUCK (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, March 21. This is No. 19 of the "Bill" series, and quite up to the average.

In a delightful, Timely Drama of the Continental Spy System

"The Woman Who Dared"

FIVE PARTS

A drama of unusual power, conspicuous for its remarkable qualities of sustained interest and unique situations.

ONE OF THE VERY FINEST DRAMAS WE HAVE EVER OFFERED, featuring a gifted and beautiful woman in the best work of her career.

When the army mobilization plans entrusted to her husband are stolen, she follows the thieving spy through many adventures. One adventure treads upon another in rapid, sparkling sequence, ever heightening the interest, always leaving the final issue shrouded in expectant doubt.

AND THERE ARE THRILLS GALORE for folks who like thrills. The inspiring, sensational race between a flying automobile and a passenger train and the daring ruse of the woman when she penetrates the home of the spy, afford dramatic moments to a story founded more on wit than violence.

The 3-Act Feature---"A THEFT IN THE DARK"

(Released March 26—3000 feet)

A play swift with action and strong in cast, ably supported by the finished Edward Earle and the talented little Viola Dana. Another hard-hitting example of the Edison cut-down policy of piling the action into moments of holding strength and not stringing it out by the foot. A thief in high society who stops not at jewels but steals hearts as well.
